24. The Special Court exercises the power which the Magistrate under Section 167 of the Code of Criminal Procedure exercises in respect of the persons produced before it. A Special Court is not only a trial Court but also the Court which exercises the functions similar to those of the Magistrate, such as remand of the accused, granting of bail, taking cognizance of the crime and so on. The Legislature, aware of this special function which the Special Court performs, realised that the Special Court must also exercise the powers of granting bail in the manner a Magistrate does under Section 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. A logical step which the Legislature took was to enact Section 37 of the N.D.P.S. Act and curtail the powers of the Special Court in the matter of grant of bail. Although the Special Court generally exercises the powers of the Sessions Court, its power to grant bail has been so curtailed by Section 37(1)(b)(i) and (ii) that it no longer enjoys the power to grant bail under Section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Therefore in reading Section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, so far as the N.D.P.S. Act is concerned, the words "or Court of Sessions" shall be deemed to have been omitted. Thus Section 439 retains the unfettered power of the High Court to grant bail in all cases including the cases under the N.D.P.S. Act. However, having regard to Section 37 and the constitution of the Special Court as the trial Court, the wide power possessed by a Court of Sessions under Section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure must be construed to have been taken away from that Court in cases arising out of the N.D.P.S. Act.

25. Section 36A of the N.D.P.S. Act makes it clear that "nothing contained in "this Section" shall affect the special powers of the High Court regarding bail under Section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973". This abundant caution exercised by the Parliament in saving the High Court's power under Section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure assures to the accused the continued access to the seat of Justice. But Section 36A(3) has employed the words "anything contained in this Section" and not "anything contained in this Act" or "anything contained in Section 37". It is, therefore urged on behalf of the Prosecution that application of Section 37 to the High Court is not excluded.

The argument stems from a misreading of the scope of Sections 36 and 36A of the N.D.P.S. Act. Section 36A, inter alia, empowers the Special Court to exercise. in relation to the person in custody forwarded to it by the Magistrate, the same powers which a Magistrate may exercise under Section 167 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Magistrate and therefore the Special Court has the power to authorise the detention of the accused in custody. The Special Court in exercise of its power under Section 167 of the Code of Criminal Procedure may authorise such detention in custody. The Parliament, thought it necessary to caution that such detention by the Special Court shall not be construed as limiting the High Court's power under Section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is in this context that the words "nothing in this Section" have been used in Section 36A(3) of the N.D.P.S. Act. The perspective of the words "in this Section" will be clear when one considers the exercise of the power of detention under Section 167 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. At the stage where the Special Court remands the accused into custody, the High Court may, in exercise of its power under Section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, release the accused on bail. The question of releasing the accused on bail arises only when the Special Court authorises his detention before the trial.

Therefore, it follows that Section 36A(3) deliberately, advisedly and rightly employs the words "nothing contained in this Section". Section 37 limits the powers of the Special Court to grant bail in the circumstances stated therein. The legislature by the very nature of its functions could not have foreseen all the cases which fall outside the categories stated in Section 31(1)(b) of the N.D.P.S. Act. The Special Court will naturally authorise the detention of the accused whose case falls outside the limits of Section 37(1)(b). If it releases the accused on bail on being satisfied that there are no reasonable grounds for believing that he is guilty, there is no question of exercising powers under Section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The only place where the Parliament could have enacted the saving of the High Court's power under Section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is Section 36A. There is nothing in the words "in this Section" which limits the High Court's power under Section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by the considerations specified in Section 37(b) of the N.D.P.S. Act.

26. My conclusion is that the High Court's power to release the accused suspected of having committed an offence under the N.D.P.S. Act is not limited by Section 37 of this Act but is governed by Section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The summary of the reasons for this conclusion is as under :-

"The Court" referred to in Section 37 of the N.D.P.S. Act, being a legislative substitute for the "Magistrate of the First Class" occurring in the repealed Section 36 is not intended to include the High Court. Secondly, the Parliament has identified the Special Court with the Court of the Magistrate whose power to grant bail is restricted under S.437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The restriction of the power of release on bail created by Sec. 37 of the N.D.P.S. Act being similar to that under Section 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Parliament did not intend to include High Court within the words "Special Court". Thirdly, S.37(2) of the N.D.P.S. Act has conceived the limitations on granting bail specified in Section 37(1)(b), as "in addition to the limitations under the Code of Criminal Procedure". Therefore, in the Parliament's conception. "the Court" is the Court whose power to grant bail is limited by the Code of Criminal Procedure. The High Court, not being a Court of such restricted power to grant bail, is not "the Court" conceived by Section 37 of the N.D.P.S. Act. Fourthly, the construction of the words "the Court" used in Section 37 of the N.D.P.S. Act deprives the High Court of its established jurisdiction. There are no words in the N.D.P.S. Act which bring out the intention to take away the jurisdiction of the High Court under Section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

I.P.C. 302, 201 r/w 34 - Criminal P.C. (2 of 1974), S.167(2), S.173 and S.2(c) - CHARGE SHEET - INVESTIGATION - BAIL - Charge sheet under S.173 can be filed only after completion of investigation of case - Case involving several cognizable offences- I.P.C. 302, 201 r/w 34 - Investigator filing first charge-sheet relating to some of offences before expiry of 90 days with reference that opinion of expert is awaiting - Second charge-sheet relating to remaining offences filed after expiry of 90 days - Investigation of case must be taken as completed when second-charge-sheet was filed - Since it was completed after 90 days, accused were entitled to bail under S.167 (2) Proviso(a) (i). (Bail - Delay in investigation and filing charge-sheet).

The provisions in Chap. XII. relating to power of police to investigate indicate that the investigation is to be of a case which would mean all the offences involved therein. Therefore, when S.173, speaks of completion of investigation, it must ordinarily be taken to refer to completion of investigation of all the facts and circumstances relating to the case whether it involves one offence or plurality of offences. Therefore, a final report or charge-sheet under S.173, can be filed only after completion of investigation in the case relating to all the offences arising in the case. The investigation of the case does not end with the collection of evidence but includes the formation of opinion by the investigator as to whether on the evidence collected there is a case to place the accused before a Court for trial and if so taking the necessary steps for the same by filing a charge-sheet. Therefore, where in a case involving several cognizable offences the first charge-sheet against the accused persons in respect of some of the offences was filed by the investigator within the period of 90 days, referred to in S.167 (2) Proviso (a) (i) and the second charge-sheet relating to the remaining offences was filed after the expiry of 90 days on the ground that the investigator had been awaiting expert legal opinion as to whether a charge would lie in respect of those offences, it must be taken that the investigation was not complete on the date of filing of the first charge-sheet and in was complete only when the second charge-sheet was filed. Thus, since the investigation was completed only after the expiry of 90 days, the accused were entitled to be released on bail under S.167 (2) Proviso (a) (i). The defective investigation and filing of the charge-sheet would not, however, vitiate the proceedings before the Magistrate. The proceedings would only be irregular and the irregularity was cured when the Magistrate acting on the second charge-sheet clubbed it with the first for the purpose of committal of the case to the Sessions Court. Judgement

ORDER :- Revision petitioners are accused in R. C. 3 of 1982 of the CBI/SPE, New Delhi arising from the death, by gunshot wounds, of George Soman, Sub-Inspector of Police, Panur Police Station. They were arrested on 11-11-1983. Their request for bail was repeatedly turned down by various courts. Period of 90 days as contemplated in Proviso (a) (i) to S.167 (2) of the Cr. P. C. (for short 'the Code') was over on 9-2-1984. The investigator filed a Final Report or charge-sheet for offences under S.120B read with S.302 I. P. C. and S.302 I. P. C. read with S.34 I. P. C. on 7-2-1984 before the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Ernakulam. An additional charge-sheet for offences under S.120B read with S.201 I. P. C. and S.201 I. P. C. read with S.34 I. P. C. was filed on 15-2-1984. Meanwhile the accused filed Cri. M. P. 461 of 1984 seeking bail under Proviso (a) (i) to Sec. 167 (2) of the Code pleading that no valid charge-sheet had been filed within 90 days. This contention was overruled and the petition was dismissed by the learned Chief Judicial Magistrate. The legality and propriety of this order is challenged in this revision petition.

2. Learned counsel for the revision petitioners would contend that the Code does not contemplate piecemeal investigation and incomplete charge-sheet, that Sec. 173 contemplates only the filing of charge-sheet after completion of investigation of the case, and where several offences are involved in a case, a valid charge-sheet could be laid only after investigation and formation of opinion regarding all the offences is complete, that in the first charge-sheet the investigator stated that investigation was proceeding and an additional charge-sheet would be laid and this would clearly show that when the first charge-sheet was laid investigation was incomplete. Thus, learned counsel would contend that the first charge-sheet filed on 7-2-1984 was a charge-sheet filed without completing the investigation and was as such invalid and therefore detention after a period of 90 days would be illegal and accused are entitled to bail as a matter of right. Learned counsel drew a distinction between an "offence" and a "case". According to him, what is contemplated is completion of investigation of the "case" which may involve several offences and investigation of a case cannot be split up into several investigations or investigation in several stages each relating to one offence. Learned

Public Prosecutor would contend that there is practically no difference between an "offence" and a "case", that, as a matter of fact, investigation was complete before the first charge-sheet was laid, though an erroneous statement was made therein that investigation was proceeding, that the second charge-sheet and the accompanying memo would clearly show that investigation was over before the first charge-sheet was laid. According to learned Public Prosecutor, the investigator could very well have incorporated S.201 I.P.C. in the first charge-sheet but it was postponed awaiting legal opinion. In these circumstances, learned Public Prosecutor would contend that the charge-sheet was valid as investigation was complete before the first charge-sheet. Therefore, the period of detention prior to completion of investigation did not exceed the period of 90 days and as such bail could not be granted in terms of Proviso (a)(i) to S.167(2) of the Code.

3. Chapter V of the Code deals with arrest of persons. S.41(1)(a) authorises a police officer to arrest a person who has been concerned in any cognizable offence without an order from a Magistrate and without a warrant. The procedure for arrest and the steps to be taken are dealt with in Ss. 46 and 47 of the Code. S.56 requires that a police officer making arrest without warrant shall without unnecessary delay and subject to bail provisions take or send the arrested person before the appropriate Magistrate. S.57 states that no police officer shall detain in custody a person without warrant for any period beyond what is reasonable, not exceeding 24 hours in the absence of a special order from a Magistrate under S.167.

4. Chapter XII deals with information to the police and their power to investigate. S.154 requires that oral information relating to commission of a cognizable offence shall be reduced to writing by a police officer. How the information is to be dealt with in relation to "cognizable case" and "non-cognizable case" are dealt with in Ss. 155 and 156. The police officer has to take steps to investigate the facts and circumstances of the "case" and to take measures for the discovery and arrest of the offender. The powers of the police officer in the course of investigation are dealt with under Ss. 160 to 163, 165 and 166. Where any person is arrested and detained in custody and it appears that the investigation cannot be completed within a period of 24 hours fixed by S.57 and there are grounds for believing that the accusation or information is well founded. S.167(1) requires that the investigator shall forthwith transmit to the nearest Judicial Magistrate a copy of the entries in the diary relating to the "case" and forward the accused to such Magistrate. Sub-sec. (2) requires that the Magistrate may from time to time authorise the detention of the accused in appropriate custody for a term not exceeding 15 days in the whole. The proviso authorises detention beyond the period of 15 days but up to a period of 90 days in the case of grave offences and 60 days in the case of other offences where the Magistrate is satisfied that adequate grounds exist for doing so. But under no circumstances shall the Magistrate authorise the detention of the accused in custody pending completion of investigation for a period exceeding 90 days or 60 days as the case may be. This is what the proviso to sub-sec.(2) lays down. It further states that on the expiry of 90 days or 60 days as the case may be, the accused shall be released on bail if he is prepared to and does furnish bail, and every person released on bail under this sub-section shall be deemed to be so released under the provisions of Chapter XXXIII of the Code for the purposes of that Chapter. Release of the accused when evidence is deficient is contemplated in S.169. S.170 deals with cases where evidence is sufficient. If upon an investigation under this Chapter, it appears to the investigator that there is sufficient evidence or reasonable ground as aforesaid, he shall forward the accused under custody to the appropriate Magistrate or if the offence is bailable and the accused is able to give security, shall take security from him to appear before the Magistrate. S.172 deals with diary of proceedings and investigation and uses the expression "Police diaries of a case".

5. S.173 deals with report of a police officer on completion of investigation. Sub-sec.(1) says that every investigation under the Chapter shall be completed without unnecessary delay. Sub-sec.(2) states that as soon as investigation is completed the investigator shall forward to the appropriate Magistrate a report in the prescribed form stating the names of parties, the nature of the information, the names of the persons who appear to be acquainted with the circumstances of the case, whether any offence appears to have been committed, and if so, by whom, whether any accused has been arrested, whether he has been released on his bond and, if so, whether with or without sureties and whether he has been forwarded in custody under S.170. Under sub-sec. (3), it is open to the appropriate superior police officer to direct the investigator to make further investigation. Sub-sec.(8) declares that nothing in the section shall preclude further investigation in respect of an offence after a report under sub-sec.(2) has been forwarded to the Magistrate. Where upon such investigation the investigator obtains further evidence, he shall forward to the Magistrate a further report or reports regarding such evidence in the prescribed form. The provisions of sub-secs.(2) to (6) shall as far as may be applied in relation to such report or reports as they apply in relation to a report forwarded under sub-sec.(2).

6. Chapter XIV deals with conditions requisite for initiation of proceedings. S.190 deals with cognizance of offences by Magistrate. Subject to the provisions of the Chapter, the appropriate Magistrate may take cognizance of any offences under any one of the three circumstances enumerated in cls. (a), (b) and (c) of sub-sec. (1). They are, receipt of a complaint of facts which constitutes such offence a police report of such facts and information received from any person other than a police officer or upon his own knowledge that such offence has been committed. One may notice in this connection, the altered definition of police report in the present Code. S.2(r) of the Code defines "police report" as a report forwarded by a police officer to a Magistrate under sub-s. (2) of S.173 of the Code.

7. Chapter XVI deals with commencement of proceedings before Magistrates. Sub-sec. (1) of S.204 states that if in the opinion of a Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence there is sufficient ground for proceeding, he shall issue summons or warrant, as the case may be. Under S.207, the Magistrate shall, without delay, furnish to the accused free of cost copies of the records detailed therein.

8. There is a broad scheme and method underlying the provisions mentioned above. Investigation must commence immediately on receipt of information regarding commission of cognizable offence. A person suspected of or concerned in a cognizable offence can be arrested without warrant. Ordinarily, investigation should be over within 24 hours of the arrest before the expiry of which period the accused has to be produced before the nearest Magistrate. Where it appears that the investigation cannot be completed within this period and the information appears to be well founded, the entries in the case diary must be transmitted immediately to the nearest Magistrate along with the accused.

Detention of the accused may, from time to time, be authorised by the Magistrate for a term not exceeding 15 days in the whole. This would indicate that where investigation cannot be completed within 24 hours of the arrest, the maximum period to be taken for completion of investigation would be 15 days. Of course, in appropriate cases, the period could be extended up to 90 days or 60 days depending on the gravity of the offence involved as contemplated in the proviso to S.167(2). Detention cannot be ordered beyond such extended period. If upon investigation, it appears that there is sufficient evidence, the accused must be forwarded under custody to the appropriate Magistrate in nonbailable cases. Every investigation shall be completed without unnecessary delay and as soon as it is completed, a report in the prescribed form as contemplated in S.173(2) must be forwarded to the appropriate Magistrate. There may be further investigation on the direction of a superior police officer as envisaged in sub-sec. (3) or otherwise as envisaged in sub-sec. (8). In such cases there may be further report or reports, which have to be treated as police reports under S.173(2). Under S.190, a Magistrate can take cognizance upon a police report, that is a report under S.173(2). On taking cognizance the Magistrate can issue process and thereafter undertake certain preliminary functions and then conduct an enquiry or trial, as the case may be.

9. S.2(c) defines cognizable "offence" as an offence for which and cognizable "case" as a case in which, a police officer may, in accordance with the First Schedule or under any other law" for the time being in force, arrest without warrant. S.2(h) defines "investigation" as including all proceedings under the Code for the collection of evidence conducted by a police officer etc. Interpreting the expression "Committal of the Case", a Full Bench of this Court in Natesan v. Peethambharan 1984 Ker LT 116 : (1984 Cri LJ 324), observed "As we understand the expression, it only means 'Case presented to Court and taken to file' and nothing more. The expression 'Case' is not synonymous with occurrence or crime or transaction..... 'Case' only means the case taken on file by the Magistrate on taking cognizance .

So, there could be plurality of cases in regard to the same offence leading to plurality of committal proceedings and orders. The word 'Case' cannot be interpreted in a narrow and technical way. It has to be understood in the general sense of the term....."

10. The expression "case" used in the provisions under examination has to be understood in the general sense and not in a narrow or technical way. The words "offence" and "case" are not synonymous, though an offence always leads to a case and a case would always involve an offence or offences. An occurrence of transaction may involve commission of only one offence; or it may involve several offences. When a police officer receives; information about the commission of a cognizable offence, and records the same, he is said to register a case, sometimes called a Crime Case. "'Case", understood in this general sense means the case before the police officer arising from the information placed before him regarding an occurrence in which an offence or offences are committed. "Case" relates to the transaction of which information is given and not merely one of the offences committed during the course of the transaction.

11. The heading of S.154 is " Information in cognizable cases". The heading of S.155 is "Information as to non-cognizable cases and investigation of such cases." The heading of S.156 is "Police Officer's power to investigate cognizable case". Sub-sec. (3) of S.154, sub-secs. (2) and (4) of S.155, sub-secs. (1) and (2) of S.156, S.157, sub-sec. (1) of S.160, sub-secs. (1) and (2) of S.161 refer to investigation of a "case". S.167 refers to diary relating to the case. This would indicate that investigation is to be of a "case" and riot to be conducted piecemeal with reference to each offence committed in a transaction or occurrence. Investigation is to be of a case, that is, all the facts and circumstances of a case which would mean all the offences involved therein. Therefore, when S.173 speaks of completion of investigation, it must ordinarily be taken to refer to completion of investigation of all the facts and circumstances relating to the case, whether the transaction involves one offence or plurality of offences. I am therefore of opinion that a final report or charge-sheet under S.173 could be filed only after completion of the investigation in the case relating to all the offences arising in the case.

12. In the first charge-sheet filed in this case, the investigator mentioned offences under S.120B I.P.C. read with S.302 I.P.C. as well as S.302 I.P.C. read with S.34 I.P.C. and cited 98 witnesses, 94 documents and 26 material objects. The investigator also stated that additional charge-sheet for offence under S.201 would be laid in a short period as "investigation is proceeding" thereto. This would prima facie show that on the date when the first charge-sheet was laid the investigation in regard to offence under S.201 was not complete and therefore investigation in the case was not complete. About a week later, the additional charge-sheet was filed incorporating S.120B I.P.C. read with S.201 I.P.C. and S.201 I.P.C. read with S.34 I.P.C. No new witness or document or material object was cited along with the additional charge-sheet. On the same day, the investigator submitted a report stating that after submission of the first charge-sheet or final report, he did not conduct any investigation, that he was waiting for expert legal opinion in regard to the offence under S.201 I.P.C. as he surmised that such an offence was made out against the accused and that he was filing additional charge-sheet on the basis of the evidence and the investigation conducted by him prior to the filing of the first charge-sheet. According to the learned Public Prosecutor, the statement in the first charge-sheet that investigation was proceeding was erroneous and the error was corrected in the report presented on 15-2-1984. It is true that even after the additional charge-sheet, the investigator submitted additional list of witnesses. But those witnesses do not appear to have anything to do with the additional charge. Therefore, I am inclined to accept the statement in the report of 15-2-1984 to the effect that the additional charge-sheet was submitted on the basis of the evidence collected prior to the first charge-sheet and no further collection of evidence had been made.

13. Obviously when the investigator stated in the additional charge-sheet that he did not conduct any "investigation" he was referring only to collection of evidence. According to the revision petitioners, investigation does not end with the collection of evidence but would include the formation of opinion also.

14. In H.N. Rishbud v. State of Delhi (AIR 1955 SC 196) : (1955 Cri LJ 526), the Supreme Court was considering the question whether the requirement in the Prevention of Corruption Act that the investigation into offences under the Act shall not be investigated by a police officer below the rank of Deputy Superintendent of Police except with sanction of court was mandatory and the effect of violation of the provision if it was held to be mandatory. The court held that the requirement was mandatory. Investigation in that case was conducted by a police officer below the requisite rank. Sanction of the court was obtained only subsequently. That was after the investigation by the subordinate officer was entirely or mostly completed. Explaining the scope of the expression "investigation", Jagannadhadas, J., speaking for the court, observed :

"Thus, under the Code investigation consists generally of the following steps : (1) Proceeding to the spot, (2) Ascertainment of the facts and circumstances of the case, (3) Discovery and arrest of the suspected offender, (4) Collection of .evidence relating to the commission of the offence which may consist of (a) the examination of various persons (including the accused) and the reduction of their statements into writing, if the officer thinks fit, (b) the search of places or seizure of things considered necessary for the investigation , and to be produced at the trial, and (5) Formation of the opinion as to whether on the material collected there is a case to place the accused before a Magistrate for trial and if so taking the necessary steps for the same by the filing of a charge-sheet under S.173..... It is also clear that the final step in the investigation, viz., the formation of the opinion as to whether or not there is a case to place the accused on trial is to be that of the officer in charge of the police station. There is no provision permitting delegation thereof but only a provision entitling superior officers to supervise or participate under S.551."

(Emphasis supplied)
15. It was argued before the Supreme Court that the legislative policy would be served if the charge-sheet was filed by the authorised officer after forming his own opinion as to whether or not there is a case to place the accused on trial before the court. Rebutting this plea, the court observed :
"There is, however, no reason to think that the policy comprehends within its scope only some and not all the steps involved in the process of investigation which, according to the scheme of the Act have to be conducted by the appropriate investigating officer either directly or when permissible through deputies, but on his responsibility....."
16. Formation of opinion as to whether on the evidence collected there is a case to place accused before a court for trial and if so, taking necessary steps for the same by filing a charge-sheet are part of the process of investigation.
17. On the date of filing the first charge-sheet the investigator was awaiting expert legal opinion on the question whether a charge would lie under S.201 I.P.C. In other words, he had not formed any definite opinion as to whether on the evidence collected there was a case to place the accused before a Magistrate for trial of the particular offence. In this view of the matter, it must follow that "investigation", as understood in law, was not complete on the date of filing of the first charge-sheet. The investigator had not formed any opinion in regard to S.201 I.P.C. and consequently, the "investigation" in the case was not complete when the first charge-sheet was filed. The investigator has no case that the formation of opinion was made in this regard on any particular day after 7-2-1984. It must be taken that "investigation" was complete only with the second charge-sheet. In this view, the original charge-sheet was not a charge-sheet laid after completing of investigation. It is a defective charge-sheet.
18. Remand in custody under S.167 of the Code is to be made before the completion of investigation for the purpose of enabling a proper investigation. Such remand could not be made beyond the period of 90 days as laid down in proviso (a)(i) to S.167(2) of the Code. The completion of the investigation was made only after the expiry of the period of 90 days. Therefore, the accused are entitled to be released on bail if they are prepared to and do furnish bail. Considering the peculiar facts and circumstances of the case, I am of opinion that strict conditions will have to be imposed on release of the accused on bail.
19. This is not to say that taking of cognizance by the learned Magistrate, or the proceedings initiated by him are vitiated or a nullity. The proceedings would only be irregular. The irregularity, if any, has been cured by the learned Magistrate acting on the additional charge-sheet filed after completion of investigation and later clubbing the two committal proceedings. In any event, there has been no prejudice to the accused.
The Supreme Court in H.N. Rishbud's case considered whether and to what extent the trial which follows defective investigation is vitiated. The court observed :
"Now, trial follows cognizance and cognizance is preceded by investigation. This is undoubtedly the basic scheme of the Code in respect of cognizable cases. But it does not necessarily follow that an invalid investigation nullifies the cognizance or trial based thereon. .....
A defect or illegality in investigation, however serious, has no direct bearing on the competence or the procedure relating to cognizance or trial. No doubt a police report which results from an investigation is provided in S.190 Cri. P. C. as the material on which cognizance is taken. But it cannot be maintained that a valid and legal police report is the foundation of the jurisdiction of the Court to take cognizance.....

.... While no doubt in one sense, Cls. (a), (b) and (c) of S.190(1) are conditions requisite for taking of cognizance, it is not possible to say that cognizance on an invalid police report is prohibited and is therefore a nullity. .....
If, therefore, cognizance is in fact taken, on a police report vitiated by the breach of a mandatory provision relating to investigation, there can be no doubt that the result of the trial which follows it cannot be set aside unless the illegality in the investigation can be shown to have brought about a miscarriage of justice.....
(10) It does not follow, however, that the invalidity of the investigation is to be completely ignored by the Court during trial. When the breach of such a mandatory provision is brought to the knowledge of the court at a sufficiently early stage, the Court, while not declining cognizance will have to take the necessary steps to get the illegality cured and the defect rectified, by ordering such re-investigation as the circumstances of an individual case may call for."
20. The case is now pending enquiry, preliminary to committal to Sessions Court. The occurrence took place within the jurisdiction of Tellicherry Sessions Court. According to the prosecution, CBI cases throughout the State have to be dealt with by Chief Judicial Magistrate, Ernakulam and tries by Sessions Court, Ernakulam. There is a controversy between the accused and the prosecution as to whether the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Ernakulam has jurisdiction in the matter or if committal is to be made to Sessions Court, at Ernakulam or at Tellicherry, the Sessions Case is to be tried in the Sessions Court, Ernakulam or Tellicherry. Counsel for the revision petitioners submitted before me that all the contentions challenging the jurisdiction of the courts at Ernakulam are withdrawn. This is a connected O. P. 933/84 filed under Art. 226 of the Constitution by the accused. The O. P. is also being withdrawn. In view of the submissions made, I do not see any difficulty for Chief Judicial Magistrate, Ernakulam to deal with the committal proceedings or to commit the case to Sessions Court at Ernakulam or for the latter to try the Sessions case.
In the result, the Cri. R. P. is disposed of in the following manner :
1. The order passed by the Chief Judicial Magistrate is set aside.
2. It is directed that the petitioners will be released on bail on each of them executing a bond for Rs. 5,000/- and furnishing two solvent sureties in the like amount to the satisfaction of the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Ernakulam.
3. Till the Sessions trial is over, the petitioners shall reside within the limits of Cochin Corporation and report their places of residence to the investigator.
4. They shall not enter the limits of the Cannanore District until trial of the Sessions case is over.
5. They shall not in any way attempt to meet or influence directly or indirectly any of the witnesses cited by the prosecution.
6. They shall report before the investigator or any person in charge of the C.B.I, office at Ernakulam every day at any time between 10 a.m. and 12 noon.

Order accordingly.

JUDGEMENT

ORDER :- Heard Mr. K.K. Mehrish and Mr. S.P. Tyagi, for the petitioners and Mr. S.B. Mathur, Public Prosecutor and perused the relevant papers.

2. These are two bail applications - S.B. Criminal Misc. Bail Applications No. 556/1982 and No. 800/1982 filed by Narayan and 12 others, in which common questions of law and facts arises and so they are decided together by one order.

3. Before dealing with the questions of law involved in these two bail applications, I deem it necessary to state, in brief, the incident which gave rise to the applications. The facts thereof are as follows :-

On April 2, 1981, Suresh Chandra son of Phool Chand Brahmin, resident of Salrea Kalan made a first information report to the police at police station, Chechat. It was alleged in the report that at about 4 p.m. on April 2, 1981, Phool Chand, Narayan, Shri Ram, Badri, Ram Karan and Ram Ratan petitioners accompanied by 20 or 25 Dhakars residents of village Salrea Kalan went to the house of one Kanhaiya Lal having armed themselves with lathis, axes, Gandasis, and Jhapeta and started throwing stones in his house. Thereafter they set fire to his house. Out of fear Kanhaiya Lal and his companions, namely, Shanker, Anand and Kastura ran away from there. Kanhaiya Lal entered the quarter of one Hira Lal and bolted it from inside.

The aforesaid petitioners and their associates followed Kanhaiya Lal to the house of Hira Lal and after breaking the 'Pattis' of the roof of the quarter of Hira Lal, they inflicted several injuries on the bodies of Kanhaiya Lal with lathis, Gandasa and axes. As a result of the severe heating given to Kallhaiya Lal the hands and the feet of the latter were cut and he succumbed to his injuries. The other associates of Kanhaiya Lal, namely, Shanker, Anand and Kastura also were chased by the petitioners who succeeded in catching hold and beating Shri Anand Vallabh, as a result of which the latter died at the spot.

3A. The police registered a criminal case against the petitioners and took usual investigation into the matter. In the course of investigation, Narayan, Ram Ratan, Shri Ram, Phool Chand, Badri, Ram Karan, Kalu, Bhawani Ram, Ram Gopal, Bhawani Ram son of Kanwar Lal and Mangi Lal son of Kanwar Lal were arrested by the police on April 3, 1981, Gopal petitioner son of Mohan Lal was arrested on April 13, 1981. while Mangilal son of Nathu was arrested on May 1, 1981. Apart from these petitioners, 12 others also were taken into custody by the police but they were released on bail by the High Court vide its order dated Sept. 16, passed in S.B. Criminal Misc. Bail Application No. 720 of 1981.

4. The contention of the learned counsel for the petitioners before me is that cognizance of the offence was not taken by the Judicial Magistrate having jurisdiction to try the case or to commit them for trial before the expiry of 90 days and so the petitioners were entitled to be released on bail after the expiry of the said period. In support of their above contention, the learned counsel for the petitioners placed reliance on Khinvdan v. State of Rajasthan (1975 WLN 132), Babubhai Parshottamdas v. State of Gujarat (1982 Cri LJ 284) : (AIR 1982 NOC 72) (Guj) (FB), Beni Madhav v. State of Rajasthan (1982 Raj Cri C 145), Laxmi Brahman v. State (1976 Cri LJ 118), Shabhag v. State of Rajasthan (1982 Raj LR 358) and a few other rulings.

5. The learned Public Prosecutor, on the other hand, contended that the charge-sheet under S.173, Cr. P.C. was filed in the case in the court before the expiry of 90 days after completion of the investigation and so the power of the Judicial Magistrate to release the petitioners on bail under S.167(2A), Cr. P.C. came to an end.

may observe that the cognizance was not taken by the Judicial Magistrate in these two cases prior to July 13, 1981, on which date the Judicial Magistrate passed an order that the charge-sheet filed by the police be registered and the case be fixed for further proceedings on July 27, 1981. Thereafter the case was again adjourned on July 27, 1981 to August 10, 1981. On August 10, 1981, the Judicial Magistrate committed the petitioners and other co-accused to the court or the Sessions Judge, Kota, for trial as it appeared to him that the case was exclusively triable by the Judicial Magistrate. The contention of the Public Prosecutor that the charge-sheet was filed in the court before the expiry of 90 days does not appear to be correct, because what the police did on June 30, 1981, was to file a charge-sheet in the court of the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Kota, who recorded the fact in the order-sheet that challan under Ss.302, 147, 148, 149, 436 and 336, I.P.C. was produced before him by Braham Dutta Tyagi, S. H. O. Chechat against the petitioners.

The Chief Judicial Magistrate after recording this fact ordered that the challan be sent to the Munsiff and Judicial Magistrate, Ramganj Mandi for orders on July 6, 1981. The Chief Judicial Magistrate therefore, could not be said to have taken cognizance of the offences upon police report on June 30, 1981. On July 6, 1981, the Judicial Magistrate, Ramganj Mandi, to whom the charge sheet was sent by the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Kota, did not take cognizance and adjourned the case for orders on July 13, 1981. It was only on July 13, 1981, that he passed an order that the challan be registered and thereafter, as stated earlier, he committed the petitioners to the court of the Sessions Judge, Kota, under the aforesaid offences on Aug. 10, 1981, i.e. much beyond the expiry of 90 days. Consequently, I have no hesitation in holding that after the expiry of 90 days, an absolute right to be released on bail accrued to the petitioners, subject, of course, to the cancellation of the bail; if the requirements of S.437(5), Cr. P.C. were satisfied.

Under S.309(2), Cr. P.C. the Judicial Magistrate no doubt was empowered to remand the petitioners to custody by a warrant after taking cognizance of the offences, but in this case the petitioners were remanded to judicial custody by the Judicial Magistrate without taking cognizance of the offence as indicated above. The mandate of the Legislature as set out in S.167(2), Cr. P.C. could not be flouted or ignored on the ground that after filing of the charge-sheet by the police before the Chief Judicial Magistrate, upon completion of investigation, the power of the Judicial Magistrate to enlarge the accuse on bail under S.167(2A), Cr. P.C. came to an end. In my opinion, once the period of 90 days or 60 days, as the case may be mentioned in S.167(2A), Cr. P.C. expired before taking cognizance of the offences by the court, the petitioners obtained a valuable right to be released on bail and their detention in this case after the expiry of the period of 90 days was clearly illegal.

7. The next question that arises for determination is whether the petitioners are entitled to bail on the ground of their detention having become illegal after the expiry of the period of 90 days in spite of the fact that they have been committed by the Judicial Magistrate to the court of the Sessions Judge, Kota, for trial under the aforesaid Section of the I.P.C. and are in fact facing trial. The learned Public Prosecutor vehemently contended before me that even if defect or illegality has crept in the antecedent detention of the petitioners, it cannot contaminate the order of detention or remand subsequently made by the Additional Sessions Judge after commitment of the case, which is other wise legal and proper. In my opinion, under the New Criminal P.C. if the detention is illegal, it cannot be validated by order of remand subsequently made by the Judicial Magistrate or by Additional Sessions Judge under S.309(2) of the Cri. P.C. In this view of the matter, the Additional Sessions Judge should have accepted the application for bail filed by the petitioners in both the cases and should have released them on bail.

8. Consequently, I accept both the bail applications filed by Narayan, Ram Ratan, Shri Ram, Phool Chand, Badri, Ram Karan, Gopal, Kalu, Bhawani Ram son of Balaji, Ram Gopal, Bhawani Ram son of Shri Hira Lal, Mangi Lal son of Nathu and Mangi Lal son of Kanwar Lal and direct that they be released on bail provided each of them furnishes a personal bond in the amount of Rupees 10,000/-, together with two sureties in the amount of RS. 5000/-, to the satisfaction of the Additional Sessions Judge, Kota, for his appearance in the said court of the Additional Sessions Judge, Kota, on each and every date of hearing of whenever called upon to do so.

Applications allowed.

Judgement

ORDER :- In these two petitions, an important question of law is raised with regard to remand and bail during the course of Police investigation. One petition is filed by the State and another by the father of the deceased to cancel the bail granted to A-1 to A-4 on 3-5-1975 by the Judicial Second Class Magistrate, Chirala.

2. The brief facts leading up to the filing of these two petitions may be stated : A-1 is the wife of the deceased. A-2 is the father of A-1 and A-3 and A-4 are the sons of A-2. A preliminary charge sheet under Section 302 read with Section 34 I.P.C. and 201 read with Section 34 I.P.C. was filed by the Inspector of Police, Crime Branch, C.I.D. Hyderabad on 3-5-1975 in the court of the Judicial Magistrate of Second Class, Chirala. In that charge sheet, it is stated that all the four accused caused the death of the deceased on the night of 5-1-1975 and in order to cause disappearance of the evidence, these four accused with the assistance of some other persons removed the dead body in a cart and threw it in a canal. The dead body was discovered at about 9 or 10 A.M. an the next day. In order to cover up her guilt, A-1 invented a story that the deceased went out for answering calls of nature at about 5 A.M. on 6-1-1975 and thus all the accused put the relations of the deceased on a wrong scene. The then Inspector of Police, Chirala, and the then Sub-Inspector of Police, Inkollu Police Station, became parties to the offence of causing disappearance of evidence of murder by manipulating a false inquest report and registering a case on an incorrect report and they even tried to avoid post-mortem examination. In view of the involvement of the local police the investigation had become difficult and complicated and it could not be completed. Therefore, it was prayed that the accused may be further remanded under Section 309, Criminal Procedure Code pending completion of investigation and submission of the final charge-sheet. It was further stated that a comprehensive charge-sheet would be submitted against all the persons involved in the offences in question after the entire investigation was completed.

3. On the same day the learned Magistrate passed an order releasing A-1 to A-4 on bail. The Inspector, C.B. C.I.D. was directed to complete investigation expeditiously and file a charge-sheet.

4. In his order the learned Magistrate has stated that the preliminary charge-sheet filed on that date was only a simple remand report to secure further remand against A-1 to A-4 under Section 309, Criminal Procedure Code that A-1 to A-4 were in custody under Section 167(2), Criminal Procedure Code since 5-3-1975 till that date i.e., 3-5-1975, i.e., for a total period of 60 days, that under the proviso to Section 167, clause (2), Criminal Procedure Code it is mandatory that the accused should be released after completion of 60 days of detention if they are ready to furnish bail and that the accused were ready to furnish bail. He further held that Section 309 Criminal Procedure Code has no application for, that applies only to enquiry or trial but not to investigation. He also commented that the investigation was being done leisurely and according to the convenience of the investigating officers. Consequently he directed the release of A-1 to A-4 on bail. I am informed that on the same date the accused furnished securities and were released on bail.

5. The learned Public Prosecutor has contended that the order of the learned Magistrate is palpably wrong and he should not have released the accused on bail. According to him under Section 173, Sub-Section (8), Criminal Procedure Code more than one charge sheet could be filed and so under Section 309 read with Explanation (1), Criminal Procedure Code the Magistrate is competent to remand the accused even though they were in custody for more than 60 days under Section 167, Criminal Procedure Code.

6. The petitioner who is the father of the deceased has contended that it is immaterial whether the investigation was completed and a final charge sheet was filed or not under Section 173, Criminal Procedure Code and that Section 309, Criminal Procedure Code confers an independent power upon the Magistrate to remand the accused to the custody of police even though the period of 60 days have elapsed.

7. The learned counsel for the accused has contended that until the investigation is completed, there is no question of filing a final charge sheet and until a final charge-sheet is filed, the Magistrate cannot take cognizance of the case and till then the Magistrate can remand the accused to custody only for a total period of 60 days and if it exceeds, he is bound to release them on bail if they are prepared to and do furnish bail under Section 167, Criminal Procedure Code. He further contended that the provisions of Section 309, Criminal Procedure Code are attracted only after the court has taken cognizance of the offence and in this case since the Magistrate has not taken cognizance of the case, there is no question of invoking the provisions of Section 309, Criminal Procedure Code.

8. In order to appreciate the rival contentions of both the parties it is necessary to briefly refer to the relevant provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973. Here it must be borne in mind that the present proceedings are governed by the Code of Criminal Procedure 1973 Section 167, Criminal Procedure Code appears in Chapter XII which deals with information to Police and their powers to investigate. Section 167, Criminal Procedure Code in so far as it is relevant reads as follows :-

"Section 167(1) :- Whenever any person is arrested and detained in custody, and it appears that the investigation cannot be completed within the period of twenty four hours fixed by Section 57 and there are grounds for believing that the accusation or information is well-founded, the officer-in-charge of the police station or the Police Officer making the investigation, if he is not below the rank of Sub-Inspector, shall forthwith, transmit to the nearest Judicial Magistrate a copy of the entries in the diary hereinafter prescribed relating to the case, and shall at the same time forward the accused to such Magistrate.

(2) The Magistrate to whom an accused person is forwarded under this Section may, whether he has or has not jurisdiction to try the case, from time to time, authorise the detention of the accused in such custody as such Magistrate thinks fit, for a term not exceeding fifteen days in the whole, and if he has no jurisdiction to try the case or commit it for trial, and considers further detention unnecessary he may order the accused to be forwarded to a Magistrate having such jurisdiction :

Provided that :

(a) The Magistrate may authorise detention of the accused person, otherwise than in custody of the police, beyond the period of fifteen days if he is satisfied that adequate grounds exist for doing so, but no Magistrate shall authorise the detention of the accused person in custody under this Section for a total period exceeding sixty days, and on expiry of the said period of sixty days, the accused person shall be released on bail if he is prepared to and does furnish bail and every person released on bail under this Section shall be deemed to be so released under the provisions of Chapter XXXIII for the purposes of that chapter."

9. A reading of this Section shows that when a person is arrested and if it appears that the investigation cannot be completed within a period of 24 hours and there are grounds for believing that the information is well founded, the officer-in-charge of the Police Station should send to the nearest Judicial Magistrate a copy of the entries in the diary and also the accused to such Magistrate. The Magistrate may authorise the detention of the accused in such custody as he thinks fit for a term not exceeding 15 days in the whole. But he can authorise detention of the accused otherwise than in custody of the Police, beyond the period of 15 days if he is satisfied that there are adequate grounds for doing so. But it should not exceed a total period of sixty days. On the expiry of that period of sixty days the accused shall be released on bail if he is prepared to and does furnish bail. Every person released on bail under this Section shall be deemed to be so released under the provisions of Chapter XXXIII for the purpose of that chapter. Chapter XXXIII deals with the provisions as to bail and bonds. Admittedly in this case the investigation is not yet completed. The accused have been in custody for a total period of 60 days. So they have to be released on bail if they are prepared to and do furnish bail.

10. The next question is whether under the provisions of Section 309, Cr. P.C. the Magistrate has the power to remand the accused to custody even though the investigation is not yet complete and the accused has been in custody for more than 60 days. Section 309, Cr. P.C. reads 8.5 follows :-

"Power to postpone or adjourn proceedings : (1) In every enquiry or trial, the proceedings shall be held as expeditiously as possible, and in particular, when the examination of witnesses has once begun, the same shall be continued from day to day until all the witnesses in attendance have been examined, unless the court finds the adjournment of the same beyond the following day to be necessary for reasons to be recorded.

(2) If the court, after taking cognizance of an offence or commencement of trial finds it necessary or advisable to postpone the commencement of, or adjourn, any inquiry or trial, it may, from time to time, for reasons to be recorded, postpone or adjourn the same on such terms as it thinks fit, for such time as it considers reasonable, and may by a warrant remand the accused if in custody.

Provided that no Magistrate shall remand an accused person to custody under this Section for a term exceeding fifteen days at a time;

Provided further that when witnesses are in attendance, no adjournment or postponement shall be granted, without examining them, except for special reasons to be recorded in writing;

Explanation :- (1) If sufficient evidence has been obtained to raise a suspicion that the accused may have committed an offence, and it appears likely that further evidence may be obtained by a remand, this is a reasonable cause for a remand.

Explanation :- (2) The terms on which an adjournment or postponement may be granted include, in appropriate cases, the payment of costs by the prosecution or the accused."

This provision occurs in Chapter XXIV relating to the general provisions as to enquiries and trials, Sub-Section (2) of Section 309, Cr. P.C. specifically states that after taking cognizance of an offence, or commencement of trial, if the court finds it necessary or advisable to postpone the commencement of, any inquiry or trial, it may do so for reasons to be recorded and may remand the accused if he is in custody provided that the remand does not exceed 15 days at a time. Explanation (1) says that if it appears likely that further evidence may be obtained by a remand, this is a reasonable cause for remand, obviously the explanation has to be read as part of the Section. Explanation (1) explains one of the reasonable causes, for remand. But to invoke the provisions of Section 309, Cr. P.C. it is essential that the Court should have taken cognizance of an offence in view of the provisions of Sub-Section (2).

11. The court takes cognizance of a case under Section 190, Cr. P.C. which reads as follows :

"Section 190. Cognizance of offences by Magistrates : (1) Subject to the provisions of this Chapter, any Magistrate of the first class, and any Magistrate of the second class specially empowered in this behalf under Sub-Section (2) may take cognizance of any offence.

(a) upon receiving a complaint of facts which constitute such offence;

(b) upon a police report of such facts.

(c) upon information received from any person other than a police officer, or upon his own knowledge, that such offence has been committed."

12. In the present case the court can take cognizance of the case upon a police report within the meaning of cl. (b) of Section 190, Cr. P.C. What is a Police report is the next question. It is defined under Section 2 clause (r), Cr. P.C. which says that a police report means a report forwarded by a Police Officer to a Magistrate under Sub-Section (2) of Section 173, Cr. P.C.

13. In so far as it is relevant, Section 173, Cr. P.C. reads as follows :-

"Section 173. Report of Police Officer on completion of investigation : (1) Every investigation under this Chapter shall be completed without unnecessary delay.

2(i) As soon as it is completed, the officer-in-charge of the Police Station shall forward to a Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of the offence on a police report, a report in the form prescribed by the State Government stating;
(a) the names of the parties;
(b) the nature of the information.
(c) the names of the persons who appear to be acquainted with the circumstances of the case;
(d) whether any offence appears to have been committed and, if so by whom;
(e) whether the accused has been arrested
(f) whether he has been released on his bond and, if so, whether with or without sureties.
(g) whether he has been forwarded in custody under Section 170.
(Clause (ii) and Sub-Sections (3) to (7) omitted)
8. Nothing in this section shall be deemed to preclude further investigation in respect of an offence after a report under Sub-Section (2) has been forwarded to the Magistrate and, where upon such investigation, the officer-in-charge of the police station obtains further evidence, oral or documentary, he shall forward to the Magistrate a further report or reports regarding such evidence in the form prescribed; and the provisions of Sub-Sections (2) to (6) as far as may be, apply in relation to such report or reports as they apply in relation to a report forwarded under Sub-Section (2)."
14. A plain reading of Sec. 173, Cr. P.C. shows that every investigation must be completed without unnecessary delay and as soon as it is completed, the officer-in-charge of the Police Station shall forward a report to the Magistrate in the form prescribed. Therefore, there is no question of sending up of a police report within the meaning of Section 173, Cr. P.C. Sub-Section (2) until the investigation is completed. Any report sent before the investigation is completed will not be a police report within the meaning of Sub-Section (2) of Section 173, Cr. P.C. and there is no question of the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence and consequently the provisions of Section 309, Cr. P.C. cannot be invoked.
15. In the case on hand only a preliminary charge-sheet has been filed and it is specifically stated therein that the investigation is not yet completed. Therefore, it cannot be treated as the police report within the meaning of Sub-Section (2) of Section 173, Cr. P.C. and so the Magistrate could not take cognizance of offence in the present case and remand the accused under Section 309, Cr. P.C.
16. The learned Public Prosecutor has argued that in this case there is a charge-sheet though styled preliminary and so the proviso to Section 167 Sub-Section (2) does not apply. I do not agree with him. The Code of Criminal Procedure does not contemplate a preliminary charge-sheet and a final charge-sheet. What is contemplated is only a police report within the meaning of Sub-Section (2) of Section 173, Cri. P.C. Admittedly in this case, there is no such report. The so-called preliminary charge-sheet filed in this case is not a police report because the investigation is not yet completed, and so the proviso to Section 167 Sub-Section (2) is attracted. In this connection the learned Public Prosecutor has relied upon Sub-S. (8) of Section 173, Cr. P.C. in order to contend that even a preliminary charge-sheet is a police report within the meaning of Sub-Section (2) of that Section. But a reading of Sub-Section (8) of Section 173, Cr. P.C. shows that after a police report under Sub-Section (2) is sent to the Magistrate, further investigation is not precluded and if upon such investigation further evidence is obtained a further report should be sent to a Magistrate. Therefore, Sub-Sec. (8) of Section 173, Cr. P.C. comes into play only after a report under Sub-Section (2) is sent but not before. In this case since no report under Sub-Section (2) is sent, Sub-Section (8) does not come into operation at all. Since the preliminary report is not the one sent to the court after a report under Sub-

Section (2) was sent, the learned Public Prosecutor cannot invoke the provisions of Sub-Section (8) of Section 173, Criminal Procedure Code. In this connection I may also refer to a Bench decision of our High Court reported in Bandi Kotayya v. State, AIR 1966 Andh Pra 377 : (1966 Cri LJ 1377) wherein it has been held by Basi Reddi and Anantanarayana Ayyar, JJ., as follows :

"It would follow as necessary consequence that until the Magistrate has before him a police report as envisaged by Section 173, Criminal Procedure Code, he cannot take cognizance of the offence in respect of which he is to hold an inquiry. This would be the true position notwithstanding that, as in the instant case, a preliminary charge-sheet had been presented to him earlier and he had taken the case on file and given it a number for statistical purposes; remanded the accused produced before him, and issued non-bailable warrants in respect of the absconding accused. All these steps should be regarded as having been taken not upon taking cognizance of the offence with a view to conduct a preliminary inquiry against the accused named in the preliminary charge-sheet, but only with a view to facilitate the completion of the investigation and the laying of the final charge-sheet which would be the report contemplated by Section 173, Criminal Procedure Code."

Their Lordships further held as follows :

"It is clear from the terms of Sub-Section (1) that the report under Section 173, Criminal Procedure Code, is submitted by the Police only after the investigation is completed and not before. Where in a given case, before the completion of the investigation, a report, which is styled a preliminary charge-sheet, is forwarded to a Magistrate, that report cannot be regarded as a report under Section 173, Criminal Procedure Code, upon the receipt of which alone a Magistrate, acting under Section 207-A, Criminal Procedure Code, can proceed to hold a preliminary inquiry."

17. Following that decision it follows that in the present case since the investigation is not complete there is no police report and consequently there is no question of the Magistrate taking cognizance of the case. So I do not agree with the contention of the learned Public Prosecutor.

18. I am also supported in the view I have taken by the Bench decision of the Assam High Court reported in Ved Kumar Seth v. State of Assam, 1975 Cri LJ 647 (Gauhati).

19. For the reasons stated supra, I hold that on the facts of this case the learned Magistrate was justified in releasing A-1 to A-4 on bail after the lapse of the 60 days period of detention under Section 167 Sub-Section (2), Criminal Procedure Code. Consequently both the petitions are dismissed.

Petitions dismissed.

Judgement

ORDER :- This application, under Section 397 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 (in short the 'Code') is directed against the order dated 27-5-1991 passed by Shri D. R. Roy, Judicial Magistrate Ist Class, Nawadah in Complaint Case No. 14/88/Tr. No. 554/91 by which the learned Judicial Magistrate; on a petition filed under Section 319 of the Code; ordered for the issue of process against the petitioner for the alleged offences under Sections 465, 467, 468 471 and 120 (B) of the Indian Penal Code.

2. It appears that the complainant, Janki Devi (O.P. No. 2) filed a complaint petition before the Chief Judicial Magistrate on 11-1-1988 alleging therein that the accused persons including the present petitioner entered into a criminal conspiracy and created a forged and fabricated document purported to be the certified copy of the order passed by the Settlement Officer under Section 106 of the Bihar Tenancy Act in T. S. Nos. 58/80 and 58(A)/80 to the effect that Khata Nos. 91 and 263 were entered into the Khatiyan of Kunti Devi who was also named as an accused in the complaint petition. The allegation against the petitioner was that; he, in the capacity of Head Assistant in the record room of the Collectorate, Nawadah; issued the purported certified copy of the aforesaid forged order certifying it to be genuine. It was further alleged that the accused persons of the said case were using the aforesaid document as a genuine document. They produced it before Anchal Adhikari, Warsaliganj, who, on its basis, issued rent receipts for R. S. Khata Nos. 263 and 91 in the name of accused No. 2, Kunti Devi.

3. On the basis of this complaint petition (Annexure 1) Complaint Case No. 14/88 was instituted in which an enquiry under Section 202 of the Code was held by the learned Chief Judicial Magistrate. On the conclusion of the enquiry the learned Magistrate took cognizance of the offence against two of the accused, namely, Suresh Singh and Kunti Devi for the offences mentioned above but did not take cognizance against the present petitioner. He, thereafter, transferred the case to the file of Shri P. Kashyap, Judicial Magistrate, Nawadah for trial.

4. In this petition the petitioner has contended that by virtue of his post as the Head Assistant of the record room he was duty bound to sign on the certified copies prepared by the copyist and checked and compared by the comparing clerk as well as by the head comparing clerk who are required to properly check every certified copy with the original and also to certify that the certified copy is the true and correct copy of the original. The petitioner being an old man suffering from heart disease was required to sign a large number of certified copies every day and it was not physically possible for him to check and compare each and every copy with the original. He had to act on the certificate granted by the Head Comparing Clerk as well as the Comparing Clerk to the effect that the copy prepared was the true copy of the original. While issuing the certified copy, in course of his duty, it would be futile to say that the petitioner had obtained any gain in giving the certificate on the aforesaid document. Even the alleged certified copy was not annexed with the complaint petition and the Court below did not get an opportunity to scrutinise and to find out whether any fraud or fabrication was committed in the preparation of the aforesaid document. The learned Court below did not even call for the same. In its absence it was not fair and proper for the Court below to pass the impugned order against the petitioner under Section 319 of the Code, as no prima facie case was made out against him.

5. Under the aforesaid facts and circumstances the case of the petitioner will be out of reach of Section 319 of the Code since as per the complaint petition he figured as one of the accused in the case and also since by the order dated 27-5-1988 taking cognizance of the offence no cognizance was taken against the petitioner as will appear from the aforesaid order (Annexure 3). It is well settled that if a public servant is accused of an offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in discharge of his official duty no cognizance against him could have been taken except with the previous sanction of the State Government. Since no such sanction had been taken the impugned order issuing summons to him in this case to stand trial is also bad in law and hit by Section 197 of the Code. The impugned order will be an abuse of the process of Court and against the interest of justice. Moreover the alleged offences are said to have taken place between 22-12-1979 to 20-11-1987 in the course of which so many Head Assistants were posted in the Collectorate, Nawadah. On these grounds, amongst others, it has been contended that after hearing the parties the impugned order dated 27-5-1991 be quashed.

6. The parties have been heard at length on the questions of law raised in this petition. I will deal with the same in detail at the appropriate places. Firstly, however, I would like to briefly state the facts of the case.

7. From the record it appears that the complaint petition in Complaint Case No. 14/88 was filed on 11-1-1988 in the Court of Chief Judicial Magistrate, Nawadah. In this complaint petition the present petitioner was named as accused No. 3 and has been described as head clerk record room, Nawadah, Collectorate. Three persons have been named as witnesses. On the same day, the complainant Janki Devi (OP No. 2), was examined on solemn affirmation and the Chief Judicial Magistrate decided to hold an enquiry under Section 202 of the Code, in course of which he examined three witnesses, namely, Ram Shanker Singh, Shyam Singh and Subash Chandra. On the conclusion of the enquiry under Section 202 of the Code the learned Magistrate passed the order dated 27-5-1988 taking cognizance of the offence only against two of the accused persons, namely, Suresh Singh and Kunti Devi under various sections of the Indian Penal Code. Thereafter he transferred the case for disposal to the Court of Judicial Magistrate.

8. Before the trial Court a petition (Annexure 2) under Section 319 of the Code was filed on behalf of the complainant for issuing process against the present petitioner. From the impugned order it appears that the learned Judicial Magistrate was conscious of the fact that the learned Chief Judicial Magistrate had not taken cognizance against the present petitioner. It further appears that the learned Judicial Magistrate had examined three witnesses, namely, Subash Chandra, Shyam Singh and Janki Devi under Section 244 of the Code. Thereafter he perused the record of the case and concluded that there were sufficient materials against the present petitioner for proceeding against him. He, accordingly, passed the impugned order dated 27-5-91 under Section 319 of the Code for the issue of the process against the present petitioner. It is against this order that the present revision petition has been filed.

9. The impugned order appears to have been passed under the provision of Section 319 of the Code which runs as follows :-

"319. Power to proceed against other persons appearing to be guilty of offence -

(1) Where, in the course of any inquiry into, or trial of, an offence, it appears from the evidence that any person not being the accused has committed any offence for which such person could be tried together with the accused, the Court may proceed against such person for the offence which he appears to have committed.

(2) Where such person is not attending the Court, he may be arrested or summoned, as the circumstances of the case may require, for the purposes aforesaid.,

(3) Any person attending the Court, although not under arrest or upon a summons, may be detained by such Court for the purpose of the inquiry into, or trial of, the offence which he appears to have committed.

(4) Where the Court proceeds against any person under sub-section (1) then -

(a) The proceedings in respect of such person shall be commenced afresh, and the witness re-heard;

(b) subject to the provisions of clause (a), the case may proceed as if such person had been an accused person when the Court took cognizance of the offence upon which the inquiry or trial was commenced." (Emphasis supplied)

10. From perusal of this section it would appear that at the time when the Court decides to proceed against any other person under the provisions of this section he does not figure as an accused till the date of passing of the order under Section 319 of the Code. In sub-section (1) it has clearly been stated that "it appears from the evidence that any person not being the accused has committed any offence." From this it would become clear that till the date on which the order under Section 319 of the Code is passed the person to be proceeded against does not figure as an accused in the case. Again in sub-section (2) it has been stated that where "such person" is not attending the Court which will mean that till then he does not figure as an accused and has been described as "such person". Sub-section (3) provides that "any such person" may be detained by the Court if he is attending the Court. Here also he has not been described as an accused. In sub-section (4) (a) that person has been described as "such person" against whom the proceeding is required to be commenced afresh. Sub-section (4) (b) also describes the person to be proceeded against under Section 319 of the Code as "such person". From all this it becomes clear that till the stage of passing of the order under Section 319 of the Code or even till his arrest the said person has not been described as an accused and is not treated as such.

11. The present case has been started on the basis of the cognizance taken in a complaint case. The procedure for taking of cognizance has been given in Section 190 of the Code. In Section 190 of the Code the word "accused" has not been used. However, this word has been mentioned in Section 191 of the Code which relates to a stage when the cognizance has already been taken by the Magistrate. Section 202 of the Code provides for the postponement of issue of process after taking the cognizance. In this section also the word "accused" has been used and it has been provided that the Magistrate on the receipt of the complaint; if he thinks fit; may postpone the issue of process against the "accused" and may enquire into the case himself or direct an investigation to be made. Similarly this word has been used in Section 204 of the Code which deals with the issue of the process. Section 204 (1) provides that if in the opinion of the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence there is sufficient ground for proceeding and the case appears to be (a) a summons case he shall issue his summons for the attendance of the "accused", or (b) a warrant case, he may issue a warrant or, if he thinks fit, a summons, for causing the "accused" to be brought....." I have referred to the aforesaid sections to show that a person against whom a complaint petition is filed is stated to be an accused under the provisions pointed out above, namely, under Section 191, Section 202 and Section 204 of the Code.

12. As against it the position is somewhat different in the cases instituted on the basis of the First Information Report lodged before the police. In this connection I will firstly refer to Chapter V of the Code which deals with the arrest of a person. In Sections 41, 42 and 43 a reference has been made to "any person". In Section 44 a reference has been made to the arrest of the offender if the offence is committed in presence of the Magistrate. In Section 44 (2) again a reference is made to "any person". The same is case in Section 46. In Section 47 also there is a reference to "any person". In short in none of the sections of this Chapter any reference has been made to the "accused persons". Coming to Section 57 it clearly provides that no Police Officers shall detain in custody a person arrested without warrant for a longer period then under all the circumstances of the case is reasonable and such period shall not; in the absence of a special order of a Magistrate under Section 167; exceed twenty four hours. Here also the expression "a person" has been used and such person has not been described as an accused.

also it has been stated that whenever any person is arrested and detained in custody, and it appears that there are grounds for beliveing that the accusation or information is well founded, the Officer Incharge of the police station shall forthwith transmit to the nearest Judicial Magistrate a copy of the entries in the diary hereinafter prescribed relating to the case, and shall at the same time forward the "accused" to such Magistrate. It is only at this stage for the first time the word "accused" has been used for a person who has been arrested or detained by the police and produced before a Magistrate. From sub-section (2) of Section 167 onwards "such a person" has been described as the accused person. Now where is the dividing line? When a person arrested and detained by the police becomes an accused person? As has been stated above, any person does not become an accused simply because an F.I.R. is lodged against him, or he is arrested and detained by the police. Nor he becomes an accused person even when he is produced before the Magistrate by the police under the provisions of Section 167 of the Code. For the first time such a person has been described as an accused person only after the officer-in-charge of a police station finds that there are ground for believing that the accusation or information against him is well founded. Thus, there is a clear line of demarcation in the stage in which any person arrested by the police becomes "an accused person". It may be, however, pointed out here that the discussion of this point namely when a person arrested by the police in a case instituted on F.I.R. becomes an accused person was not necessary under the facts and circumstances of the present case but simply for the purposes of comparison and contrast I have made the aforesaid discussions.

14. As far as the present case is concerned it is clear that the present petitioner was named as accused No. 3 in the complaint petition. He also figured as an accused in the enquiry under Section 202 of the Code. The evidence against him was adduced in the aforesaid enquiry on the conclusion of which the learned Chief Judicial Magistrate proceeded to take cognizance of the offence against two accused but not against the present petitioner. Under the aforesaid circumstances what would be the law on the subject.

15. As pointed out above, in a case instituted upon a complaint, a person becomes an accused even in the course of inquiry held against him under Section 202 of the Code. As a matter of fact he becomes an accused even at the stage of Section 191 before which the cognizance is already taken in a case. As against it in a case instituted on the basis of F.I.R. a person does not become an accused till the officer-incharge finds that there are grounds for believing that the accusation or information against him is well founded. It is in this background that the ratio of the various decisions of the Hon'ble Supreme Court has to be applied because the findings of the apex Court in cases instituted on police report will not apply to the cases instituted on complaint because in the former case the stage at which a person becomes an accused is differing from the stage as envisaged in the latter case and I have already noted this difference in the earlier part of this judgment. The determination of this question is vital in as much as; as per Section 319 of the Code a person can be proceeded against only when it appears from the evidence that any person not being the accused has committed any offence. From this it becomes clear that if a person had figured as an accused in the case at any stage he goes out of the reach of Section 319. (Emphasis supplied)

16. In the present case, however, three persons were named as accused in the case and enquiry under Section 202 of the Code was held by the learned Chief Judicial Magistrate in course of which three witnesses were examined. On the examination of the statements made by the three witnesses as also on the perusal of the necessary papers the learned Chief Judicial Magistrate was pleased to take cognizance of the offence only against two persons and not against the third accused, namely, the present petitioner. Now a question that may arise in this connection would be what would the effect of this order. It is not one of those cases in which it has been alleged that the offences were committed by some persons who were not known at the time of filing of the complaint petition. Here in the complaint petition three persons have been clearly named but cognizance was taken only against two persons and not against the third. In a situation like this what would be intention of the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence? It would be clear from the aforesaid fact that the learned Chief Judicial Magistrate applied his judicial mind to the facts and circumstances of the case, to the facts alleged in the complaint petition, and also to statements made by the witnesses under Section 202 of the Code. On the strength of the aforesaid the learned Magistrate proceeded to take cognizance of offence only against two persons and not against the present petitioner. The question is what would be the effect of this order? Can the transferee Magistrate to whom the case has been sent for trial proceed to issue process against the present petitioner in exercise of powers vested in him under Section 319 of the Code?

17. I have already analysed above the provisions of Section 319 of the Code. A perusal of this section clearly shows that a person can be proceeded against under its provision if he figures as "any person not being an accused". If, however, the person concerned had figured as an accused from the very begining of the case on account of the fact that he was named as an accused in the complaint petition itself, can it be said that he fits in the description given in Section 319 of the Code namely "any person not being the accused"? Obviously he was an accused from the very begining of the institution of the case and as pointed out above the procedure for holding enquiry under Section 202 of the Code clearly describes the person being proceeded against as an accused since the cognizance against him had already been taken. As such under the facts and circumstances of this case it cannot be said that the present petitioner can be described as "any person not being an accused" so as to warrant to application of Section 319 of the Code.

18. In this connection a reference may be made to the case of Sohan Lal v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1990 SC 2158 : (1990 Cri LJ 2302). In the said case the F.I.R. was lodged alleging that the appellants and two others were pelting stones on the informant's house causing damage to it, in course of which three persons were injured. The police submitted charge-sheet under Sections 147, 323, 325, 336 and 427 of the Indian Penal Code. After taking cognizance and after hearing the parties the Judicial Magistrate by his order discharged appellants 4 and 5, namely, Bijya Bai and Jiya Bai of all the charges levelled against them while appellants Nos. 1, 2 and 3, namely, Sohan Lal, Padam Chand and Vishu" were ordered to be charged only under Section 427 of the Indian Penal Code. As against this order the A.P.P. filed on application to the Magistrate under Section 216 of the Code in which a prayer was made that the accused may also be charged under Sections 147, 323 and 336 of the Indian Penal Code. In support of the petition four P.Ws. were examined by the learned Magistrate after which the learned Magistrate passed the order that if any accused was discharged of any charge under any section then there would be no bar for taking fresh cognizance on reconsideration against him according to Section 216 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and that the provision of Section 319 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was also clear in that connection. The following order was recorded by him.

"Hence cognizance for offences under Ss. 147, 427, 336, 323, 325, I.P.C. is taken against accused, Sohan Lal, Padam Chand, Smt. Vijya Bai, Jiya Bai, Vishu", Hanuman Chand and Uttam Chand. Orders for framing the charges against accused Sohan Lal, Padam Chand, Vishnu under the aforesaid sections are passed and accused Smt. Jiya Bai, Vijya Bai, Uttam Chand and Hanuman Chand be summoned through bailable warrants in the sum of Rs. 500/- each. File to come on 20-10-1982 for framing the amended charges against the accused present. Exemption from appearance of accused Vishnu Chand and Padam Chand is cancelled until further order. The Advocate for the accused shall present the said accused in the Court in future."

19. The aforesaid order was challenged in two criminal revision petitions before the High Court of Rajasthan but they were dismissed. Before the High Court in the two revision petitions the question that arose for consideration whether a Magistrate was competent to take cognizance of the offence after recording some evidence against accused persons who had been earlier discharged of those offences. It was urged before the High Court by the revision petitioners that having once discharged them it was not open to the Magistrate to proceed against them and only remedy was to go in revision and the Magistrate can not review his own order. The learned Judge dismissed the petitions taking the view that it was not a case for reviewing the order of discharge passed by the Magistrate but was a case of taking the cognizance of the offence on the basis of the evidence recorded by the Magistrate himself which was not in any way prohibited in law and that under the provision of Section 319 of the Code the Magistrate was fully competent to take cognizance of the offence on the basis of the evidence recorded by him, though for the same offence order of discharge was passed by him earlier.

20. In this case the Hon'ble Supreme Court took into consideration the various submissions made before it from both sides. It also took into consideration the provisions of law as contained in Sections 216 and 319 of the Code. In paragraph 14 of the judgment the Hon'ble Supreme Court took notice of the crucial words in the Section 319 namely "any person not being the accused". The question that arose before their Lordships of the Supreme Court was whether appellant Nos. 4 and 5, namely, Vijya Bai and Jiya Bai who were discharged by the Magistrate of all the charges against them can be described as accused in the case so as to bring them within the sweep of Section 319 of the Code. After taking into consideration the ratio of the decisions in the cases of Joginder Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1979 SC 339 : (1979 Cri LJ 339), Chandra Deo Singh v. Prokash Chandra, AIR 1963 SC 1430 : (1963 (2) Cri LJ 397), Municipal Corpn. of Delhi v. Ram Kishan Rohtagi, AIR 1983 SC 67 : (1983 Cri LJ 159) and Dr. S. S. Khanna v. Chief Secretary, Patna, AIR 1983 SC 595 : (1983 Cri LJ 1044) the Hon'ble Supreme Court in paragraph 33 of the judgment has observed as follows :-

"33. The above views have to yield to what is laid down by this Court in the decisions above referred to. The provisions of Sec. 319 had to be read in consonance with the provisions of S. 398 of the Code. Once a person is found to have been the accused in the case he goes out of the reach of S. 319. Whether he can be dealt with under any other provisions of the Code is a different question. In the case of the accused who has been discharged under the relevant provisions of the Code, the nature of finality to such order and the resultant protection of the persons discharged subject to revision under S. 398 of the Code may not be lost sight of. This should be so because the complainant's desire for vengeance has to be tampered with though it may be, as Sir James Stephen says : "The Criminal Law stands to the passing of revenge in much the same relation as marriage to the sexual appetite....."

21. From the aforesaid authoritative pronouncement of the Hon'ble Supreme Court it becomes perfectly clear that once a person figured as an accused in a case and is discharged subsequently he cannot be proceeded against under Section 319 of the Code. In this decision the Hon'ble Supreme Court has also decided the stages at which any person becomes an accused in a complaint case and also in a case instituted on the basis of F.I.R.

22. The next ground taken on behalf of the petitioner is that he cannot be prosecuted for the offences under the various sections mentioned above in view of the fact he happens to be the Head Assistant serving the record room, Collectorate Nawadah and by virtue of this post he was duty bound to sign on the certified copies produced by the subordinate staff, namely copyset, comparing clerk or Head Comparing Clerk, of course after due comparison of the copies with the original. It has further been contended that the petitioner was duty bound to sign a very large number of copies and it was in no way possible for him to check and compare each and every copy acting as the Head Assistant, also that function was to be performed by the Head Comparing Clerk who used to certify those copies as true copies prepared from the original. However, the main thrust of this argument was that since the petitioner was acting as a public servant acting or purporting to act in discharge of his official duty no Court could have taken cognizance of such an offence without the previous sanction of the State Government. In this way the learned counsel appearing on behalf of the petitioner has sought the protection of Sections 197 of the Code. In my considered view, however, this protection will not be available to the petitioner for the reasons mentioned below.

23. It is no denying the fact that at the relevant time the petitioner was acting as Head Assistant of the record room of the Collectorate, Nawadah. It is also clear that while acting as such he was duty bound to sign on the certified copies to be issued to various persons in proof of the fact that the same were true copies of the original. Under the aforesaid circumstances it cannot be denied that while discharging this duty the petitioner was acting or purporting to act in discharge of his official duty. Now the question that would arise for consideration is that whether under the aforesaid circumstances the petitioner can seek the protection of Section 197 of the Code. In this connection a reference may be made to Section 197 (1) (a) and Section 197 (1) (b) of the Code. It runs as follows :-

"197. Prosecution of Judges and public servants -

(1) When any person who is or was a Judge or Magistrate or a public servant not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of the Government is accused of any offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty, no Court shall take cognizance of such offence except with the previous sanction -

(a) In the case of a person who is employed or, as the case may be was at the time of commission of the alleged offence employed, in connection with the affairs of the Union, of the Central Government.

(b) In the case of a person who is employed or, as the case may be, was at the time of commission of the alleged offence employed, in connection with the affairs of a State, of the State Government."

24. From the aforesaid provisions it becomes clear that in order to attract the provisions of this section the petitioner has to show that he is a public servant "not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of the Government." In the present case the petitioner at the relevant time was the Head Assistant in the Record Room of the Collectorate, Nawadah. In other words he was the staff of the Collectorate, Nawadah and not a public servant not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of the Government. It is not in dispute that the staff of the Collectorate are appointed by the District Magistrate and the Collector of the District. They are, therefore, removable from their office under the orders of the District Magistrate and the Collector. In a case of such public servant the State Government; not being the appointing authority; does (sic) come in the picture and the sanction of the State Government is not required for the removal of such an employee from his office. This position appears to be clear.

25. The learned counsel appearing on behalf of the State has submitted that in a situation like this the protection of Section 197 of the Code shall not be available to the petitioner. In this connection he has drawn my attention to the fact that the petitioner not being a public servant not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of the Government the protection of Section 197 cannot be made available to him. Under the circumstances of the present case I find force in this contention of the learned counsel for the State. In a large number of cases it has been held that in the case of a public servant being a person who can be removed without the sanction of the Government the provision of this section will not apply. In this connection a reference may be made to the case of Nagraj v. State of Mysore, AIR 1964 SC 269 : (1964 (1) Cri LJ 161). This was a case of a Police Officer and a constable removable by the Inspector General of Police and by the Superintendent of Police respectively. In such a situation it was held that no sanction was necessary. In the present case also the District Magistrate and Collector happens to be the appointing authority of the petitioner could be removed from his office by them. As such it is clear that the protection of Section 197 shall not be available to him.

26. Before concluding I would like to briefly discuss a question of law raised in course of the argument on behalf of the petitioner relating to Section 195 of the Code though in the petition no such plea has been taken. Since, however, this is a question of law and since the determination of this question will have an impact on the final outcome of this revision application I would like to briefly discuss the same.

27. As stated above the petitioner was functioning as the Head Assistant of the record room of the Collectorate, Nawadah. In this capacity he was duty bound to sign the certified copies of the documents issued to the parties. In the present case it has been alleged that on the strength of the forged and fabricated copy of the order passed by the Settlement Officer under Section 106 of the Bihar Tenancy Act, accused No. 2, Kunti Devi, managed to get her name mutated in revenue records under the order of the Anchal Adhikari who also issued rent receipts in her for R. S. Khata Nos. 263 and 91. From this it would appear that on the strength of this alleged forgery the Anchal Adhikary who is a Revenue Officer not only mutated the name of accused No. 2 Kunti Devi in the revenue records over R. S. Khata Nos. 263 and 91 and also issued the rent receipts to her for the same. Under the aforesaid circumstances it has been contended that no cognizance could be taken against the petitioner for the offence described in Section 463 (forgery) or punishable under Section 471 and other sections of the Indian Penal Code, when such offence is alleged to have been committed in respect of a document produced or given in evidence in a proceeding in any Court except on the complaint in writing of that Court. In other words, the protection of Section 195 of the Code has been pleaded on behalf of the petitioner. A perusal of Section 195 under its sub-section (1) (b) (ii) and (iii) show that no Court shall take cognizance of an offence described in Section 463 committed in respect of a document produced or given in evidence in any proceeding in any Court or (iii) of any criminal conspiracy to commit, or attempt to commit, or the abetment of commission of any offence specified in sub-clause (i) or sub-clause (ii), except on the complaint in writing of that Court, or of some other Court to which that Court is subordinate.

28. In the present case, the allegation of the forgery and fabrication of false document has been made against the petitioner. He is said to have conspired in committing forgery of the orders passed by the Settlement Officer under Section 106 of the Bihar Tenancy Act to the effect that Khata Nos. 91 and 263 were entered in the Khatiyan of Kunti Devi (accused No. 2). From the facts of this case it appears that the aforesaid forged and fabricated Khatiyan was filed before the Anchal Adhikari who happens to be a Revenue Officer and on their basis rent receipts for those two Khata were issued in 'he name of accused No. 2, Kunti Devi after mutating her name in the revenue records. Under the aforesaid circumstances the question that would arise for consideration is whether the protection of Section 395 of the Code will be available to the petitioner or not? In this connection it may be stated here that sub-section (iii) of Section 195 provides that in clause (b) of sub-section (i) the term "Court" will also mean a revenue Court. From this it would appear that the Court of the Anchal Adhikari while ordering for the mutation of the name of accused No. 2 and also for the issue of the rent receipts in her favour will obviously be described as a revenue Court as to attract the provision of this law. In the case of Har Prasad v. Hans Ram, AIR 1966 All 124 : (1966 Cri LJ 244), it has been held that a Tahsildar dealing with mutation proceeding is a revenue Court. Under the aforesaid circumstances there is no denying the fact that the Anchal Adhikari while mutating the name of accused No. 2 in the revenue records of two Khatas mentioned above was acting as a revenue Court within the meaning of Section 195 of the Code. From this it would become clear that the case of the present petitioner will clearly come within the mischief of Section 195 (1) (b) (ii) and (iii). As such no cognizance against him could have been taken without a complaint in writing of that revenue Court or of some other Court to which that Court is subordinate. In the present case no such thing has been done. From the prosecution case it appears that there is allegation of conspiracy under Section 120-B also against the present petitioner for committing the alleged offence. The criminal conspiracy is covered by clause (iii) of Section 195 (i) (b). From this it becomes obvious that the prosecution of the present petitioner is also hit by the provisions of Section 195 of the Code and since no complaint in writing of the Anchal Adhikari, being the revenue Court in question; has been produced the impugned order could not have been passed.

29. From the detailed discussions made above it becomes perfectly clear to me that the petition filed under Section 319 of the Code (Annexure 2) on 15-5-1991 by the complainant-opposite party No. 2 is devoid of any merit and the same could not have been allowed by passing of the impugned order which also has no merit and is liable to be quashed.

30. In the result, this application is allowed and the impugned order is quashed.

Application allowed.

* Against order of Balbir Singh, Metropolitan Magistrate, New Delhi, D/- 4-9-1981.
Judgement
KAPUR, J. :- The main question involved in this petition before the court relates to the nature of the custody that can be ordered by a Magistrate during the investigation of a serious offence. The provisions of the Constitution as well as the substantive provisions of the ordinary Municipal law of this country protect a person against unlawful arrest. A person who is arrested by the police can only be arrested in certain specified circumstances.
In the case of certain serious offences described as cognizable offences, the police can arrest without warrants. In other cases, the arrest has to be on the basis of a warrant issued by a Magistrate. The provisions of Art.22(2) of the Constn. require such an arrested person to be produced.
before a Magistrate within a period of 24 hours. S.56 of the Cri. P.C. requires that the arrested person should be produced before a Magistrate having jurisdiction in the case or before an officer in-charge of a Police Station. If the offence is a bailable one, which is a categorisation made by the Cr. P.C., the police itself can grant bail and has to give bail. If the arrested person is charged with a non-bailable offence or is unable to furnish bail, then the police has no option but to produce the person concerned before a Magistrate within the period of 24 hours exclusive of the time necessary for the journey. This is provided by S.57 of the Cr. P.C. This provision is re-inforced as a fundamental right for every person whether a citizen or non-citizen, under Art.22(2) of the Constn. However, the provision does not apply in the case of an enemy, alien or a person detained under any law providing for preventive detention.
2. In the present case, the respondents were accused of very serious offences under Ss.392/397/302/34 Penal Code; they were arrested on 29th Aug., 1981, on the basis of a First Information Report recorded at Police Station, Nizammuddin on 1st Aug. 1981. It so happens that the respondents were earlier arrested on 28th Aug. 1981, by the Special Staff of West District on the basis of a F.I.R. dated 28th Aug. 1981, recorded at Police Station Nangloi. It was then found that they were also the accused in the F.I.R. recorded at Police Station Nizammuddin. The Station House Officer, Nizzammuddin Police Station moved the Magistrate for fixing a date for holding an identification parade. The Magistrate ordered on 29th Aug. 1981, that the identification parade should be held on Ist Sept. 1981, in the Jail and the Superintendent should be informed. On that very date, there was an application that the arrested persons be kept in judicial custody for the purpose of holding the identification parade and the request for an order for police custody should be kept pending. This resulted in the Metropolitan Magistrate directing the respondents to be kept in judicial custody up to 2nd Sept. 1981.
3. On the date fixed for the identification parade, the respondents refused to join the same and, on 2nd Sept. 1981, a prayer was made to the Magistrate to direct the respondents to be remanded to police custody for a Period of seven days to facilitate recovery of case property, etc. The Magistrate ordered that since the respondents' counsel wanted to argue this point the accused should be remanded to judicial custody till 4th Sept. 1981, on which date this question would be dealt with. On 4th Sept. 1981, the Magistrate passed an order to the effect that he could not remand the accused to police custody in view of the judgement of this Court reported as Gian Singh v. State (Delhi Administration) (1981) 19 Delhi LT 168 : (1981 Cri LJ 100).

4. The State then moved the present petition to this Court. The learned single Judge made a reference to a Division Bench stating that a point of great importance was involved in this case and it was desirable that the matter be heard by a Division Bench in view of the two judgements of M.L. Jain J., in Gian Singh v. State (1981 Cri LJ 100) (supra) and Trilochan Singh v. State. Crl. Misc. (Main) No. 298 of 1981, decided on 17th July, 1981 (reported in 1981 Cri LJ 1773). That is how this petition has come to be placed before this Bench.

5. In these circumstances, the substantial point involved in this case is whether a person who is produced before a Magistrate and sent to judicial custody for a short period can later on be remanded to police custody.

6. Before dealing with the merits of the main point, it is necessary to deal with a preliminary objection which was taken regarding the filing of the present petition. It was urged that the petition was filed by Mr. I.U. Khan who was not the Additional Public Prosecutor of Delhi and it was also urged that he had not been authorised to move the petition by the Delhi Administration. The substance of the preliminary objection was that the police had moved the present petition without reference to the Delhi Administration. It was urged that Sodhi Teja Singh, Standing Counsel of the Delhi Administration had not been asked to move the present petition. In effect, this raised a question whether the petition had been filed before this Court by an authorised person. We adjourned this matter to enable the learned counsel appearing for the State, Mr. D.C.

Mathur, to establish that he was authorised by the State. Learned counsel has produced a notification dated 22nd Sept. 1981, whereby the Administrator of the Union Territory of Delhi has appointed Shri D.C. Mathur as Special Public Prosecutor for conducting the present case. We have, therefore, not gone into the question whether the petition was moved wrongly initially because any defect or infirmity in instituting the petition that there may be has now been remedied by the fact that the Delhi Administration is supporting the petition and the Court has sufficient authority in such cases to use its inherent powers or revisional powers even suo motu. At the most, the present petition even if held to be incompentent could be reinstituted on the very next day. So, we have noted the objection and in view of the aforementioned notification overrule the objection.

7. Coming now to the substantive question, the provision that is applicable is S.167 of the Cr. P.C. The first subsection of this section states that if the investigation cannot be completed within the period of 24 hours fixed by Section 57 and there are grounds for believing that the accusation or information is well-founded, then the officer-in-charge of a police station shall forthwith transmit to the nearest Judicial Magistrate a copy of the entries in the diary relating to the case and at the same time forward the accused to such Magistrate. This portion of the section deals with the necessity of producing the accused together with relevant documents before a Magistrate if the investigation cannot be completed within 24 hours.

8. The next Sub-Section i.e., Section 167(2) deals with the powers of the Magistrate to whom the accused may be forwarded. The entire Sub-Section reads as follows :-

"(2) The Magistrate to whom an accused person is forwarded under this section may, whether he has or has not jurisdiction to try the case, from time to time, authorise the detention of the accused in such custody as such Magistrate thinks fit, for a term not exceeding fifteen days in the whole; and if he has no jurisdiction to try the case or commit it for trial, and considers further detention unnecessary, he may order the accused to be forwarded to a Magistrate having such jurisdiction :

Provided that -
(a) the Magistrate may authorise the detention of the accused person, otherwise than in the custody of the police, beyond the period of fifteen days, if he is satisfied that adequate grounds exist for doing so, but no Magistrate shall authorise the detention of the accused person in custody under this paragraph for a total period exceeding,.....
(i) ninety days, where the investigation relates to an offence punishable with death, imprisonment for life or imprisonment for a term of not less than ten years;
(ii) sixty days, where the investigation relates to any other offence, and on the expiry of the said period of ninety days, or sixty days, as the case may be, the accused person shall be released on bail if he is prepared to and does furnish bail, and every person released on bail under this Sub-Section shall be deemed to be so released under the provisions of Chap. XXXIII for the purposes of that Chapter;
(b) no Magistrate shall authorise detention in any custody under this section unless the accused is produced before him;
(c) no Magistrate of the second class, not specially empowered in this behalf by the High Court, shall authorise detention in the custody of the police.
Explanation-I. For the avoidance of doubts, it is hereby declared that, notwithstanding the expiry of the period, specified in para (a), the accused shall be detained in custody so long as he does not furnish bail.
Explanation-II. If any question arises whether an accused person was produced before the Magistrate as required under para (b), the production of the accused person may be proved by his signature on the order authorising detention."
9. We are concerned with the first part of this Sub-Section which authorises the detention of the accused in such custody as such Magistrate thinks fit. The provision shows, as indeed it must, that the Magistrate has a choice for determining the type of custody in which the accused person should be detained. As already pointed out, this provision contains the procedure for depriving a person of his liberty. It is a protection for the citizen or the accused person. The rule of law requires that a person should not be detained by an executive fiat. After the first 24 hours he can only be detained or kept in custody under the orders of a Judicial Magistrate who is a person quite independent from the police. It is this Magistrate who has to determine the period of the custody and the nature of the custody. It is an important safeguard regarding the liberty of a person. The safeguard is further apparent from the fact that the whole period of detention cannot exceed 15 days on the whole and can be altered from time to time. There is no mention in the provision of either notice custody or judicial custody. Conceivably, the Magistrate would have to determine the nature of the custody according to the circumstances of the case. It might be the police or it might be the jail or it might be a mental asylum or it might be a children's home or the Nari Niketan or some other institution. The nature of the custody would vary according to the type of person that the accused might be. Different considerations would arise if the person is a child or a woman or a minor or an apparent lunatic. Therefore, a discretion is given to the Magistrate to determine the nature of the custody. The contention of the respondents is that police custody can be ordered, but if any other custody is ordered, then no fresh order for police custody can be passed. All further custody has to be judicial custody. In short, the contention is that you cannot change the nature of the custody once you have determined it. Does this meaning flow from the words used in the section ? We have first to construe the section without reference to any reported authority. The section says that the accused may be forwarded to a Magistrate who may or may not have jurisdiction to try the case. So, we may have a Magistrate dealing with the case who is not going to try it. He has only to determine the nature of the custody. In fact, it can happen that the accused is arrested in quite a different place from where he has to be tried. For instance, if the accused has run away to another State, it is possible that the accused in Punjab, may eventually be arrested in Assam and produced before a Magistrate there. That Magistrate will be more concerned with sending the accused to the correct Magistrate and may order any type of custody that may be convenient at that time. Later, the accused may be produced before the proper Magistrate after being forwarded from the original Magistrate. The next part of the Sub-Section, namely, that from time to time the Magistrate may authorise such custody as he thinks fit for a term not exceeding 15 days shows that the Magistrate has to pass an order or may pass an order from time to time during the period of 15 days. There is nothing in the provision to show that he cannot change the nature of the custody by subsequent orders. If he orders notice custody or custody in an asylum for say two days, then he may order judicial custody or some other type of custody for a further period of some days and then again change the nature of the custody. It must be kept in view that almost everybody recognises that police custody has to be minimised as far as possible, and it is only when absolutely necessary that police custody has to be ordered. It is in the interest of the accused as well as the administration of justice generally, that the nature of the custody should be changed or be capable of being changed during the period of 15 days. In the present case, the first step that the police thought necessary was that an identification parade should be held. The accused also agreed to join the identification parade. For this purpose the proper course was to send the accused to judicial custody, which was done. After the time requisite for the identification parade was over, it would be necessary to order police custody if some further investigation, like recovery of the stolen property or weapon of offence and so on, was necessary. Therefore a necessary step in the investigation might be to remand the accused to police custody for such period as the Magistrate might think necessary.

10. After all, the purpose of the section is to facilitate investigation. The entire object of the section is investigation and not detention without trial. It was urged by learned counsel for the respondents that investigation could even be carried on if the accused were in judicial custody; that may be so, but it would certainly hamper investigation to quite a great extent. We have only to construe the section as it stands and it appears that the language used in the section allows the Magistrate from time to time to pass an order placing the accused in such custody as the Magistrate deems fit. There is nothing at all in the section to show that the nature of the custody cannot be changed from police custody to judicial custody or vice-versa during the first period of 15 days. After the first period of 15 days has expired, then the proviso comes into operation. At that stage the Magistrate cannot order police custody, but he can order any other type of custody.

11. Turning now to the judgements referred to in the reference order and to other judgements cited at the Bar, we have to examine whether the interpretation just set out has to be altered or is defective in any manner. In the reported judgement, Gian Singh v. State (Delhi Administration), (1981) 19 Delhi LT 168 : (1981 Cri LJ 100) the learned Judge after setting out the provisions of the section and the various stages set out therein stated as follows (at p. 101 of Cri LJ) :

"These provisions indicate one thing clearly more than anything else that once the accused is remanded to judicial custody, he cannot be sent back to police custody in connection with or in continuation of the same investigation."

The judgement then proceeds to hold that even after remand to judicial custody, the accused can be questioned by the police but only in such a manner which does not amount to custody in the police. It would be observed that the judgement does not indicate why the nature of the custody cannot be altered, but assumes that the nature of the custody cannot be changed.

12. In the unreported judgement decided by the same Judge, Trilochan Singh v. State, Criminal Misc. (Main) No. 298 of 1981 (since reported in 1981 Cri LJ 1773 at pp. 1775, 76) there is a more elaborate discussion. In this judgement it was held as follows :-

"Section 167 Cr. P.C. does not confer Power on a Magistrate to dispense police custody but what it does is to empower him to extend such custody beyond what is permitted under S.57 thereof. Reading these two sections together one can safely conclude that S.167 comes into play only when, (1) the accused is arrested without warrant and is detained by a police officer, (2) it appears that more than twenty four hours will be needed for investigation, (3) there are grounds for believing that the accusation or information against him is well founded, and, (4) the officer in charge of the police station or the Investigating officer not below the rank of a sub-inspector forwards the accused before the Magistrate. When this happens, the Magistrate can refuse to detain him or direct his detention either in police custody or judicial custody. When once he directs judicial custody, there is no question of police remand for the simple reason that the conditions aforesaid are no more there.

"The learned Public Prosecutor maintains that S.167 does not expressly so provide nor does it envisage any such inflexible rule that once a man is sent to the judicial custody in particular for a limited purpose he cannot then be remanded again to police custody. He relied upon a practice where any person wanted by the police in some cognizable non-bailable offence, surrenders before the Magistrate, he is then taken into judicial custody and later on handed over to the police when it asks for it. But such a practice is against law. Under what provision of the Cr. P.C. does he surrender before the Magistrate ? Suppose, the police just does not care to ask for his custody, what will the Magistrate do ? or if the police delays its request by some days, how long is the Magistrate to wait ?

Though there is no ban in terms of police remand after judicial remand but that is the clear implication of S.167. The matter has to be governed by its provisions which I have already considered in Gian Singh (1981 Cri LJ 100) (Delhi) (supra) and I see no reason to reconsider or to depart from the conclusion which I had then arrived at."

Thus, the learned Judge concluded that there was no express bar in the section regarding police custody after judicial custody, this was the intendment of the provision.

13. With respect, we do not find any such inference to arise on a construction of the Section. The fact whether the police wants a remand to judicial custody or to police custody has nothing to do with the question nor does the expiry of 24 hours mentioned in S.57 or in the Constitutional Art.22 have anything to do with the question, S.57 only applies if the accused is arrested without a warrant. If the investigation cannot be completed within 24 hours, then the police is bound to produce the accused before a Magistrate. The object of this production before a Magistrate is to ensure the liberty of the citizen. Any further custody is to be under the rule of law and not on the dictates of the police. It is a part of the fundamental liberty of the citizen and other persons in a free democratic country that he should not be detained merely because the police wants it. Thereafter the repository of the rule of law is the Judicial Magistrate concerned. He has to ensure that the proper custody is given. He may refuse to give any custody on the ground that no case is made out, or he may authorise such custody as he deems fit. The words 'from time to time' occurring in the section show that several orders can be passed under S.167(2). There is no question of continuation of police custody involved in S.167(2). The Magistrate is not a wing of the police but is part of the judicial set up of the country. The order has to be passed by a Judicial Magistrate acting judicially. It is, therefore, his duty to see that the custody is the right custody and the order has to be passed for the ultimate object of securing justice. There is, therefore, no rule to be found by inference, that the Magistrate has to continue police custody or to end it. He has to act independently to determine the nature of the custody. He can change his order from time to time. However, he cannot order police custody beyond the period of 15 days.

14. Turning now to another judgement cited at the bar; reliance was placed by learned counsel for the respondents on Dhaman Hiranand v. Emperor, AIR 1937 Sind 251, wherein the learned Judicial Commissioner held that once an accused person had been arrested and forwarded to another Magistrate then the first part of S.167 (2) did not apply. It may be mentioned that this was a case under the Criminal Procedure Code of 1898. At that time it had been held that S.344 permitting remand, was to be utilised also during the investigation proceedings. What had happened was that the accused was arrested in Bombay for an offence committed at Karachi. The opinion of the learned Judicial Commissioner was that once the person was arrested at Bombay, then the Magistrate at Bombay had exhausted the application of the first part of S.167 permitting remand to judicial or police custody and thereafter the remand had to be under S.344. It may be mentioned that this position no longer holds good because the re-enacted provision of the Cri. P.C. of 1973, viz., Sec. 309 which is in the same terms as Sec. 344 of the Act of 1898, has already been held by the Supreme Court in Natabar Parida v. State of Orissa, AIR 1975 SC 1465 : (1975 Cri LJ 1212) to be not applicable at the investigation stage.

15. It may be mentioned that the observations of the Supreme Court are quite the reverse of what was decided by the Sind Court. It was observed at page 1467 (Para 5) (of AIR) as follows :-

"The Magistrate to whom the accused was forwarded could remand him to police custody or jail custody for a term not exceeding 15 days in the whole under Sec. 167(2). Even the Magistrate who had jurisdiction to try the case could not remand the accused to any custody beyond the period of 15 days under Sec. 167(2)." (emphasis supplied).

The judgement then states (Para 5) :-

"Various High Courts had taken the view that a Magistrate having jurisdiction to try a case could remand an accused to jail custody from time to time during the pendency of the investigation in "exercise of the power under Sec. 344, (then a list of judgements is set out)."

Eventually the judgement came to the conclusion that there had been a departure from this and the new Code and Sec. 309 of the new Code applied in a different manner. We are not directly concerned with this point, but have only noted the observations of the Supreme Court to the effect that under the old Code the Magistrate having jurisdiction to whom the accused was forwarded did have power to remand the accused to police custody or to judicial custody, which is quite the opposite result from what was held by the Sind Court in the judgement previously mentioned.

16. In any event, the judgement of Sind Court has no application to the facts of this case because that Court was concerned with the powers of the Magistrate to whom the accused had been forwarded and not the original Magistrate. We are at present concerned with the powers of the Magistrate under Sec. 167 at a stage before the accused had been forwarded to any other Magistrate and we are clearly of the view that there is no bar to the change of the nature of the custody during the period of 15 days.

17. A more opposite judgement is State v. Mehar Chand (1969) 5 Delhi LT 179. In that case, the accused had been arrested for kidnapping one Hima Ram and after the period prescribed in Sec. 167 of the Cr. P.C. had run out, the accused was in judicial custody under Sec. 344, Cr. P.C. (old Code). At that stage, the police found on investigation that besides the offence under Sec. 364, Penal Code. Hima Ram had actually been murdered and, therefore, offences under Secs. 302 and 201, Penal Code had also been committed. The question arose whether the accused could be sent to police custody on the basis of the discovery that there was an aggravated offence. The Magistrate had refused to permit the accused to be put in police custody after he was in judicial custody. The observations of Hardy J., in this respect may be reproduced here with advantage. It was stated :-

"The investigation in both the cases is an investigation into crime which the police alone are authorised to carry out. The Magistrate's function is only to enquire into and try the offence after the police have completed their investigation and submitted a charge sheet against the accused. He cannot however hamper the police investigation by refusing to allow the police to perform their duties. The only object of restricting the power of the police to detain the accused in their custody to a total period of 15 days is to prevent the use of third degree methods by them. But when there is no such allegation there is no apparent reason why the police should not be able to obtain the custody of the accused in order that they may question him or obtain his assistance in investigation in some other lawful manner. I fail to understand why if an accused who is in magisterial custody in one case can be allowed to be remanded to police custody in another case then the same rule should not apply to the accused who is in magisterial custody and is sought to be turned over to notice custody at a subsequent stage of investigation in the same case when the information discloses his complicity in more serious offences. On principle, I can see no difference at all between the two types of cases."

Thus, this Judgement goes to the other extreme by holding that even after the period of 15 days was over and the accused was in judicial custody, he could still be made over to the custody of the police on account of the further facts which had come to light.

18. The judgement of Hardy J., then stated as follows :-

"I see no insuperable difficulty in the way of the police arresting the accused for the second time for the offence for which he is now wanted by them. The accused being already in magisterial custody it is open to the learned Magistrate under Sec. 167(2) to take the accused out of jail or judicial custody and hand him over to the police for the maximum period of 15 days provided in that section. All that he is required to do is to satisfy himself that a good case is made out for detaining the accused in police custody in connection with investigation of the case. It may be that the offences for which the accused is now wanted by the police relate to the same case but these are altogether different offences and in a way therefore it is quite legitimate to say that it is a different case in which the complicity of the accused has been discovered and police in order to complete their investigation of that case require that the accused should be associated with that investigation in some way."

This, therefore, is a case in which police custody was granted over and beyond the original period of 15 days fixed by S.167. The learned Judge found no difficulty in the judicial custody being converted into police custody.

19. We have already set out the provisions of the section and also the interpretation to be given to the Section. We must keep in view that the object of the section is to facilitate investigation into an offence. We completely agree with Hardy J., in coming to the conclusion that the Magistrate has to find out whether there is a good case for grant of police custody. There is no sign in the section that the nature of the custody cannot be altered. In fact, experience would show that investigation would be hampered and made more difficult if the nature of the custody was not capable of alteration in the first 15 days. It might be necessary to send the accused to a hospital for examination, or to produce him before a Magistrate for recording a confession. In such cases, a useful precaution to take is to send the accused to judicial custody so that the confession might be free and without pressure. Another example is provided on the facts of this case for enabling an identification parade to be held in the jail. Another possibility is that the police may not require the prisoner immediately for lack of material which might be forthcoming later. In such a case the period of police custody might be shortened by remanding the prisoner to judicial custody while the police is collecting the necessary material for further investigation. There can be many examples of this type dependent on the circumstances of the case.

20. We are, therefore, of the view that the nature of the custody can be altered from judicial custody to police custody and vice versa during the first period of 15 days mentioned in S.167(2) of the Code. After 15 days, the accused can only be kept in judicial custody or any other custody as ordered by the Magistrate, but not the custody of the police.

21. In these circumstances, we have to accept this petition and set aside the order of the Magistrate. Now the question arises as to what further orders are necessary because the 15 days mentioned in Sec. 167(2) have already expired. We think the interests of justice demand that the Magistrate should take up this case and pass such order as he would have been able to pass on 4th Sept. 1981 if he had not been compelled to follow the judgement in Gian Singh's case (1981 Cri LJ 100) aforementioned. He will thus be able to pass an order directing custody of the police for the unexpired period out of 15 days as remained on 4th Sept. 1981. This order should be immediately conveyed to the Magistrate to pass such orders as he deems fit in accordance with the directions contained herein. Dasti.

Petition allowed.

JUDGEMENT

ORDER :- This application has been filed by the complainant against the order passed by the learned Additional Sessions Judge, Poona, confirming the order passed by the learned Judicial Magistrate, Anti-corruption, Poona, dismissing the complaint under S. 203 read with S. 161 of the Bombay Police Act.

2. The case for the prosecution was that P.S.I. Khan of the Bund Garden Police Station received a complaint of theft on 9-7-1958 from one Mohamed Nathu Mistry. During the investigation of that offence P.S.I. Khan arrested the complainant on 2nd August, 1958, but she was ultimately released on 6th August, 1958, as there was no sufficient evidence against her. The complainant then filed a complaint in the Court of the Judicial Magistrate, Anti-corruption, at Poona, against P.S.I. Khan on 5-2-1959 alleging that her arrest and detention from 2-8-1958 upto 6-8-1958 was mala fide and unlawful. The learned Judicial Magistrate referred that complaint to the police under S. 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code. After receiving the police report, the learned Magistrate dismissed the complaint as it was not filed within six months of the act complained of, as required by S. 161 (1) of the Bombay Police Act.

3. Against that order the complainant filed a revision application in the Sessions Court at Poona. The learned Additional Sessions Judge, after hearing the arguments, agreed with the conclusion reached by the learned Magistrate that the complaint was barred under S. 161 of the Bombay Police Act, inasmuch as it was filed on 5-2-1959, i.e., more than six months after the alleged wrongful detention by P.S.I. Khan and dismissed the application. It is against this order of the learned Additional Sessions Judge, that the present revision application has been filed by the complainant.

4. It was contended by the learned advocate for the complainant that the wrongful detention in this case started on 2nd August, 1958, and continued upto 6th August, 1958, that the detention was wrongful at every moment of such detention, and that the complaint filed by his client on 5-2-1959, was, therefore, within six months of the date of the act complained of, that is to say, within six months from 6th of August, 1958 on which date she was last detained by P.S.I. Khan and released. Mr. Rane, the learned Assistant Government Pleader, on the other hand, contended that the detention by P.S.I. Khan, even if wrongful, as alleged by the complainant, started on the date of the arrest of the complainant, namely, 2nd August, 1958 and ended on the very next day when the complainant was produced before the Magistrate for remand. He urged that on 3rd August, 1958, P.S.I. Khan applied for remand before the learned Magistrate for seven days on the ground that the investigation of the offence had not been completed, that the learned Magistrate granted a remand only for one day and that, by reason of the order of the learned Magistrate granting the remand, the detention by P.S.I. Khan ceased and the complainant was further detained in the police custody under the order of the learned Magistrate. Accordingly, he submitted, the complaint filed by the complainant on 5-2-1959 was three days late and, therefore, it was barred by limitation under S. 161 of the Bombay Police Act.

5. In my opinion, the contention raised by Mr. Rane, should be accepted. It is true that P.S.I. Khan arrested the complainant on 2nd August, 1958 and continued to keep her in police custody upto 6th August, 1958, but it must be noted that although he had power under the Criminal Procedure Code to arrest any person suspected of having committed an offence without a warrant, he could not detain that person in police custody for more than 24 hours. The provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, expressly require a police officer to produce the person whom he has arrested for commission of a cognizable offence before the Magistrate within 24 hours. If he fails to do it, he will be certainly guilty of wrongful detention of the person whom he has arrested. But once he produces the arrested person before the Magistrate within 24 hours as required by law and the Magistrate after applying his mind to the application for remand, made by the police officer grants the application and extends the period of detention either for the full period applied for, or for any lesser time, the detention of the arrested person after the order of the remand made by the Magistrate would in my opinion, no longer be the detention by the police officer himself on his own. He would be merely carrying out the orders of the Magistrate and the detention would be, in fact and in law, the detention under the orders of the Magistrate. In that view of the law, the complainant in this case could complain of a wrongful act on the part of P.S.I. Khan consisting of a wrongful arrest and detention as having occurred on 2nd August, 1958 and continued upto 3rd at the most. The complaint against him, therefore, should have been filed within six months of the latter date. In so far as, however, the complaint was filed in this case on 5-2-1959, a few days more than the period of six months allowed by S. 161 of the Bombay Police Act, the complaint was clearly barred. Accordingly, the view of the learned Magistrate as well as the learned Additional Sessions Judge, on this point seems to be right, and there is no reason for me to interfere with the orders that they have passed. The application is, therefore, dismissed and the Rule is discharged.

Rule discharged.

Judgement

ORDER :- This is a revision petition directed against the order of the Sessions Judge, dated 25-5-1963, by which he cancelled the bail granted to the petitioner by the S. D. M., Imphal West, on 8-5-1963 and directed the bail petition to be heard afresh and to be disposed of by the Additional District Magistrate, instead of by the S. D. M., I. W.

2. The facts which relate to this revision petition are as follows :

On 6-5-1963, at about 10-30 a.m. a F.I.R. was lodged in the Imphal Police Station, by one Manglem Singh, a student in the D. M. College, stating that at about 10-00 a.m. when he was going to College, he saw one P. Sarojini, a student of the B. A. Class in the said College being forcibly taken near the new Radio Station and carried away in a Jeep towards the south by some unknown persons and that he suspected that the girl might have been kidnapped against her will. This girl happens to be the daughter of one P. Mani Singh, Inspector of Police, C. I. D.5 Imphal. On 7-5-1963, a S. L of Police, applied to the S. D. M., T. W. for the issue of a search warrant under S. 100 Cr. P.C. for the recovery of the girl from the house of one R.K. Mangisana Singh of Sagol-band. The Magistrate issued a search warrant immediately to the O/C., Imphal Police Station and the O/C directed S. I. Nandakishore Singh to execute it. A Police force then proceeded to the house of R.K. Mangisana Singh, to effect the recovery of the girl.

When the police force were at the said house, the petitioner herein, as well as the girl sent up a joint petition to the Additional District Magistrate stating that hearing that a case has been lodged against them, they were ready to surrender before the A. D. M.. but that they could not surrender as some Police officials with a great force had surrounded them and that they therefore prayed that proper facility may be given to them to surrender before the Court. They also added that they had eloped together on 6-5-1963 with mutual consent and agreement. On this petition, the A. D. M. issued an order to the O/C Imphal Police Station to produce the girl before the Magistrate concerned direct. But it would appear that in the meantime, the girl was taken into custody and the petitioner was arrested for an offence under Section 366 I.P.C. and both of them were taken to the Imphal Police Station, which was just across the road from the Court of the S. D. M., I. W. From there, the girl was produced before the S. D. M., I. W. who sent the girl before the S. D. M., Bishenpur, for recording her statement under S. 164 Cr. P. C. at the request of the Police. In the statement so recorded the girl who is admittedly 20 years of age stated that she was going to College on 6-5-1963 and that at about 10-15 a.m. she was carried away by force in a Jeep without her consent. She also said that for about 2 or 3 years, she had been in love with the petitioner and that about a month ago he had asked her to elope, but that she refused requesting him to wait for some time. After the statement was recorded, the S. D. M., I. W. I entrusted the girl to the custody of her father.

3. The petitioner, who was arrested at 3-00 P. M. on 7-5-1963, was not produced before the Magistrate on that date, but was kept in Police custody. One Joychandra Singh, on behalf of the petitioner, moved a bail petition through counsel before the S. D. M. stating that it was a case of pure elopement, that the petitioner was quite innocent of kidnapping and that investigation of the case will not be hampered by his being enlarged on bail. The Magistrate forwarded this petition to the O/C Imphal Police Station immediately for report through the person, who moved for the bail. This action of the Magistrate in sending through the person who moved for the bail has been severely criticised by the Sessions Judge. It was received by the O/C on 7-5-1963 itself and he sent it to the I/O for a report, but no report was submitted to the Court on 7-5-1963 and the petitioner continued in Police custody.

It would appear that another bail application was thereupon prepared for the petitioner on the same day in which it was stated that the O/C has not submitted any report on the previous bail application, that in the meantime the statement of the girl, which was recorded under Section 164 Cr. P.C. supported the petitioner s case, though the statement was made under the influence of the guardian of the girl during her stay in Police custody before she was produced in Court and that the petitioner may be released on bail, his petition was moved in Court on 8-5-1963 at 11-00 A.M. and the Magistrate immediately issued an order to the O/C Imphal Police Station to submit a report along with the accused during Court hours and also directed that the statement of the girl under Section 164 Cr. P.C. and other relevant documents should also be produced. This order seemed to have been issued at 11 A.M. on 8-5-1963 through the normal official channel to the O/C whose Office was just across the road and it contains an endorsement by the O/C that it was received by him only on 9-5-1963 at, 11-00 a.m.

4. The petitioner was produced before the S. D. M., I. W. at 2-30 p.m. on 8-5-1963 with a report from the I/O stating that he was arrested at 3-00 p.m. on 7-5-1963, in connection with F.I.R. 386 (5) 63 dated 6-5-1963 under S. 366 I.P.C., that the investigation was going on and that he may be remanded to Jail custody for a period of 15 days to enable the completion of the investigation. It would appear that the statement of the girl recorded under Section 164 Cr. P.C., which was called for by the Magistrate in his order in the second bail petition moved on that day was also produced before the Magistrate. Rut the copy of the entries in the Police Diary relating to the case were not produced even though the Magistrate had personally asked the Prosecutor to produce them. The Magistrate waited till 5-30 p.m. but as the copy of the entries with diary were not produced till then, he passed an order granting bail to the petitioner. In the said order, he stated that the statement of the girl under S. 164 showed that she had prior relation with the petitioner, and that she had asked the petitioner to wait till she finished her education. The Magistrate criticised the Police for not producing the relevant papers under Section 167, Cri. P.C. and he further said that there was no report from the Police even opposing the bail, that the prosecution could not give any satisfactory reason why the petitioner should not be granted bail and that it was not the case of the prosecution that the petitioner would abscond or otherwise tamper with the Investigation and hence he did not see any reason why he should be remanded to Jail and why bail should be refused.

5. It would now appear that on 8-5-1963 itself the I/O had submitted a report to the Court through the O/C Imphal Police Station stating that the co-accused were absconding and if the petitioner was enlarged on bail at this initial stage of the investigation, it will be impossible to arrest the remaining accused as it would hamper further investigation and that therefore bail should be refused. This report contains on endorsement by the O/C on 8-5-1963 itself stating that the bail should be rejected as it would hamper the investigation if bail is granted. But this report was not submitted when the petitioner was produced in Court on 8-5-1963, but was sent to the Court only on 9-5-1963, the day after the bail as granted. With regard to the second bail petition, it was returned to the Court by the O/C Imphal Police Station on 13-5-1963, simply stating that as bail had already been granted, there was no necessity to submit the documents.

6. On the same day, namely, 13-5-1963, an application was moved before the Sessions Judge under Section 497(5), Cri. P.C. for cancelling the bail granted to the petitioner by the S. D. M. In this, it was mentioned that the petitioner was a desperate character already involved in a cheating case by false impersonation, that his conduct showed that there was strong apprehension that the crime would be repeated with the help of his associates, that his associates were still concealing themselves with the help of the petitioner and further that the petitioner was found to have contacted some of the important witnesses since his enlargement on bail in order to tamper with the prosecution evidence and that his remaining on bail would hamper investigation. It was further stated that the Magistrate did not give the prosecution a reasonable opportunity to place all the materials to oppose the bail petition. It was next elated that" though all the relevant and necessary materials were submitted to the Magistrate on 8-5-1963, with a prayer for remanding the petitioner to Jail custody, a copy of the entries in the Police Diary was not transmitted as that was the practice followed in that Court while forwarding an accused person to the said Court and that the order granting the bail was arbitrary and not warranted by law.

7. The learned Sessions Judge did not consider the question whether the Magistrate was justified on the material placed before him in granting the bail. Nor did he consider the reason mentioned in the petition for cancelling the bail. Instead, in his long order of 29 paragraphs.

he went on to give a certificate to the Police that their action in this matter was quite correct. He said that the Police had obeyed the direction of the Additional District Magistrate by producing the girl before the Magistrate concerned at 3-30 P.M., after her recovery at 3-00 P.M. and that there was no unnecessary delay in the production of the girl. He further said that the petitioner was arrested at 3-00 P.M. on 7-5-1963 and produced before the Magistrate on 8-5-1963 at about 2-00 P.M., that is, within 24 hours and that there was no illegality in his detention at the Police Station for less than 24 hours. He further said that it cannot be said that the Police had acted negligently in submitting their report on the first bail petition on 8-5-1963, which appeared to have reached the Magistrate only on 9-5-1963.

8. After giving the certificate to the Police of correct conduct on their part, the Sessions Judge proceeded to criticise the Magistrate. He said that the Magistrate acted improperly in sending the first bail application in original through a private party to the O/C Imphal Police Station. He next criticised the Magistrate for not fixing any time either in the first bail application or in the second bail application for a report by the Police and he therefore said that the Police cannot be called negligent in having sent the first report on 8-5-1963 and the second report on 13-5-1963, as, according to him, it was expected to take some time for the O/C Imphal Police Station to contact the I/O and get the necessary report and papers from him and to forward the same to the Court concerned. He then criticised the Magistrate for having dealt with the bail application when both the original bail petitions were with the Police for reports as, according to him, this deprived the prosecution of the necessary opportunity to oppose the bail applications. So, he said that the proper procedure for the Magistrate would have been to remand the petitioner to Jail custody and afterwards dispose of the bail petition after fixing a date for its disposal and giving necessary opportunity to the prosecution to oppose the bail.

9. He next found fault with the Magistrate for entertaining a second bail petition when the first bail petition was pending before him. He said that the Magistrate should not have disposed of the bail petition on 8-5-1963, even without waiting for the return of the bail petitions and. the relevant reports and papers. When it was pointed out to the Sessions

Judge that it was the duty of the Police to have filed the necessary papers as required under Section 167(1), Cri. P.C. when requesting for the remand of the accused and that when the Police did not do so the Magistrate was justified in granting bail, the Sessions Judge said that there was no practice in Manipur to file the copy of the entries in the Police Diary when the accused was produced for remand, but only to submit a report praying for remand. He further said that the provision in Section 167(1), Cri. P.C. for submission of a copy in the Diary was mandatory and the sooner the bad practice of not sending it along with the accused is done away with the better it would be. But he paid that the report praying for remand was before the Magistrate and that it was only for judicial custody and not for Police custody and hence the Magistrate should have given due consideration to the request for remand even though, it was not supported by a copy of the Police Diary.

10. He then proceeded to set aside the order of the Magistrate dated 8-5-1963, granting bail to the petitioner as, in his opinion, the Magistrate should not have entertained the second bail petition when the first bail petition was before him and as the Magistrate granted the bail when neither of the bail petitions nor the reports of the-Police on the said petitions were before him. Then, he remanded the matter to the Additional District Magistrate for disposing of the bail application afresh and stated that he was refraining, from making any comment which might reflect as to whether it was a fit case for granting or refusing bail.

11. This order was passed on a Saturday. It would appear that the petitioner was present in the Sessions Court at the time and immediately on the pronouncement of the order of the Sessions Judge, the Police wanted to arrest him in the Court premises itself and there was a tussle going on between him and the Police., as he wanted to surrender to the Court instead of being arrested by the Police. It would look as if the Police were displaying such excessive zeal in this matter, because the girl involved in this case happened to be the daughter of a Police Inspector attached to the C.I.D. and the Police therefore wanted to see that the petitioner was in their custody. Thereupon, the petitioner filed an application before the Sessions Judge surrendering himself to the custody of the Sessions Court and praying for remanding him to Judicial Custody till the bail application was disposed of by the Additional District Magistrate. On that petition, the Sessions-Judge ordered that the petitioner was allowed to surrender to the Sessions Court, that he be taken into custody and remanded to Jail custody direct from the Court and that a Process Server should accompany the Police party taking the petitioner to Jail custody, along with the remand order.

12. Thus, the petitioner was lodged in Jail on that Saturday evening and he had to remain there on Sunday also and he could come to this Court only on Monday the 27th May in revision. This Court immediately directed the release of the petitioner on bail while admitting the revision petition.

13. I am afraid that the Sessions Judge's order will not stand a moment's scrutiny. It has to be remembered that the petition before him was under Section 497(5), Cri. P.C. and what he had to consider was whether the petitioner, who had been released under the Section had to be arrested and committed to custody. He was not sitting in appeal or revision against the S.D.M.'s order for bail. What he had the jurisdiction to decide under Section 497(5) was whether at the time when he was moved after the grant of the bail by the S.D.M., the circumstances were such that the person concerned cannot be allowed to continue on bail and should be taken into custody.

14. A perusal of the Sessions Judge's order will, however, show that he did not consider this question. On the other hand, his order shows that he felt that he was sitting in revision over the Magistrate under Section 435(1) Cri. P.C. and his entire criticism of the Magistrate was made on that basis. Under Section 435, the Magistrate will be deemed to be inferior to the Sessions Judge for the purpose of Section 435(1). Unless, therefore, he was dealing with a revision against the order of the Magistrate under Section 435(1), he cannot criticise the procedure adopted by the Magistrate. Nor can he go into the various other matters which he has dealt with in dealing with the question of cancellation of bail under S. 497(5), He cannot also remand the matter of bail to the Additional District Magistrate when acting under Section 497(5). In fact, he had no authority to transfer the case from the S.D.M. to the Additional District Magistrate as if he was acting under Section 528(1-C), Cri. P.C. He cannot transfer a case suo motu under Section 528(1-C), but only on an application made to him in that behalf. There was no such application before him.

15. We have to remember that on 8-5-1963, what the Magistrate had to consider was whether he should authorise the detention of the petitioner under Section 167(2) Cri. P.C. in custody as prayed by the prosecution or whether the petitioner should be released on bail under S. 497(1) or (2), Cri. P.C. as prayed by the petitioner. What the Magistrate did in fact, decide was that his detention in Jail custody was not necessary under Section 167(2) and secondly that he should be released on bail under Section 497(2) as the Magistrate was not satisfied that there was reasonable ground for believing that the petitioner had committed a con-bailable offence, but that there were sufficient grounds for further enquiry into the guilt. If the learned Sessions Judge thought that the said orders of the Magistrate should be set aside and that the matter should be remanded for fresh disposal regarding the bail, it is clear that he cannot do so acting under Section 497(5), Cri. P.C. So he must be deemed to have acted under Section 435, Cri. P.C. If he was acting under Section 435, he had no jurisdiction to set aside the order of the Magistrate granting bail or to remand the case or to transfer it to the Additional District Magistrate. What he can do at best was to report the matter under Section 438, Cri. P.C. for the orders of this Court recommending that the order should be set aside. Thus, in setting aside the order of the Magistrate and in remanding the case and in directing the transfer of the case, the Sessions Judge has acted illegally by assuming a jurisdiction, which he did not possess under Section 497(5), Cri. P.C.

16. Under that Section what the Seasons Judge had to decide was whether the person to whom bail was granted by the Magistrate under Section 497 should be arrested and committed to custody. It is exactly this which the Sessions Judge failed to do. The request to him by the prosecution was to cancel the bail on various grounds mentioned in the petition. The learned Judge had to consider whether any or all of those grounds were made out which should cause him to cancel the bail. But he did not consider any of those grounds and stated specifically that he was not considering them or even expressing his opinion, as he was sending the case to the Additional District Magistrate to consider the said question. This he cannot do acting under Section 497(5). His order has therefore to be set aside as one passed without any jurisdiction.

17. In a matter corning up before him under Section 497(5), Cri. P.C., the Sessions Judge is not sitting in revision over the Magistrate's order and so he should not indulge in any criticism of the Magistrate. Further, the remarks against the Magistrate were really not justified. His first remark was that the Magistrate should not have sent the first bail application made by the petitioner on 7-5-1963 through the applicant to the Police. We have to remember the circumstances under which the Magistrate had to send it through the applicant. The petitioner was arrested at 3-00 P.M. on 7-5-1963 and he was immediately brought to the Police Station which was just cross the, road from the Court where he had to be produced. When the petitioner was arrested the Police Officer knew that he cannot complete his investigation within 24 hours. In such a, case, S. 167(1), Cri. P.C. provides for the transmission forthwith of a copy of the entries in the Police. Diary relating to the case and for the production of the accused before such Magistrate. Special emphasis has to be laid on the words "forthwith" in Section 167(1). The learned Sessions Judge seems to think that this would authorise the detention by the Police upto a period of 24 hours after the arrest. This is totally incorrect.

18. The Criminal Procedure Code does not authorise detention by the police for 24 hours after the arrest. Sections 60 and 61, Cri. P.C. make this quite clear. Section 60 provides that a Police Officer making an arrest without warrant shall, without unnecessary delay take or send the person arrested before a Magistrate. Section 61 repeats this by saying that no Police Officer shall detain in custody a person arrested without warrant for a longer period than under S. 11 the circumstances of the case is reasonable, and such period shall not, in the absence of a special order of a Magistrate under Section 167, exceed twenty-four hours exclusive of the time necessary for the journey from the place of arrest to the Magistrate's Court. Thus, the twenty-four hours prescribed under Section 61 is the outermost limit beyond which a person cannot be detained in Police custody. It is certainly not an authorisation for the Police to detain him for twenty-four hours in their custody. It is only in a case where a Police Officer considers that the investigation can be completed within the period of twenty-four hours used by Section 61 that such detention for twenty-four hours is permitted. This is clear from S. 167(1), Cri. P.C. Thus, when the Police Officer know in this case that he cannot complete the investigation within twenty-four hours, the detention of the petitioner in custody in the Imphal Police Station which is just opposite the Court where the Magistrate sits was totally illegal.

19. The decision State v. Ram Autar Chaudhry, AIR 1955 All 138, in dealing with Sec. 61,

Cri. P.C. states that Section 61 does not empower a Police Officer to keep an arrested person in custody a minute longer than is necessary for the purpose of investigation and it does not give him an absolute right to keep a person in custody till 24 hours. I would go even further and say on a construction of Sections 60, 61 and 167(1). Cri. P.C. that unless a Police Officer considers that he can complete the investigation within a period of 24 hours, it is his duty to produce the accused forthwith before the Magistrate. As in this case the Police Officer knew that he cannot complete the investigation within 24 hours and as he was detaining the accused in the Police Station, which is just opposite the Court house, it was his duty to have produced the petitioner before the Magistrate on 7-5-1963 itself instead of keeping him in Police custody.

It was not explained why his detention was necessary for 24 hours. It is particularly abhorrent in this case in view of the fact that the girl involved in the case was the daughter of a Police Officer and the Police appeared to be anxious to retain the custody of the petitioner as long as possible. It was for this reason that when bail was immediately moved on 7-5-1963 itself, the Magistrate sent the original application itself with his order through the applicant for immediate service on the O/C in charge of the Police Station, which was just across the road. No doubt, it would have been more proper if it had been sent through the usual official channel. But we know that service is bound to be delayed if sent through official channel. In this very case, the second bail petition moved at 11-00 A.M. on 8-5-1963 which was sent by the Magistrate through the official channel to the Police Station just across the road was shown as received in the Police Station only on 9-5-1963 at 11.00 a.m. Thus where expedition is required and such expedition can be achieved by the Magistrate only in this manner by sending it through the party concerned to the Police Station across the road, I am not prepared to blame the Magistrate. After all the purpose to be achieved was quick service and quick service was admittedly achieved and the bail petition was in the hands of the O/C on 7-5-1963 itself.

20. Much was made by the Sessions Judge of the fact that the Magistrate did not fix any time for Police report regarding the bail. One does not know why any time should have been fixed at al] as the Police had to produce the accused in Court for the purpose of remand and they knew full well that the report had to be submitted when they produced the accused- in Court, as the question of bail will have to be considered then. It was for the Police to explain why no report was submitted on the first bail petition, at least when the accused was produced in Court at 2.00 p.m. on 8-5-1963.

21. It is meaningless to say that because the Magistrate did not fix any time for the Police report, the Police thought that they could take their own time to make the report. This is a matter relating to the liberty of the citizen and if no time is fixed by the Magistrate for the report, it means that the report must be submitted immediately. There seems to be a notion among the Police that it is their duty to prolong the detention of accused persons either in Police custody or in Jail custody and that in this matter the duty of the Police should always clash with the duty of the Court. It is better that they disabuse themselves of this notion. It is time that the Police understood that citizens in Independent India have a fundamental right of liberty and that it is as much the duty of the Police as that of the Courts to safeguard such right and that under no circumstances should the Police pray for detention of a person unless it is absolutely necessary for the purpose of the investigation of a case. If they understand this aspect of their duty, I think unnecessary opposition to bail applications and unnecessary applications for remand would cease.

22. It was because, the Police failed to produce the petitioner in Court on 7-5-1963 or to send any report on the first bail application that a second bail application was moved on 8-5-1963 at 11-00 a.m. The learned Sessions Judge seems-to think that a second bail application should net have been entertained by the Magistrate when, the first bail application had not been disposed of and was awaiting Police report. Here, he has blundered. Section 497, Cri. P.C. does not ton-template any written application for bail at all. When a person accused of any non-bailable offence is arrested or detained without warrant, by an Officer in charge of a Police Station, or appears or is brought before a Court, he can either himself or through a lawyer apply even orally for bail. Such being the case, any written application for bail is only intended to place on record that the accused has moved for bail. The Sessions Judge is wrong in thinking that there should be any such formality of a first application for bail being disposed of and then alone a second application for bail being entertained. It was because the first application could not be disposed of on account of the delay by the Police in submitting a report that the second application had to be filed. It was as the application itself would bow only a reminder to the Magistrate of the desire for bail and there is nothing wrong in making such an application. There is noting wrong or illegal in making successive applications for bail, when the accused person remains in custody Such application should be disposed of by the Court without any delay and it is the duty of the Police to co-operate with the Court in doing so.

23. I am unable to understand the Sessions Judge's observations that when a person, who has been arrested applied for bail and the petition was sent to the Police for report, the Magistrate should remand the person to Jail custody until the report of the Police was received and until the prosecution was given a proper opportunity, to oppose the bail. This observation seems to indicate that the Sessions' Judge has not understood the guarantee of liberty to a citizen under the Constitution and also under the Criminal Procedure Code. When an arrested person is brought before a Magistrate, he has to decide whether he should remand the person to Jail custody under Section 167(2) Cr. P.C. as requested by the Police and at the same time he has to decide whether the request of the person for bail should be granted. In order to decide the question of remand, he must be satisfied on a perusal of the entries in the Police Diary that there were grounds for believing that the accusation or information against the accused was well founded and that the Police have exercised their right of arresting without warrant legally and further that it was necessary for the purpose of investigation that the accused should be remanded to custody. Unless, the Magistrate is satisfied on all these points, he cannot remand the accused to Jail custody. It is for this purpose that Section 167(1) enjoins that a copy of the entries in the Police Diary should be transmitted to Court. But admittedly this was not transmitted in the present case when the petitioner was produced in Court. Instead, what is called a remand report requesting that the accused may be remanded to Jail Custody was sent.

24. What was stated in the petition to the Sessions Judge was that this was the practice followed in the said Court in forwarding the accused. Thus, the Police were not even accepting that they were at fault in not transmitting a copy of the Police Diary to Court, but were trying to throw the blame on the Magistrate for indulging in a wrong practice of accepting a remand report instead of a copy of the entries in the Police Diary. We know that in this case the Magistrate insisted on the copy of the Police Diary being produced in order to decide whether there should be a remand and his order shows that he asked the prosecution to produce all the relevant documents under Section 167 Cr. P.C., and that he waited till 5-30 p.m. on 8-5-1963 to enable the Police to produce the same. It was only when the Police failed to produce the said documents that he ordered the release of the petitioner on bail. Thus, it is clear that in order to cover up their failure to produce the necessary documents into Court, the Police were trying to throw the blame on the Magistrate. Such an argument cannot be countenanced even for a moment.

25. This Court has given instructions in many judgments to the Police and to the Magistrates that the provisions of Section 167 Cr. P.C. should be scrupulously observed, that the copy of the Police Diary should be produced when the accused is brought to Court, and that the Magistrate cannot remand the accused without satisfying himself that a remand was necessary on a perusal of the said diary. The learned Advocate, who appeared for the petitioner stated that the decision of this Court, Gaibidingpao Kabui v. Union Territory of Manipur, AIR 1963 Manipur 12 was brought to the notice of the Magistrate in the course of the arguments in this case, in which in paragraph 13, this Court had pointed out that if the Police do not transmit to the Court a copy of the entries in the diary relating to the case, to satisfy the Magistrate that there are grounds for believing that the accusation or information is well founded, and that a remand is absolutely necessary for the purpose of investigation, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to direct the detention of the arrested person. This decision is dated 15-2-1962 and it has been communicated to all the Magistrates. Hence, there is no doubt that no Magistrate would remand an accused person in violation of Section 167 Cr. P.C. In this particular case, the Magistrate had directed the prosecution on 8-5-1963 to produce the documents referred to in Section 167(1) Cr. P.C. and waited for them till 5-30 P.M. and the Police had deliberately failed to produce the documents. Thus, the talk of the illegal practice of this Magistrate is totally unfounded.

26. Thus, when the copy of the entries in the diary were not transmitted to the Court as required under Section 167(1) Cr. P.C., in spite of the Court waiting till 5-30 P.M., the Magistrate had no other option but to release the petitioner. It was not even necessary that a bail bond should have been taken. Section 63 Cr. P.C. provides that no person who has been arrested by a Police Officer shall be discharged except on his own bond, or on bail, or under the special order of a Magistrate. Thus, on failure to produce the copy of the Police Diary as ordered, the Magistrate could have straightway released the arrested person even without taking any bond from him or even without bail. There is an impression among the Police in this Union Territory that the remand of an arrested person should be done by the Magistrate is a matter of course. The sooner this impression is got rid of, the better it will be. I wish to impress on all the Magistrates as well as on the Police that it is the duty of the Police to comply with the provisions of Section 167(1) Cr. P.C. and that the Magistrate should insist on such strict compliance and if the Police do not satisfy the Magistrate with the documents that a remand was necessary, for the purpose of investigation, the Magistrate may release the accused.

27. Thus, the position was that even without taking bail from the petitioner, the Magistrate would have been right in releasing him. It would have been wrong on the part of the Magistrate to have sent him to Jail custody until the Police chose to submit their reports on the bail applications, as the Sessions Judge would have it. When therefore instead of releasing the accused as the Magistrate could have done, the Magistrate only granted him bail, and that too when the prosecution did not show any grounds why bail should be refused, it is difficult to understand the observation of the Sessions Judge.

28. As I stated at the beginning what the Sessions Judge had to consider in the application before him was to see whether at the time when the application was made there was sufficient reason for cancellation of the bail and for remanding the petitioner to custody. I have said that in view of the failure of the Police to act in accordance with the provisions of Section 167(1) Cr. P.C., there was no cause to remand the petitioner. Hence, the question of cancellation of his bail does not arise. Even on the merits of the petition, I do not find any reader for cancellation of the bail. In the so-called remand report, sent to the Court on 8-5-1963, no reason was mentioned why the petitioner should be remanded to custody. All that was stated was that he may be remanded to Jail custody for 15 days so as to enable the Police to complete the investigation. It was not stated how or why it was necessary that he should be remanded in order to complete the investigation. The learned Sessions Judge seems to think that remand to Jail custody of an arrested person is the normal thing for the Magistrate to do and that it was for the accused to give reasons for his release on bail. This is a mistaken impression. The liberty of the citizen is sacred and if that liberty is to be interfered with, it is for the Police to show that unless that liberty is curtailed, there cannot be proper investigation of the case. Thus, when this was not shown in this case, the Magistrate was right in not remanding the petitioner to custody.

29. When we come to the next document, namely, the report of the Police dated 8-5-1963 on the first bail application, which was received by tile Court only on 9-5-7963 after granting the half we find it stated that the co-accused were absconding and that the Police were trying to arrest them and if the petitioner was enlarged or bail at that stage of the investigation, it would not be possible for the Police to arrest the remaining accused. Thus, this was an additional plea made for the first time in this report which was not mentioned in the original remand report and which evidently was not urged before the Magistrate when he granted bail. I find from the records, that 3 other accused were arrested by the Police on 9-5-1963, even though the petitioner was released on 8-5-1963. Thus, this vague allegation that it will not be possible for the Police to arrest the other accused if the petitioner was released on bail, cannot be taken seriously by a Court and it is not sufficient to deprive a person of his liberty.

30. When next we come to the petition filed before the Sessions Judge, we find that further reasons are mentioned for cancelling the bail. They are that the petitioner was involved in a cheating case previously, that he is a man of desperate character, that he was likely to kidnap the girl with the help of other associates of similar desperate character and further that the accused was found to have contacted some of the important witnesses since he was enlarged on bail. No details are mentioned as to the important witnesses, the petitioner was said to have contacted. Such vague allegations are not sufficient to cancel the bail. The fact that the petitioner was involved in a cheating case previously is again no reason why bail should be refused in the present case. As I pointed out, the Police have been going on adding more and more reasons in their desperate attempt to see that the petitioner was deprived of his liberty.

We have to remember that this is a case of alleged abduction brought by the Police against the petitioner of a girl who is the daughter of a Police Officer. We cannot also forget the fact that admittedly the petitioner and the girl aged 20 have been in love for 2 or 3 years. We must further remember that it is a common feature in Manipur for a boy and girl who like each other to elope with a view to later marriage. In this state of affairs, to call the petitioner a desperate character shows only that the Police are taking an extra interest in this case, perhaps, on account of the fact that the girl's father happened to be a Police Officer. The learned Sessions Judge was fully aware of this, but still he has not referred to it at all in his order. There is no doubt in my mind that this is not a case where the bail should have been cancelled and the order of the Magistrate of using to remand the petitioner to Jail custody and granting him bail should have been set aside.

31. For the reasons mentioned above the order of the Sessions Judge is set aside and the order of the Magistrate dated 8-5-1963 is restored and it is confirmed.

Appeal allowed.

Judgement

ORDER :- Though this is a third bail application under Section 439, Cr. P. C., but it requires serious consideration due to circumstances developed later on.

The petitioner is facing trial in Sessions Case No. 53/90 in the court of Addl. Sessions Judge No. 1, Alwar under Sections 498-A and 304-B, I.P.C.

While rejecting the second bail application this Court had observed as under:--

"The contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner is that the petitioner is in jail since June, 1990 and not a single witness has been examined so far though the charges were framed on 23-10-1990. It is the duty of the trial Court to see that no undue delay is caused in the trial of a Sessions Case, and all efforts should be made that after framing of the charges, the trial is completed within two or three months, which had been the usual practice. I expect from the trial Court that all efforts shall be made to complete the trial expeditiously in Sessions Cases, not only in this case but in other cases also in which the accused persons are in jail."

2. There is no dispute that Smt. Sunita committed suicide by swallowing some poisonous pill. The report of the incident was made at Police Station Alwar on March, 31, 1990 by Sh. Roshanlal, the father of the deceased. In the report, an allegation was also made about the demand of dowry by the petitioner and the co-accused Smt. Sharda. The petitioner is the husband of the deceased.

3. The contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner is that in spite of the earlier order of this Court, no progress has been made in the trial of the case. He submits that the petitioner is in jail since June, 1990 and about fourteen months have passed since then, but practically no progress has been made in the trial. The learned counsel submits that the conduct of the petitioner indicates his innocence, in as much as, when he came to know about the illness of his wife he immediately provided her medical aid and when her condition deteriorated, she was shifted to the hospital by him. The learned counsel argues that a day prior to the incident, the petitioner had taken the deceased to her parent's house on the festival of 'Gangor' and they had gone on a bi-cycle. According to the learned counsel, in such cases it has become the fashion and practice to make false accusation of the demand of dowry, though in the community of the petitioner no such demand is made on the part of bridegroom. The learned counsel submits that in fact, in Mali-community, the bridegroom has to pay money to the bride's father for the marriage of his daughter.

4. I would not like to make any comment on the merits of the case, but there are some striking features which are alarming and I would like to highlight the same in this order. The manner in which the trial of the present case has proceeded is not only shocking and painful, but it also demonstrates slackness and indiffernce towards the duties by the Presiding Officers.

5. Some important dates relevant for the decision of this petition and various relevant order-sheets from the file of the trial court may be referred :

The case was registered at Police Station Alwar on March 31, 1990. The police, after completion of the investigation, submitted a charge-sheet in the month of July, 1990. Then, the case was committed by the Chief Judicial Magistrate and the record of the case was received in the court of Sessions Judge on Oct. 8, 1990. The learned Sessions Judge transferred the case to the court of Addl. Sessions Judge No. 1, Alwar and fixed the next date as 23rd Oct. 1990. On 23rd Oct. 1990, the trial Judge framed charges against the petitioner and the co-accused Smt.Sharda. Thereafter, he fixed the next date as January 9 and 10, 1991 for recording the statements of the prosecution witnesses. On Jan. 9, 1991 no prosecution witness was present, as such, the case was adjourned to Jan. 10, 1991. On Jan. 10, 1991 also no prosecution witness was present and the learned Judge fixed the next date as 12th and 13th March, 1991, for recording statement of the prosecution witnesses. On 12th and 13th March, 1991, it appears that some witnesses were present, but the Judge did not record their statements on a lame execuse that he was under transfer orders. The next date was fixed as April 30, 1991. On April 30, 1991, three prosecution witnesses were present, but their statements could not be recorded as the accused petitioner was not produced in court by the jail authorities on the ground of his being sent to hospital for treatment. Consequently, the next date was fixed as July 12, 1991. On July 12, 1991 statement of only one witness was recorded and the next date has been fixed as Aug. 22, 1991 for recording the statements of other witnesses.

6. It is really disturbing that the trial courts are so unaware of liberties of the citizens. Now, it is a settled proposition of law that expeditious criminal trial is a fundamental right of the accused, especially when he is in jail. No accused can be kept in jail for uncertain period, as an under-trial prisoner, especially when there is no fault on his part. In criminal cases in which the accused is in jail, it is the duty of the Presiding Officer to complete the trial as expeditiously as possible and to record the statements of the prosecution witnesses without any delay, rather day to day; and all efforts are to be made through the police agency to secure the attendance of the witnesses on the date fixed for recording their statements. It is also his duty not to grant adjournment unless it is found extremely necessary. Even if the case has to be adjourned, then the next date should not be after a long period.

7. In the instant case, I find that the case was committed to the Court of Sessions in the month of Oct. 1990. The charges were framed on Oct. 23, 1990. The trial Judge fixed Jan 9 and 10, 1991 as the next dates for recording the prosecution evidence i.e. after more than two and half months. On these two dates not a single prosecution witness was present and the trial Judge adjourned the case and fixed dates as March 12 and 13, 1991 without caring that the petitioner is in jail and the case should not have been adjourned for such a long period.

On March 12 and 13, 1991, some witnesses were present. The Presiding Officer was also there, but he did not choose to record their statements on a lame excuse of his being under transfer orders. Nothing can be more shocking and painful for me to notice that the statements of the witnesses could not be recorded though the Presiding Officer and the witnesses were available on the ground that the Presiding Officer was under transfer orders. Till a Presiding Officer does not give charge, he is expected to work and recording the statements of the witnesses can hardly be a matter of any grievance to anybody. It only shows that the Presiding Officer did not want to work on a lame excuse.

On April 30, 1991, the accused-petitioner was not produced in the Court by the police on the ground that he had been sent to a hospital for treatment. Though, the Court was bound to adjourn the case on this ground but the shocking fact is that the Presiding officer again gave the next date after two and half months.

8. It appears that in the instant case the Presiding Officers have completely forgotten their duties towards the poor accused who is in jell.

I would like to draw the attention of the subordinate courts towards the General Rules (Criminal) 1980.

Chapter (IV) in the General Rules (Criminal) 1980 provides the procedure and manner of 'trials in court of Sessions'.

Just for the guidance and to referesh the memory of the subordinate courts, I may refer some relevant Rules. Rule 39 provides that when an order of commitment for trial has been made, the Magistrate shall at once report the fact to the Court to which commitment is made by a letter in the prescribed form; and shall within eight days from making the said order, submit the entire record to the Court of Sessions and shall send material exhibits and articles within fornight thereof together with a calendar in the prescribed form. (Emphasis provided).

Then, Rule 42 provides that Sessions cases should be disposed of with the greatest possible expedition and that Sessions Judge should reserve particular number of days in a week for sessions work.

Rule 43 provides expeditious disposal of Sessions cases, which runs as under :-

"Rule 43 - Expeditious disposal of Sessions trials should ordinarily be held in order in which commitments are made. The Presiding Officer may however exercise his discretion in the matter of giving priority to certain cases particularly cases involving capital sentence subsequently received or where the accused is in jail. Once a sessions trial is opened the Sessions Judge shall see that it is disposed of in the same session and not adjourned to next session. The sessions cases shall be taken up day to day until all the witnesses in attendance have been examined and discharged. The sessions Judge shall take necessary steps to get the summons served on the witnesses in time and if necessary the Superintendent of Police of the district may be asked to make special efforts to secure the attendance of the witnesses. A sessions trial should not be adjounred or postponed except in exceptional circumstances for reasons to recorded in writing."

(Emphasis supplied)

The aforesaid Rules indicate that Session trials should be disposed of in a most expeditious manner and once a session trial is opened, it is the duty of the concerned Judge to see that it is disposed of in thesame session. The case has to be taken day do day until all the witnesses in the cases are examined. It is also the duty of the Presiding Officer to take necessary steps to get the summons served on the witnesses in time and, if necessary, the Superintendent of Police of the district may be asked to make special efforts to secure the attendance of the witnesses. Further, the trial shall not be adjourned or postponed except in exceptional circumstances for reasons to be recorded in writing.

9. In spite of the aforesaid, Rules, the present case has been dealt with in a most casual manner. Keeping utmost judicial restrain I can only express my displeasure about the manner in which the trial has proceeded in this case.

I can expect not only from the Presiding Officer of the Addl. Sessions Judge, Alwar, but from other Sessions Judges also not to forget and ignore the aforesaid Criminal Rules which are meant for their guidance. These rules are meant to be followed. These rules assume importance when the accused is in jail and who can rightly claim an expeditious trial as his fundamental right provided by the Constitution of India.

10. Yet another shocking feature of this case is that in spite of the specific directions given by this Court by order dated April 15, 1991 to complete the trial expeditiously within two or three months, the same has been disobeyed. The manner in which adjournments have been granted and that too by giving long dates indisputedly establishes that the disobedience of the aforesaid order of this court is wilful and deliberate. Subordinate courts are bound to obey the orders of the higher courts. This is also a judicial propriety which is necessary to be strictly followed to maintain judicial system intact. If the orders of the higher courts are wilfully and deliberately disobeyed by the subordinate court it amounts to a contempt of the court.

In the course of arguments, at one time I had thought to issue a conempt notice to the concerned Presiding Officer/Officers, but having come to know that the earlier Presiding Officer has been transferred and the new Presiding Officer has taken the charge sometime in the month of March-April, 1991, it shall be suffice to record a warning against them to be vigilant and careful in following the directions of the superior courts.

In the aforesaid background, I have no option, but to release the petitioner on bail under S. 439, Cr. P.C.

Consequently, this petition is allowed and it is hereby directed that the petitioner Jai Singh S/o Pyarelal shall be released on bail provided he furnishes a personal bond in the sum of Rs. 10,000/- (ten thousand only) with two sureties in the sum of Rs. 5,000/- (five thousand only) each to the satisfaction of the trial court for his appearance in the said court or any other court on all the dates of hearing and as and when called upon to do so during the pendency of the trial in this case.

A copy of this order be kept in the personal file of the concerned Presiding Officer.

The Dy. Registrar (Judicial) is also directed to send cyclo-style copy of this order to all Sessions Judges/Addl. Sessions Judges for their guidance and to draw their attention towards Chapter (IV) 'trials in courts of Sessions' contained in General Rules (Criminal) 1980, which are meant to be strictly followed.

Petition allowed.

Sita Ram Chandu Lall …. vs…. Malkiat Singh

Criminal Revn. No. 364 of 1954, D/- 7 -9 -1955, against judgment of S.J., Sangrur, D/- 30 -10 -1954,

Penal Code (45 of 1860), S.220 - WRONGFUL CONFINEMENT - Malicious confinement- Malkiat Singh respondent is in police service and at the particular time he was posted as an A.S.I, at police-station Sangrur - he arrested complainant with a view to put pressure on the person confined to come to terms with a certain person in whom the accused is interested - the offence for which Sita Ram was arrested was a bailable one - The bail, though offered, was not accepted - respondent in going to the mandi, arresting Sita Bam there and taking him hand-cuffed through the bazar was simply to put pressure upon him to come to terms with one Bhagwati Prasad. It has also been found that the offence for which Sita Ram was arrested was a bailable one - The bail, though offered, was not accepted. The learned Sessions Judge concurred with these findings. Bhagwati Prashad was complainant in the case in which Sita Ram was arrested and Malkiat Singh was a tenant of Bhagwati Parshad. The unlawful commitment to confinement was wilful, without any excuse and with a view to put pressure on Sita Ram to come to terms with Bhagwati Parshad, in whom Malkiat Singh was interested. -where the unlawful commitment to confinement is wilful, without any excuse and with a view to put pressure on the person confined to come to terms with a certain person in whom the accused is interested, the accused can safely be said to have acted "maliciously." (Para 6)

To maintain law and order is the principal function of a police Officer. It is simply reprehensible if he himself takes the role of a lawbreaker and acts in flagrant disregard of his duties as a public servant. Malkiat Singh respondent did no less. He was actuated by youthful spirit and false notions of his newly gained authority. The high-handed manner in which he acted, leaves no doubt that he did not deserve to be given the benefit of S. 562(1), Cr. P.C. and the discretion was improperly exercised

ORDER :- In this case the respondent Malkiat Singh was convicted by Magistrate I Class, Sangrur (with enhanced powers under S. 30, Cr. P.C.) under Ss. 220 and 342, IPC and was released under S. 562, Cr. P.C. on probation of good conduct on entering into a bond of Rs. 1000/- with one surety for one year. The order was maintained by Sessions Judge, Sangrur, in revision by Sita Ram complainant. Sita Ram now comes in revision to this Court.

2. When this revision was admitted Malkiat Singh respondent was directed "to show cause why he should not be sentenced to imprisonment or fine or both". In response to this notice, Shri Jagan Nath, learned counsel for the respondent has taken me through the facts of the case with a view to show that the conviction itself was not 'justified and is liable to be set aside.

His contention is that since a notice has been issued to the respondent under S. 439(2), Cr. P.C., the respondent is entitled "to show cause against his conviction" as well, as provided by Sub-S. (6) of the Section.

3. Section 439(2) says :

"No order under this section shall be made to the prejudice of the accused unless he has had an opportunity of being heard either personally or by pleader in his own defence." and its Sub-S. (6) lays down :

"Notwithstanding anything contained in this section, any convicted person to whom an opportunity has been given under Sub-S. (2) of showing cause why his sentence should not be enhanced shall, in showing cause, be entitled also to show cause against his conviction".

4. Where a notice for enhancement of sentence is issued the accused is entitled to show cause against his conviction by attacking the findings of facts in the same manner and to the same extent in which he could have done if he had appealed against his conviction. But Sub-S. (6) is confined to a particular notice issued to the accused under Sub-S. (2).

It does not apply to every kind of notice under Sub-S. (2). It presupposes that the accused has not only been convicted but has been sentenced as well, and notice for enhancement of sentence has been issued. Enhancement of sentence presumes that there is a sentence to be enhanced.

5. Where a person, though convicted, is directed to be released on probation of good conduct under S. 562, the Court does not pass a sentence. On the other hand, what S. 562, Cr. P.C. expressly provides is that

"the Court may, instead of sentencing him at once to any punishment, direct that he be released on his entering into a bond andc. andc." If in such a case a notice is issued calling upon, the accused to show cause why a sentence be not passed against him, as in the present case, it cannot be said that the Court is going to enhance the sentence already passed within the meaning of S. 439(6), so as to entitle the accused to be heard on merits of the case. The present is in fact a notice under S. 562(3) and hence would not be covered by S. 439(6) Malkiat Singh respondent cannot, therefore be allowed to reagitate the findings of fact arrived at by the courts below.

6. In spite of it, I have heard Shri Jagan Nath on facts as well. He raises the very same points which have been elaborately discussed and decided against him by the trial court as well as by the Sessions Judge. It would be an unnecessary repetition to deal with every one of them once again, since I am in full agreement with their findings. It is further contended that neither of the Courts below gave a clear finding that Malkiat. Singh accused kept Sita Ram complainant in illegal confinement "corruptly or maliciously", and this being a necessary ingredient is an offence under S. 220, IPC, conviction of the respondent for that offence is against law and liable to be set aside.

It is correct that the actual words of the section "corruptly or maliciously" have not been used, but, on a consideration of all the facts of the case, the learned trial Magistrate did express his view that the action of Malkiat Singh respondent in going to the mandi, arresting Sita Bam there and taking him hand-cuffed through the bazar was simply to put pressure upon him to come to terms with one Bhagwati Prasad. It has also been found that the offence for which Sita Ram was arrested was a bailable one. The bail, though offered, was not accepted. The learned Sessions Judge concurred with these findings. Bhagwati Prashad was complainant in the case in which Sita Ram was arrested and Malkiat Singh was a tenant of Bhagwati Parshad. The unlawful commitment to confinement was wilful, without any excuse and with a view to put pressure on Sita Ram to come to terms with Bhagwati Parshad, in whom Malkiat Singh was interested. In the circumstances, Malkiat Singh can safely be said to have acted "maliciously". The contention is consequently rejected.

7. Now, coming to the merits of this petition, Malkiat Singh respondent is in police service and at the particular time he was posted as an A.S.I, at police-station Sangrur. On 12-5-1953, Bhagwati Parshad lodged a report at the said police-station under S. 341, IPC complaining that Sita Ram and one Bhagwan Das did not allow him to enter a part of his own house and forcibly turned him out of the same. A portion of this house was leased to Sita Ram for some time but it was alleged that he had vacated it and passed on its possession to Bhagwati Parshad.

Sita Ram, on the other hand, asserted that he still continued to remain in possession of the house as tenant and that for some time past the landlord was depriving him of the usual amenities with a view to force him to vacate it. The dispute gave rise to cross-cases between Bhagwati Parshad and Sita Ram. The former brought a complaint under S. 145, Cr. P.C. and the latter presented an application under S. 10, Rent Control Ordinance. And then, Bhagwati Parshad lodged the present report under S. 341, IPC on 12-5-53.

Malkiat Singh was deputed to investigate. On 14-5-53 he arrested Sita Ram and Bhagwan Dass, the two accused mentioned in the report. The offence was bailable and bail was actually offered. It was not accepted. Sita Ram and Bhagwan Das were hand-cuffed and paraded in that condition to the police-station through the mandi. There, they were not released on bail for about an hour.

8. Section 562(1), Cr. P.C. consists of two parts the first where the offender is above the age of twenty-one, and the second where the person is below that age or a woman. In the first case, the section applies if the offence for which the accused is convicted is punishable with imprisonment for not more than seven years; and the second, if the offence is not punishable with death or transportation for life.

Even where these conditions are fulfilled the person convicted cannot, as of right, claim the benefit of the provisions of this section. The fact that it is his first conviction would not alone be sufficient. The discretion is to be exercised having regard to the circumstances in which the crime was committed and the age, character and antecedents of the offender. It needs a considerable sense of responsibility. Misplaced leniency and sympathy for the accused are matters which should never be allowed to come in and influence the court's mind. Otherwise, the very object for which, punishments are provided would be defeated.

9. In the present case the grounds relied upon by the trial Magistrate are (1) that the accused is a young man of less than twenty years, and (2) that he "appears to have committed the offence due to his not being experienced". The learned Sessions Judge dismissed the complainant's, petition for revision with the following observations :

"M. Malkiat Singh is a young man of 20 years of age and an Assistant Sub Inspector of Police. It was not conducive in the interest of justice that a young man who probably had committed a lapse just due to inexperience, should be sent among, hardened criminals and jeopardize his career for all times to come."

10. There is nothing on the record regarding the actual age of the accused. If the remarks were based on observation, the age has surely been underestimated. On my inquiring the respondent, he gave his date of birth as 27-4-1927. He is thus above twenty-eight now and was more than twenty-six at the time of the incident. This is exactly what he appears to be.

His case, if other conditions are satisfied, would, therefore, fall under first part of S. 562(1), Cr. P.C. and not the second as contemplated by the courts below. That the offence was committed due to lack of experience is contrary to the learned Magistrate's own findings on the main features of the case, one of which is that there was a particular motive behind the respondent's action.

11. The additional ground taken into consideration by the learned Sessions Judge fails to impress me. The respondent is long past that age. He is well educated and sufficiently experienced to guard himself against the influence of "hardened criminals".

12. To maintain law and order is the principal function of a police Officer. It is simply reprehensible if he himself takes the role of a lawbreaker and acts in flagrant disregard of his duties as a public servant. Malkiat Singh respondent did no less. He was actuated by youthful spirit and false notions of his newly gained authority. The high-handed manner in which he acted, leaves no doubt that he did not deserve to be given the benefit of S. 562(1), Cr. P.C. and the discretion was improperly exercised.

13. The next question is whether it should be interfered with in revision and at this stage. The trial in this case was very much prolonged, it took almost one year. Six months more were taken in the appellate court. The period of probation has long expired. S. 562, Cr.

P.C. certainly applied in every respect, except the circumstances and the manner in which the offence was committed. It is only a case where, in my view, the discretion has been improperly exercised and where a sentence of imprisonment or fine or both might well have been awarded.

There are cases in which the High Court refused to interfere even though S. 562 did not apply and the discretion was illegally exercised. In - 'Emperor v. Partab Narain' AIR 1925 Oudh 673 (A), it was held that the fact that the person given the benefit of S. 562 was discovered later to be a previous convict, would not of itself be a sufficient ground for interference in revision.

14. In - 'Abdul v. Emperor', 11 Cri LJ 389 (Lah) (B), Johnstone, J., declined to interfere in revision with an order under Section 562, Cr. P.C. although the order had seen passed in a case to which the section was wholly inapplicable. In - 'Emperor v. Bhagat Singh', AIR 1933 Lah 393 (C), three persons were found guilty under S. 457, IPC for breaking into a house and stealing property and were dealt with under S. 502. On a reference by the Sessions Judge, Harrison, J., did not deem it necessary or advisable 10 interfere even though the order was illegal and the section had 110 application. In - 'Emperor v. Khairati Lal', AIR 1928 Lah 926 (D), an improper order under S. 562, Cr. P.C. was not set aside because of the lapse of time.

15. In view of these facts, I confine myself with the observations already made and decline to interfere. The petition for revision is dismissed.

Revision dismissed.

Criminal Writ Petition No.3438 of 2010.

13th February, 2012.

==========

Criminal P.C. (1973), Ss.239, 301, 302 - Application for assist to PP - First informant Opportunity of hearing cannot be refused to him ,his role will be limited and he cannot take place of Public Prosecutor - He, cannot be allowed to take over the control of prosecution by allowing to address the court directly.

JUDGMENT : - The single question that arises for consideration in this writ petition is whether the first informant has a right of hearing at the time of consideration of the application for discharge under Section 239 of Code of Criminal Procedure (hereinafter " Cr.P.C." for short). The brief facts of the case required to be stated for consideration of the question are that the petitioners are accused in Case No.927/PW/2007 pending in the Court of Additional Chief Metropolitan Magistrate, 8th Court, Mumbai. The case had been registered, pursuant to the order passed under Section 156(3) Cr.P.C. by the Court on the complaint filed by respondent no.2. The petitioners had filed Criminal Writ Petition No.93 of 2007 seeking quashing of MECR No. 16 of 2006 registered by the police. That writ petition was dismissed on 16th April 2007. The petitioners then approached the Hon'ble Supreme Court by filing S.L.P. (Cri.) No. 2414 of 2007, during the pendency of which, chargesheet came to be filed before the trial court. Therefore on 16th November 2009, the petitioners withdrew the S.L.P. and filed application for discharge under Section 239 Cr.P. C. In that application, respondent no.2 appeared before the trial Couit with a request to be heard in the matter. The request made was an oral request. The petitioners objected to the request. After hearing rival arguments, the oral request of respondent no.2 was allowed by the trial Court by it's order dtd. 30th August 2010, impugned in the present petition. The reasons set out in the short order read as follows:

> 3. Especially I have gone through the ratio laid down in the authorities of the Hon'ble Apex Court in the case of Bhagwant Singh vs. Commissioner of Police, AIR 1985 SC page 1288 and the ratios down in other authorities mentioned supra.
> 4. The question that has been raised by Defence is as to whether, at this stage i.e. at the stage of discharge of accused, whether the original complainant could have a right to be heard. On this point, it was argued that the complainant can be heard at the initial stage, but ne has no right to be heard at this stage.
> 5. I have carefully gone through the submissions made at the bar as well as ratios laid down in reported authorities as discussed supra. It is pertinent to note that golden principle of law is that nobody should be condemned unheard. May it be any stage and the original complainant is not an alien to this proceeding. So as per the ratios laid down in the authorities relied upon by Ld. Counsel for the original complainant, the original complainant has a right to be heard even at this stage. Hence, as there is no application filed on record by either of the parties and as everything went on orally, this order is passed below Exhibit No.l. The original complainant has got a right to be heard even at this stage. Hence, matter shall proceed further.'

6. The petitioners challenge the impugned order contending that Section 239 Cr.P.C., under which the application for discharge is made, in express terms, gives right of hearing only to the prosecution and the accused. The section does not contemplate hearing to the first informant either in person or through advocate. Secondly under the scheme of Cr.P.C, it is the public prosecutor who has to conduct the case and the first informant can only assist the public prosecutor and can address the court through the public prosecutor. Therefore according to the petitioners, the trial Court could not have passed the impugned order. In reply,.respondent no. 2 seeks to justify the impugned order contending that it is in keeping with the eyolvement of law in giving equal importance to the first informant and victim of the crime. Besides, participation by way of advancing arguments on law and facts would not bring any element of unfairness but would actually assist the court.

7. Undoubtedly the first informant and to some extent, the injured i.e. victim of crime or relatives of the deceased, if the incident has resulted into death have now been vested with better rights, with increased participation at different stages of criminal proceedings. Before going into the question arising for consideration in the petition, it will be convenient to take note of the rights conferred upon them by the statute as well as by judicial pronouncements. It will also be necessary to refer to few provisions of Cr.P.C. to appreciate the submissions advanced.

8. Section 154(1) Cr.P.C. requires that every information relating to the commission of a cognizable offence if given orally to an officen n charge of a police station shall be reduced in writing by him or under his direction and be read over to the informant and every such information whether given in writing or reduced into writing shall be signed by the person giving it. Section 154(2) requires that a copy of such information shall be given forthwith, free of cost, to the first informant. Section 157(2) requires that if it appears to the officer incharge of the police station that there is no sufficient ^ground for entering on an investigation, he shall forthwith notify to the first informant the fact that he will not investigate into the complaint or cause it to be investigated. In case investigation is undertaken, Section 173(2)(ii) provides that on completion of investigation, the officer shall communicate, in such manner as may be prescribed by the State Government, the action taken by him to the first informant. It can be noted that all the above three provisions relate to the action to be taken by the police i.e. the officer-in-charge of the police station. The purpose and reasons of the three provisions have been stated by the Apex Court in it's decision in Bhagwant Singh Ys. Commissioner of Police, reported in A.I.R. 1985 Supreme Court, page 1285 relied upon by respondent no.2 and also referred to in the impugned order. The reasons stated are as under :

> "3..... Obviously the reason is that the informant who sets the > machinery of investigation into motion by filing the First Information Report must know what is the result of the investigation initiated on the basis of the First Information Report. The informant having taken the initiative in lodging the First Information Report with a view to initiating investigation by the police for the purpose of ascertaining whether any offence has been committed and, if so, by whom, is vitally interested in the result of the investigation and hence the law requires that the action taken by the officer in charge of a police station on the First Information Report should be communicated to mm and the report forwarded by such officer to the Magistrate under sub-section 2(i) of Section 173 should also be supplied to him."

5. Next are the provisions of Section 301 and 302 Cr.P.C

which allow participation of the first informant into the conduct of the trial to the extent permitted therein. Section 301 permits a first informant to instruct a pleader to prosecute any person in any court but limits participation of such pleader to assistance to the Public Prosecutor or Assistant Public Prosecutor. The pleader may, with the permission of the Court, submit written arguments after the evidence in the case is closed in the case. Section 302_ relates to the proceedings before a Magistrate. Any Magistrate enquiring into trying a case, may permit the prosecution to be conducted by any person other than a police officer below the rank of Inspector. No such permission is required for the prosecution to be conducted by Advocate General or Government Advocate or Public Prosecutor or Assistant Public Prosecutor. In other words, ordinarily the prosecutions are conducted by Public Prosecutor or Assistant Public Prosecutor. However, it is open for a private person to seek permission to conduct the prosecution by nimself. If the Court thinks that the cause of justice would be served better by granting such permission, the Court would grant such permission. The scope of Sections 301 and 302 Criminal Procedure Code has been commented upon by the Apex Court in its decision in J.K. International V/s. State Govt of NCT of Delhi & Ors. reported in (2001) 3 SCC page 462. The same reads as under :

"12. The private person who is permitted to conduct prosecution in the Magistrate's Court can engage a counsel to do the needrul in the Court in his pehalf. It further amplifies the position that if a private person is aggrieved by the offence committed against him or against any one in whom he is interested he can approach tne Magistrate and seek permission - to conduct the prosecution by nimself. It is open to the Court to consider his request. If the court thinks that the cause of justice would be served better by granting such permission the Courts would generally grant such permission. Of course, this wider amplitude is limited to "Magistrate's Courts, as the right of such private individual to participate in the conduct of prosecution in the Sessions Court is veiy much restricted and is made subject to the control of the Public Prosecutor. The limited role which a private person can be permitted to play for prosecution in the Sessions Court has been adverted to above. All these would show that an aggrieved private person is not altogether to be eclipsed from the scenario when the criminal court takes cognizance of the offences based on the report submitted by the police. The reality cannot be overlooked that the genesis in almost all such cases is the grievance of one or more individual that they were wronged by the accused by committing offences against them."

of Thakur Ram V/s. State of Bihar reported in A.I.R. 1966 SC page 9 11. The Apex Court opined that reliance upon the decision in Thakur Ram's case by the High Court was not correct as the situations in the two cases were different. In Thakur Ram's case, the complainant had sought to challenge the order of the trial Court rejecting prosecution application for amending the charge and committing the case to the Court of Sessions. The Apex Court in that case, had disapproved a private person trying to interject in the case to rechannelise the course of the prosecution when the Public Prosecutor was in management of the prosecution case. The situation in J.K. International's case was found to be different, where the accused had approached the High Court for quashing of the criminal proceedings initiated by the appellant. The Apex Court held that in case of a petition for quashing of criminal proceedings, it would be a negation of justice to the complainant, if he is foreclosed from being heard.

9. The stage of hearing in the third case i.e. Vinay Poddar (supra) was completely different. The first informant had sought hearing in an application for anticipatory bail. While allowing the application, what had weighed with the Court was that when an application for anticipatory bail is considered, the police may not place all factual details before the Court as the investigation in most of such cases, is at a preliminary stage. Therefore, some role can be played by the complainant by pointing out the factual aspects. The other factor that had weighed with the Court was recognition of right of the first informant by the Apex Court to challenge the order granting bail.

10. Thus, it can be seen that the different stages of criminal proceedings in which participation of the first informant was allowed by judicial pronouncements, in the absence of specific provision in Criminal Procedure Code are (i) dropping of the proceedings by the Magistrate on receiving report under Section 173 Criminal Procedure Code from police, (ii) quashing of the criminal proceedings on the petition made by the accused and (iii) hearing of an application for anticipatory bail. The third stage is an entirely different stage, unconnected to the first two stages where one of the outcome of the application was the criminal complaint initiated by the first informant coming to an end.

11. The above is the background against which the question arising in the present petition is required to be considered.

12. Mr. Mahesh Jethmalani, the learned Senior Counsel appearing for the petitioners submits that Sections 238 and 239 of Code of Criminal Procedure are a complete code in themselves in the matter of procedure to be followed for the purpose of discharging the accused or for framing of charge in any warrant case instituted on a police report. He points out that Section 239 makes provision for every aspect of hearing of the application for discharge. It provides for the parties to be heard, documents to be considered, the test to be applied and the order to be passed. He refers to the principle of " Expressio unis est exclusio alterius " in the matter of statutory construction to submit that express mention of one or more persons of a particular class has to be regarded as by implication exclusion of all others of that class. According to Mr. Jethmalani, since Section 239 enumerates class of persons to be heard i.e. Prosecutor and the accused, by implication, it would exclude any other person from the hearing. Mr. Jethmalani relies upon decision of Kerala High Court in R. Balakrishna Pillai Vs. State of Kerala, reported in 1995 Criminal Law Journal, 1244 in the connection. In the proceeding before the Kerala High Court, a third party i.e. the Leader of Opposition in Kerala Legislative Assembly had filed an objection to the discharge application filed by the accused. The Kerala High Court held that Sections " 238 and 239 being a complete code in the matter of procedure to be followed for the purpose of discharging the accused, a third party cannot have any say in the matter". In my opinion, the facts of the present case are different from the facts before the Kerala High Court. The person making an application before the Kerala High Court for hearing was an altogether a third person, whereas the applicant herein is the first informant. He cannot be said to be a third person. As regards Section 239 of Cr.P.C. being a complete code by itself for the procedure to be followed for the purpose of discharging the accused, that by itself need not deter the court in considering the question in view of the expanded scope given to the first informant in the matter of hearing to him.

13. Mr. Jethmalani next emphasises the role of a public prosecutor. By referring to Sections 24 and 25 Cr.P.C, he submits that prosecutions in the Court of Magistrates and the Court of Sessions are conducted by the Assistant Public Prosecutor and Public Prosecutor/Additional Public Prosecutor respectively appointed by the State Government. An advocate privately engaged is not permitted to conduct prosecution. He submits that there is a sound reason for the criminal prosecutions to be conducted by public prosecutors appointed by the State Government. The State is the custodian of social interest of the community at large. Therefore though all the offences relate to public as well as the individual, in all the prosecutions, the State is the Prosecutor and the Public Prosecutor appointed by the State acts only in the interest of administration of justice. He is not a protagonist of any party. He stands for justice. Mr. Jetnmalani draws support for his submission from following observations of Sind High Court in the case of Ahmed Mahomed Ismail vs. Emperor, reported in A.I.R. 1940 Sind 220.

> "..... an advocate privately engaged " to represent the complainant should have no other place than that of one strictly subordinate to the officer who prosecutes on behalf of the Crown, for, as I have already said, the Crown stands not necessarily for a conviction but for justice. It also does not stand for the acquittal of one accused represented by a particular advocate at the cost of others and at the cost of justice"

14. Mr. Jethmalani submits that because the function of a Public Prosecutor relates to a public purpose, he is incharge of the prosecution all the time. For the very reason, the private counsel engaged by the first informant is given the limited role of assisting the Public Prosecutor under Section 301 and 302 Cr.P.C. Mr. Jethmalani relies upon decision of a Single Judge of this Court in Anthony D'Souza vs. Mrs. Radhabai Brij Ratan Mohatta and Others, reported in 1984(1) Bombay C.R. page 157, wherein Sections 301 and 302 of Cr.P.C. were interpreted. The decision holds that the first subsection of 301 gives absolute power to the Public Prosecutor or Assistant Public Prosecutor to appear ana plead without written authority before any court in any inquiry trial or appeal Sub-Section (2) provides that if in such a case any private person instructs a pleader to prosecute any person, the pleader so instructed shall act under the directions of the Public Prosecutor or Assistant Public Prosecutqr-in-charge of the case. This would mean that the Public Prosecutor or Assistant Public Prosecutor as the case may be, is the sole master of the prosecution and conduct of the prosecution is solely governed by his decision as to the policy to be adopted during the course of the trial and another pleader instructed has to act under the directions of the Public Prosecutor. No permission of the court is required for a private person to instruct a Pleader under Sub-section (2). Permission is required for submitting written arguments after the evidence is closed in the case. As regards Section 302(1), the court observed the power is undoubtedly vested " in the court to authorise conduct of prosecution by a private person. This power cannot be used by the court except on special grounds. It must not be the intention of the legislature that any other pleader or advocate be permitted to conduct the prosecution before a trying Magistrate", (emphasis supplied).

15. Mr. Amit Desai, the learned Senior Counsel appearing for respondent No. 2 seeks to distinguish Anthony D'Souza's case with the submission that it deals with a different stage of criminal proceedings and that the decision is of a period prior to Bhagwant's case. The submissions of Mr. Desai are self destructive. The fact that the decision is of a period prior to Bhagwant's case becomes irrelevant because the two cases deal with different situations. The stage in Bhagwant's case is a preliminary stage of consideration of Police report filed under Section 173(2) Cr.P.C. for wnich, there is no statutory provision for hearing to the first informant. The stage in Anthony D'Souza's case is of recording of evidence in the criminal trial for which there are specific provisions of Sections 301 and 302 Cr.P.C. Therefore merely because the first informant is recognised at the preliminary stage of hearing, the decision cited does not lose it's significance.

16. Mr. Desai submits that the impugned order should be sustained since it is in keeping with the eyolvement of law in giving increased participation to the first informant in the matter of prosecution. Undoubtedly the first informant now enjoys a role higher than earlier as already seen in the preceding paragraphs. In fact perusal of the petition shows that the petitioners also not wish to deny participation of tne first informant altogether. They only want his role to be limited as under Section 301 Cr.P.C. An application for discharge can result into putting an end to the prosecution either partly or fully. This stage is in that respect similar to the stage of consideration of the police report by the Magistrate under Section 173(2) Cr.P.C and the proceedings for quashing of the complaint filed by the accused person. The first informant, trierefore, is likely to be interested in seeing that the matter reaches the stage of trial and is disposed off after recording of evidence. If by judicial pronouncements, he is now granted hearing at the earlier two stages, he can be granted hearing at the stage of discharge also, though the Criminal Procedure Code does not make provision for hearing to him at that stage. If the first informant appears before the Court and desires to participate in the application, opportunity cannot be refused to him. Now the next question would be about the nature of the hearing to be given to the first informant. Should the hearing be independent to the hearing to the Public Prosecutor or it be through the Public Prosecutor. In my opinion, his role will have to be limited as under Section 301 Cr.P.C. for the same reasons, as given in Anthony D'Souza's case and keeping in focus the role of the Public Prosecutor. He, cannot be allowed to take over the control of prosecution by allowing to address the court directly. In this connection, the decisions in Bhagwant Singh's case and J.K. International's case will have no bearing since the situations considered in the two proceedings were different. In one case, it was a very preliminary stage and in the other, it was# invocation of inherent powers of the High Court. Therefore, the petition is partly allowed. The impugned order is modified to the extent that the Counsel engaged by respondent no. 2 shall act under the directions of the Assistant Public Prosecutor-in-charge of the case.

Order accordingly.

That is to say, the gravity of the crime, the character of the evidence, position and status of the accused with reference to the victim and witnesses, the likelihood of the accused fleeing from justice and repeating the offence, the possibility of his tampering with the witnesses and obstructing the course of justice and such other grounds are required to be taken into consideration. Bail under S. 167(2) shall be deemed to be so released under provisions of Chapter XXXIII of Code — But, that does not ipso facto mean that Bail order assumes content and character of Bail order of the kind conceived under Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail granted for default cannot be put on a higher pedestal than Bail granted otherwise. 437(5), 439(2) — Bail — Cancellation — When Bail granted otherwise than under S. 167(2)(a) can be cancelled, if investigation discloses commission of graver offence, there is no justification to hold that an accused released on Bail on default, his Bail cannot be cancelled on submission of charge-sheet in case it discloses commission of graver offence — However, mere submission of charge-sheet for graver offence only shall by itself be not the ground for cancelling Bail — Before cancelling Bail, Court will have to be further satisfied that case is of such a nature in which no Court would have accepted plea of Bail-Earlier, case under Ss. 363 and 365 registered — Subsequent investigation revealed peitioner's dominant role in kidnapping of a child — Investigation disclosed graver offence of such nature that no Court would have granted Bail to her — As such, Sessions Judge rightly did not allow her to continue on Bail granted earlier for default.

39) The offence under which the crime is registered is not so much important –

The case of each accused has to be considered on its own merit –

Merely because it is stated by the police that the person before the court is an accused in a case failing under section 302 IPC the court will not be justified in at once refusing bail to that person. The court has both a right and a duty to satisfy itself whether there are reasonable grounds for believing that the accused has involved himself in an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life – It the court chooses to accept the police report without applying its mind and examining the materials placed before it the court will be failing to discharge its statutory duty under the code – Though the sections under which the case is registered may have some bearing that cannot certifiably be the dominant consideration whether there are reasonable ground or not for believing that the accused has been guilty of an offence punished with death or imprisonment for life is a matter to decided judiciously by the court.

57) The mere fact that the bail applications of some of the appellants had been rejected is no ground for their immediate arrest-

Investigation officer did not consider it necessary having regard to all the facts and circumstance of the case to arrest the accused in such a case – there was no justification for the High Court to direct the State to arrest the appellants against whom the first information report was lodged as it amounted to unjustified interference in the investigation of the case. The mere fact that the bail applications of some of the appellants had been rejected is no ground for directing their immediate arrest. In the very nature of things a person may move the court on mere apprehension that he may be arrested. The court may or may not grant anticipatory bail depending upon the facts and circumstances of the case of the case and the material placed before the court, there may however be cases where the application for grant of anticipatory bail may be rejected and ultimately after investigation, the said person may not be put up for trial as no material is disclosed against him in the course of investigation - The High Court proceeded on the assumption that since petitions for anticipatory bail had been rejected there was no option open for the State but to arrest those persons. This assumption is erroneous A persons whose petition for grant of Anticipatory bail has been rejected may or may not be arrested by the investigating officer depending upon the facts and circumstances of the case, nature of the offence, the back ground of the accused, the facts disclosed in the course of investigation and other relevant consideration.

the High Court would be tempted to attempt to get the matter reopened before another Bench, and there would not be any end to such attempts – Besides it is not consistant with the judicial discipline, which must be maintained by courts both in the interest of administration of justice by assuring the binding nature of an order which becomes final and the faith of the people in judiciary.

152) Bail - Considerations for - The designated Court should carefully examine every case to satisfy itself that accused is innocent before granting bail - Rejection of prayer for bail in mechanical manner is not proper. Under Section 20(8), no person accused of an offence punishable under the Act or any rule made thereunder shall, if in custody be released on bail or on his own bond unless the two conditions specified in Causes (a) and (b) are satisfied. In view of these more stringent conditions a Designated Court should carefully examine every case coming before it for finding out whether the provisions of the Act apply or not. Since before granting bail the Court is called upon to satisfy itself that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the accused is innocent of the offence the statements in the case diary and other available materials should be closely examined. A prayer for bail ought not to be rejected in a mechanical manner.

153) Bail – Considerations for grant of - Application of principles of bail and jail."Bail or jail?" - at the pre-trial or post- conviction stage - belongs to the blurred area of the criminal justice system and largely hinges on the hunch of the bench, otherwise called judicial discretion. The Code is cryptic on this topic and the court prefers to be tacit, be the order custodial or not. ANTICIPATORY BAIL WHERE GRANTED

1. The accused petitioner had no knowledge of the proceedings as he was a driver who had to remain mostly out of the village. In view of the fact thatthree accused persons have already been acquitted in the case, if was deemed proper to grant interim bail to the accused-petitioner as well, on furnishing a personal bond for a sum of Rs. 15,000/- with one surety for the like amount to the satisfaction of the SHO/arresting officer/investigating officer, on the following conditions:

(a) That the petitioner shall make himself available for interrogation by a police officer as and when required;

(b) That the petitioner shall not directly or indirectly make any inducement, threat or primise to any person acquainted with the facts of the case so as to dissuade him from disclosing such facts to the court, or to any police officer; and

(c) That the petitioner shall not leave India without the previous permission of the court.

Mam Raj v. State of Rajasthan 1988 (3) Crimes 74-75 (Raj).

2. An FIR was registered against the petitioners alleging commission of offences under sec 406 and 420 of the IPC. The case was at the investigation stage. The transaction in question was primarily civil. Besides, over eight months have passed but nothing incriminating had so far been discovered. The grant of pre-arrest bail to the petitioners on the condition that they make themselves available for investigation as and when required will, in the peculiar facts and circumstances of the case, amply serve the purpose.

3. The petitioneris a young boy of 17 years and is a student. In the FIR no overt act has been assigned to the accused. The only allegation against him is that he gave first blows and slaps with his hand. In these circumstances, it does not appear unreasonable to issue directions under s 438 of the Cr. P.C. that in the event of arrest the accused petitioner may be released on bail.

4. An interim order was passed in favour of the petitioner becausehe happened to be a government employee. The contention for the petitioner Remeshwar was that the incident took place between the two neighbours on a petty matter and he also sustained an injury on his head. Further, if he were arrested, he was likely to be suspended, being a government employee. Anticipatory bail was therefore allowed.

5. The public prosecutor has basically opposed the issue of the direction on the ground that the recovery of the registered sale-deed said to be in the possession of the accused applicant would be defeated if a direction under s 438 of the Cr. PC is issued. At this stage, it is difficult to express any opinion regarding the merits and demerits of the case, but only for the limited purpose of s 438 of the Code the document does not appear to be in possession of the applicant. It cannot also be ruled out at the moment that a serious dispute has arised between the parties, which is already sub judice before a competent civil Court. Looking to these facts and circumstances of the case it does not appear unreasonable to issue a direction that in the event of arrest the accusedmay be enlarged on bail.

6. The offences which prima facie are disclosed in the facts of the present case in the FIR did not fall under ss 467 or 477 of the IPC. The petitioners are entitled to an order for anticipatory bail under s 438 of the Cr. PC.

Shrimant Appaji Patil v. State of Maharashtra (Bom), 1978 Mah. LR. 146.

7. The medical officer had stated that the injuries caused by a sharp object were not sufficient to cause death looking to the improved condition of the injured. He further stated that the general condition of the injured was satisfactory. Looking to the entire facts and circumstances of the case it does not appear unreasonable to enlarge the accused on bail.

8. The allegation against the petitioner in the FIR was that he had collected eight to ten lakh rupees from the transporters. The FIR had been lodged by the superintendent of the flying squad of the Punjab government as such and not on the basis of statements of any person who may have made any allegation regarding collection of money by illegal means or misuse of the official position. The applicant was a former transport minister, Punjab. No statement of any person has been recorded during the investigation so far. Thus the allegations in the FIR continue to remain vague and unsubstantiated upto the date of hearing of this petition. In view of these circumstances, this is a fit case for grant of anticipatory bail.

9. A perusal of the FIR in the case goes to show that during the alleged incident an unknown person fired two shots in the air with the gun. There was no specific over act attributed to the petitioners except that the petsons who were armed had come at the instance of the petitioner. It was nobody's case that anyone was hurt by those shots. Even in the statements of as many as 15 witnesses there was no indication of who had fired the shots in the air. In these circumstances, it is a fit case for the issue of a direction for anticipatory bail.

10. The allegations in the FIR ARE ABSOLUTELY VAGUE AND INCORRECT. Name of these allegations come within the ambit of the provisions of rr 33 and 46 of the Defence of India Rules. The allegations against the petitioner are vague and these is reasonable ground for believing that he is not guilty of contravention of such Rules. It does not appear that are evidence of what is stated in the FIR is in the possession of the police. Therefore, it is a fit case to grant anticipatory bail to the petitioner.

11. So far as the antecedents of the petitioner were concerned, there were no other criminal cases said to be pending against the petitioner. The offence under ss 276C, and 276CC of the Income Tax act, 1961 is such that its cognizance can be taken by the magistrate only when a complaint is filed by the department. Therefore, it cannot be said that this is cognizable offence. The search was conducted as far back as in 1981 and the complaint was filed on 12th September, 1985 and the arrest was sought to be made in December 1986. The petitioner was a citizen of Jaipur and was available all the while for any inquiry by the department. Therefore, there was nothing further to be enquired from him as the complaint has already been filed. He had also filed objections against the summary order under s 311 of the Act, which had not ben decided even till date. An appeal had also been filed against the summary order which was still pending. The second appeal was also provided under the Act which can be filed before the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal. Therefore, the whole matter is sub judice. Apart from this, the total amount of tax as required by the department had also been deposited by the petitioner. Anticipatory bail was granted to the accused.

12. Since the petitioners were already on bail on the basis of the first challan filed and there was an apprehension that if cognizance is taken on the basis of the subsequent challan they may be arrested, an anticipatory bail was granted to the petitioners.

13. Two injuries by a sharp weapon received by R were on the arms and not on the vital part. Other injuries were abrasions, bruises and one lacerated wound on the parietal region. Three persons on the side of the accused had received injuries, out of which some were grievous. According to the submission for the accused petitioners the incident had occurred because some of the petitioners, belonging to a particular caste, did not supportthe candidate who stood for the post of sarpanch and was of the same caste. It had also been pointed out that two petitioners, D and B, were government servants, and for this reason they were involved in the case. Considering the nature of the injuries to R and the other circumstances the petitioners were released on anticipatory bail with appropriate conditions.

14. When the police of Kota is actively interested in this case, it does not appear to be proper that the investigation should be conducted by it. This case should be investigated by an independent agency and therefore it was directed that the CBI should take up such investigation. On the bail application it was ordered that the petitioner shall not be arrested until the CBI has made some progress in its investigation and taken permission of this court.

15. In this case, the investigation had been pending for more than four years. There was no allegation against the accused petitioner for tampering with the evidenceand he was not absconding. Under these circumstances, the petitioner was enlarged on anticipatory bail.

16. If tacties are indulged by the state government bynot producing the case diary, what justice can be imparted to the accused person? Both the parties are equal for the court. Therefore, the way of working of the government advocate office by not producing case diaries before the court, even after directions of the High Court, cannot be appreciated. Since there was nothing before the court to oppose the bail application on behalf of the state government, anticipatory bail was granted.

17. Cr.P.C. – Section 151(3), 110(e), (g) – Chapter proceedings – Necesity of Arrest – The petitioner was arrested in July on the basis of statements recorded in the month of April. Held there was no urgency for arrest, - Arrest illegal and unwarranted – Proceedings against petitioner quashed – Compenstion of Rs. 3000/- for illegal detention and mental agony and rs. 1000/- as the costs of the petitioner.

18. In this case a forged certificate had been produced by the accused for obtaining employment as a conductor. It was prayed that the petitioners stand on some footing inasmuch as they wanted to seek employment and hence had produced this certificate to get admission to the training which entitled them to get the employment. It was also given out that one of the petitioners was 18 years of age and other two accused petitioners were 23 years old and they belonged to lower middle class families. Keeping in view the young age of the petitioners and the circumstances in which they lived, anticipatory bail was granted.

19. There was absolutely no evidence to connect the accused with the crime. From whatever evidence had been collected, it could be said that from an open Bara, said to be of the accused-petitioner, the other accused recovered some property which belonged to the Railways and the accused G was suspected of having committed the offence under s 3 of the Railway Property (Unlawful Possession) Act 1966. There was sufficient evidence or reasonable ground of suspicion against the other accused so far as the offence under s 3 of the said Act was concerned, but from the material on record, it could not be said that there was sufficient evidence or reasonable ground for suspicion against the petitioner for the offence under the said section. Anticipatory bail was allowed to the petitioner.

20. Injuries were sustained by M AND r. According to the injury report, M had an incised wound on his right shoulder. The injury was simple made by a sharp-edged weapon. R had a lacerated wound on his right parietal region. This injury was simple and by a blunt weapon. The accused was granted anticipatory bail.

21. The petitioner was charged with attempted rape of a child of 10 years. However the petitioner himself was also a child of 14 years of age. If he were arrested and allowed to remain in the company of criminals he will himself turn out to be a person of criminal tendencies. Insuch circumstances it is better to take a reformative rather than punitive view. Anticipatory bail was allowed to the petitioner.

22. The amount said to have bene embezzled by the petitioner has been deposited by him. The original four receipts in this respect for Rs. 18,151 have been shown to the court. Out of this some money was recovered from his pay. Considering the fact that the amount has ben recovered and the petitioner shall face the trial when it comes up, he can be released on anticipatory bail.

Rajendra Kumar Sharma v. State of Rajasthan 1988 (3) Crimes 887 (Raj).

23. There was no apprehension that all the petitioners were likely to abscond. They had firm roots in the country and they had permanent residences where they were residing with their families. Some of the petitioners were employees while others were executives of the concern. The chairman and the vice-chairman had been already enlarged on bail even by the magistrate and that decision was apparently accepted by the department. The seizure of the documents was either complete or in progress and it was not even suggested that the petitioners were indulging in any act to tamper with the evidence. The bulk of the evidence was mainly reflected through the documents which were already in the possession of the department. It was an accepted position that the petitioners had been regularly presenting themselves before the concerned officials for being subjected to interrogation and have been co-operating with them. Anticipatory bail was granted to the petitioners.

Prabhakar Dattatraya Gurve v. Union of India (1986) 2 Bom Cr. 30, 32.

Admittedly, the logs had been already seized by the police and it appeared that there was noneed whatsoever to arrest the applicant for the purposes ofinvestigation. The same can be conducted without his arrest provided the applicant appears before the police as and when necessary. Anticipatory biail was granted to the petitioners.

Devi Das v. State 1987 (3) Crimes 363, 366 (Bom), (1988) 1 Bom Cr. 22.

24. The role attributed to the present petitioner was to the effect that he was alleged to have purchased some gold ornaments from the principal accused and hence obviously there was a likelihood that he was being involved in an offence of receiving stolen property as sought to the spelt out. This was obviously a vague allegation. The police had already visited the shop and attached relevant documents and they can conduct further searchs of the residence and shop as advised. In respect of the complaint of 1984 it would not be proper to deny bial to the petitioner at the end of the year 1985. Interest of prosecution can be safeguarded if the petitioner was directed to appear before the investigating officer and the public prosecutor on instructions submitted that this should be done for seven days.

Pusushottam Lal Bannarial Agrawal v. State of Maharashtra 1986 (1) Crimes 207-08 (Bom).

25. The petitioner was an employee of Indian Overseas Bank and while carrying out the investigation the police had so far, not recorded the statement of the returning officer, who could be the best witness of the incident which occurred in the polling booth. Other voters and polling agents have been examined but independent person was not before the court. In these circumstances the anticipatory bail was granted.

Amar Singh v. State 1988 (3) Crimes 82 (Raj).

26. Out of the seven acused petitioner M was aged about 70 years while petitioner MR was aged about 73 years and it does not stand to reason that these old and respectable persons would have accompanied the other petitioners who are their young sons and other near relations, particularly when, according to the complainant, many other persons were also taken to the factory for allegedly dispossessing that party. It was contended that the implication of these two persons cannot be ruled out. In the circumstances of the case these two petitioners were granted anticipatory bial.

27. The petitioner was not required to be arrested in connection with the raid of residential and business premises where nothing incriminating was recovered. Moreover the question of arrest did not arise because for the time being, only summons was handed over to the wife of the petitioner on 18th February 1986, calling upon the petitioner to attend the office of respondent 2 at Jullunder on 20 February 1986, and to produce certain documents mentioned in the summons. The petitioners were granted anticipatory bail.

Power of convictant Court to grant Interim Bail.

The conditions as laid down in sub-s (3) of x 389 of the Cr. PC, are that-

(a) The accused being on bail, is sentenced to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three years or he is convicted of a bailable offence and is on bail.

(b) An appeal lies from that conviction or sentence, and

(c) He satisfies the court that he intends to file an appeal.

(d) There was no possibility of early hearing of the appeal in the High Court. In the aforesaid circumstances, the applicants were released on bail.

1. The appellant was convicted under s 302/34 of the IPC and had been sentenced for life. He was more than 70 years' old and he was already in custody for more then seven and a half years. In the High Court, a prayer for suspension of sentence was made but the learned judges examining the gravity of the offence and prima facie merit of the case, were not inclined to suspend the sentence by their order dated 20 January 1998 and on the other hand granted liberty to the accused for praying for early hearing of the appeal. Though six months have expired since then, it ws not possible to visualize that the appeal would be heard in the near future, the appeal being of 1997. Taking into account the age of the appellant and that he was in custody for more than seven and a half years, in the interest of justice, an order to release the appellant on bail was made by the court.

2. The rationale of the practice not to release, on bail, a person who has been sentenced to life-imprisonment lies in this that once a person has been found guilty and sentenced to life-imprisonment he should not be let loose so long as his conviction and sentence are not set aside but the underlying postulate of this practice was that the appeal of such person would be disposed of within a reasonable period, so that if he is ultimately found to be innocent, he would not have to remain in jail for an unduly long period. The rationale of this practice can have no application where the court is not in a position to dispose of the appeal for five or six years. It would be, indeed, a travesty of justice to keep a person in jail for a period of five or six years for an offence which is ultimately found not to have been committed by him. It is, therefore, absolutely essential that the practice which the Supreme Court has been following in the past must be reconsidered and so long as the Supreme Court is not in a position to hear the appeal of an accused within a reasonable period of time, the court should ordinarily, unless there are cogent grounds for acting otherwise, release the accused on bail in case whose special leave has been granted to the accused to appeal against his conviction and sentence.

Kashmnira Singh v. State of Punjab AIR 1977 SC 2147, 1977 SCC (Cr) 559, 1977 Cr. L.J. 1746 (every practice of the court must find its ultimate justification in the interest of justice).

3. The Supreme Court has further observed that it is not only traditional but rational in this context, to inquire into the antecedents of a man who is applying for bail to find whether he has a bad record, particularly a record which suggests that he is likely to comit serious offences while on bail or otherwise polluting the process of justice. It is to be remembered that deprivation of freedom by refusal of bail is not for punitive purpose but for the bifocal interests of justice to the individual involved and society affected. Along with these, contrary factors have also to be weighted, namely, that it makes sense to assume that a man on bail has better chance to prepare or present his case than one remanded in custody.

Babu Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1978 SC 527.

POWER OF SESSIONS JUDGE TO GRANT BAIL IN REVISION

1 Section 397 of the Cr. P.C. 1973, confers on the sessions judge, while calling for, with a view to examine the record of any proceeding before calling for, with a view to examine the record of any proceeding before any inferior criminal court within his local jurisdiction, the power of directing that the execution of any sentence or order be suspended and if the accused is in confinement, that he be released on bail or on his own bond pending the examination of the record. The case of Bansi v Hari Singh, decided under the old Code, is no longer good in law.

1956 All L.J. 735, AIR 1956 All 297, 1957 Cr. L.J. 561; and Panch Mohammad v Hashanu Khan AIR 1956 Bhopal 17, 1956 Cr. L.J. 561.

2 Where some new facts have been brought on record including the affidavit, further delay in commencement of the trial is also relevant consideration for granting bail in such matter. On such basis the applicant was granted bail.

BAIL BY THE POLICE

1. An arrest need not be attended with any ritual or even that it should be ostentatious. It is not necessary that man in order to get arrested should be taken prisoner, nor does the law regard an arrest only the ceremonial or hand-cuff or manacle. An authority is said to arrest another man if it prevents the latter from willing his movement and moving according to his will. Under enlightened modern conditions, it seldom becomes necessary for any police officer or other authority empowered to make arrest to actually seize or even touch a person's body with a view to his restraint, uttrerace of a gultural word or sound, a gesture of an index finger or hand, sway of the head or even the flicker of an eye are enough to convey the meaning to the person concerned that he has lost his liberty.

Kaiser Otmar v. State of Tamil Nadu, 1981 Cr. L.J. (NOC) 218 (Mad).

2. The police officer can use all means necessary to effect the arrest if the person to be arrested forcibly resists such arrest or attempts to evade it, but the police officer shall not use such force as may cause death of a person who is not accused of an offence punishable with death or with imprisonment for life. Section 46 of the code applies to all arrests irrespective of whether it is made under a warrant or without a warrant.

KN Cheriyan v. D. Johnson 1969 Mad. L.J. (Cr) 765;

HANDCUFFING OF ACCUSED ARRESTED IN CRIMINAL CASES.

In the case of Prem Shankar Shukla v. delhi administration", it was held that handcuffing is inhuman, overharsh and arbitrary. Absent fair procedure and objection monitoring to inflict 'irons' is to resort to zoological strategies repugnant to art 21. The Attorney General of The Supreme Court directed the Union of India to frame rules or guidelines as regards the circumstances in which handcuffing of the accused could be resorted to in conformity with the said judgment and to circulate them amongst all the state governments and the governments of union territories.

POLICE OFFICER'S DUTY TO INFORM PERSON ARRESTED OF HIS RIGHT TO BAIL ETC (SECTION 50 OF THE Cr. PC).

Sub-section (1) of s 50 of the Cr. PC provides that any police officer or other person arresting any person without warrant shall forthwith communicate to him full particulars the of the offence for which he is arrested or other grounds for such arrest.

(ii) Sub-section (2) of s 50 provides that where a police officer arrests without warrant any person other than a person accused of a non-bailable offence, he shall inform the person arrested that he is entitled to be released on bail and that he may arrange for sureties on his behalf The provision of s 50 of the said code are mandatory and must be strictly complied with. A citizen's liberty cannot be curtailed except in accordance with law. In Ajit Kumar Sharma v. State of Assam, [1976 Cr. L.J. 1303 (Gau).] it was not clear as to what sort of communication was made. In such a situation, the court observed that even if any communication about the offence was orally made by the officer-in-charge of the police station to the petitioner, one canot know what kind of communication was made, whether the communication was of the full particulars or of the mere section of the offence. In the said circumstances, the court held that the arrest and detention of the petitioner was in violation of s 50 of the Cr. PC and hence illegal. Similarly, if the offence, for which he has been arrested, is bailable, the accused has also to be informed that he is entitled to be released on bail and that he may arrange for sureties on his behalf for such release. If the police officer omits to do so, it would also be in violation of s 50 of the code and his arrest would be vitiated being illegal.

Additional Case Law.

1. Bail by police – Magistrate does not have jurisdiction to order furnishing of fresh bail bonds. There is no provision in the code of Criminal Procedure for asking an accused already released on bail by police officer to furnish fresh bil bonds. The bail bonds submitted before the police officer are for the purpose of appearing before the Court ans when this undertaking has already been given, fresh undertaking for the same effect is not to be asked for. Such a bond should ordinarily be for appearance before the Court of Magistrate but also if the case is triable before the Court of Sessions before the Court of Session unless there are particular reasons for not doing so.

Monit Molhotra –Vs- State of Rajasthan 1991 Cr. L.J. 806 (Raj.)

2. Simultaneous police case and complaint case : The accused has been released on bail in connection with a police case. But a complainant files a complaint case before the Court with additional charges and the cognizance has been taken by the Magistrate. The question acrose before the Allahabad High Court as to whether the accused shall be permitted to condinue on the same bail or not. The High court has held that the proper procedure is to direct the accused to surrender and to apply for bail for the additional charges.

3. Bail petition during remand-not to be adjoured. When the application on behalf of the accused was moved on the date in which the Magistrate was considering the application for remand, the Magistrate has to dispose of such application along with the prayer of remand and can release the accused on bail. He has no obligation to adjourn it to a future date to give opportunity to the prosecution to oppose it.

K.K. Girdhar -Vs- M. S. Kathuria, 1989 Cr. L.J. 1094 (Del).

4. When after police remand, the accused persons have prayed for bail, the Magistrate cannot postpone the hearing of such bail application till Narco test and brain mapping test was performed on the petition. The Magistrate has to take an appropriate decision one way or other. He may refuse bail. But the order deferring the bail application not being proper is liable to be set aside.

In re, Madhu Limaye -Vs.- State of Maharashtra AIR 1969 SC 1014

7. Detention by police for more than 24 hours—if affects the power of Magistrate to order detention under s. 167(2). Ordinarily the Magisirale can order detention of an accused under s. 167, Cr PC when produced before him by the police and if the Magistrate on applying his judicial mind is satisfied thai fmdici remand to custody is necessary for the purpose of investigation of the case, the fact kept in police custody for more than 24 hours would not be the sole ground to hold that the Magistrate cannot remand him to custody. But if it is found that the accused was detained in police custody for 36 hours without any interrogation even for once and then forwarded to the Magistrate and the Magistrate Ordered further remand to the police without applying his mind to the accusation against the accused, the order of remand by the Magistrate is not justified and liable to be set aside and the accused should be ordered to be released on bail.

8. The Rajasthan High Court has expressed the view that under the New Criminal Procedure Code if the detention is illegal it cannot validate the order of remand subsequently made by Judicial Magistrate or by the Additional Sessions Judge under s. 309 (2), Cr PC.

9. The full Bench of Rajasthan High Court has overruled those decisions in Mahesh Chand V. State of Rajasthan, by taking the view that the illegality of an order remanding a person accused of a non-bailable offence to custody under s. 167 (2) or s. 309 (2) does not per se entitle the accused to be released on bail.

Mahesh Chand -Vs.- State of Rajasthan 1985 Cr. L.J. 301 (FB), Rajasthan High Court

10. Appearance of accused before the Magistrate during investigation after bail not necessary. Once the accused is released on bail during investigation he has no obligation to appear before the Magistrate before the charge-sheet is filed and process issued against him. Therefore, because of non-appearance of the accused in Court on any date fixed by the Magistrate to submit the police report as envisaged in s. 173, Cr. PC, his bail cannot be cancelled and warrant of arrest cannot be issued against him.

13. Even though nit sec. (2) of s. 437 empowers the Magistrate to grant bail, when he is of opinion li.ii there are no reasonable grounds for believing that the accused has committed i li.iilable offence but there are sufficient grounds for further inquiry into his guilt, yt'l such an accused may again be committed to custody by a Court which released In in on bail after the inquiry is completed, when after the completion of such inquiry tin- Magistrate is satisfied that there are sufficient grounds for committing him to.

14. Condition of surrendering passport. When the Trial Court on admitting the accused to bail directed him to surrender his passport with the Court and not to go abroad without the permission of the Court. The said condition has been challenged by the accused before the High Court in revision. It is submitted that the petitioner has travelled abroad with the permission of the Court on as many as eight occasions and on each occasion the Court directed him to furnish bank guarantee for a substantial amount and that as he frequently had to go abroad for his medical treatment surrendering his passport before the Court and the permission of the Court again takes considerable time. The CBI does not have any objection if the passport of the petitioner is returned but insists that he should submit his itinerary for every visit to the Court and furnishes his contact address while in abroad. Delhi High Court in view of the above position agrees to delete the conditions of surrendering the passport and to seek prior permission before every visit abroad t m directing him to furnish bail of two lakhs with two sureties of rupees one lakh in the satisfaction of the Court. The High Court has directed the petitioner to fui nr.li his itinerary'and contact address to the Court on each occasion of foreign visil ami inform the Court on his return. It is also ordered that his travels to abroad would not interfere with the proceedings in the Court and no delay is occasioned for In visit abroad.

It has been held that the Magistrate while releasing the accused on bail cannot impose such a condition. An accused cannot be directed to deposit in cash one-fourth of the security amount and personal bond as a condition of the bail.

Ramnath Sharma v Khaltl Prodhan 1987(3) Crimes 706.

19. The accused persons five in number are charged with offences under ss. 363 and 392, IPC. The Magistrate granted bail to them with several conditions, one such in is that each of them has to deposit cash security of Rs. 10,000. The persons have moved the High Court in revision challenging such condition siting the cash security. The Karnataka High Court has held that nowhere Code there is any insistence on cash security. The decision of the Keshav Banerjee's (supra) has been relied upon. The earlier decision of the same irt in Afsar Khan v State[4] has also been relied upon. So, the High Court set aside the condition relating to the deposit of cash security keeping in tact other condition imposed.

20. the Trial Court for offences allegedly committed under ss. 420,464,467 i468, IPC has directed the accused to furnish bail bond of surety of Rs. 25 and imposed the condition that the surety shall be of the local surety, the |ti High Court has observed that the heavy amount of bail is so onerous that tally amounts to denial of bail itself. The condition that the surety shall be local was also not found favour with the High Court. So, the High Court in revision $d the bail bond to Rs. 50,000 and has directed that the surety need not be a local surety.

23. No condition to be imposed which violates Art. 20(3) of the Constitution. The condition imposed by Court cannot direct the accused to do an act which would have the effect of incriminating the accused. Such a condition would be violative of Art. 20(3) of the Constitution. While releasing an accused on bail the Court may direct the accused to facilitate the police in investigation and for that purpose he may be directed to meet the Investigating Officer as and when required by him. But the Court cannot direct the accused to show the place wherefrom the police can .WHver some incriminating articles.

The Orissa High Court has held that such condition imposed while granting bail is improper.

Vijayananda Swain v. State 1996 Cr. L.J. 4231 (Ori)

27. IS Directing accuced to hand over charge of office. The condition imposed by the Court on granting bail that he shall hand over charge of his office within ten days is illegal as this condition is nothing but a bargain not permissible within the ambit and sweep of sub-sec- (3) of s- 437- Cr PC.[15] It is observed at pp. 107-108 as follows:

> "Grant of bai 1 is not like a commodity to be bargained about by the Court with the accused. It is clearly beyond the competence of the Court to indulge in such bargaining while granting bail to the accused. The accused cannot be subjected to any conditions other than that contemplated in s. 437(3), Cr PC. The Courts must refrain from contracting a bargain with the accused while granting bail. A duty is, cast upon the Court to ensure that the conditions imposed upon the accused is in consonance and intendment of the provisions of s. 437, Cr PC".

Ramnath Sharma v Khalil Khan 1988 All L.J. 105

28. Condition directing nccutufto attend Court everyday. When the Magistrate ordered the release of the accused on his executing a personal bond of Rs. 7,000, and on giving an undertaking to attend Court everyday with one surety for like amount and until the disposal of the case, it has been held that Court can direct the accused to attend the Court on all dates of hearing, but the undertaking from the accused and the surety that the accused shall attend the Court whether the case was fixed or not, is not a reasonable condition and is liable to be vacated.

B.L. Joshi v. State 1954 Cr. L.J. 1159.

29. Condition restricting movement within a particular area. Sometimes the Court can impose restriction on the movement of the accused and direct him not to visit a particular area or to stay within a particular area. However, such condition should not be imposed for an indefinite period. Moreover, such condition must also be reasonable and should not affect the accused financially. When an accused charged with committing theft from a railway wagon was granted bail on condition that he would not leave the limits of the town of Midnapore then such condition was held to be improper when the accused was an inhabitant of Kharagpur and the sole means of his livelihood was at Kharagpur. The High Court set aside the condition on the view that imposition of such condition upon the accused directing him not to leave Midnapore town would amount to refusing bail because as he was a resident of Kharagpur and his source of livelihood was at Kharagpur, he couldjiot sustain hinuelf if he were not allowed to cross the limits of Midnapore Town.

Kamla Pandey v. Empress AIR 1949 Cal 582;

30. Condition to pay Interim maintenance to procecutrlx In a rape case. When the Additional Sessions Judge while granting bail to an accused in a rape case directed he accused to pay Rs. 700 by way of interim compensation to the prosecutrix till he disposal of the Session case, relying on the Supreme Court decision in 'odhisattwa Gautam v Subhra Chakraborty[19] the condition has been challenged efore the Gujarat High Court. The Gujarat High Court has held that in the i>ve-mentioned case the Supreme Court in exercise of power under Art. 142 of f Constitution issued a direction to pay compensation in favour of the victim of Bxual abuse namely developing sexual intimacy giving a show of marriage causing (liscarriage twice and ultimately refused recognizing the victim to be his wife for vhich the criminal case under ss. 312,493, 496 and s. 498A was filed. When the eused failing to quash the criminal case moved the Supreme Court, the Supreme Eourt laid down certain scheme for dealing with such sexual abuses for assisting He victims of rape and has directed among others the compensation for victims, conviction by the Court and by Criminal Injuries Compensation Board to be iStituted by the State Government whether or not the conviction has taken place, vever, in that case till the disposal of the criminal case the Supreme Court cted Rs. 1000 to be paid as interim compensation. The Gujarat High Court has rved that such an order has been passed by the Supreme Court in exercise of lary power of the Supreme Court under Art. 142 of the Constitution and when guidelines of the Supreme Court have not yet been worked out by constituting lminal Injuries Compensation Board then while granting bail to the accused such i Condition cannot be imposed by the Court that the accused should pay the psecutrix the interim compensation of Rs. 700 per month as a condition for grant of bail to the accused. So, the High Court quashed the order of the Additional Session Judge directing interim compensation.

Mukeshbhai v. State 1998 Cr. L.J. 194 (Guj)

31. When the accused who is not, otherwise entitled to be released on bail prays for relelse on the ground of his wife's illness and the Court grants him short-time bail with the condition that he must surrender after a period, such short-time bail can be granted and the accused has to surrender after the expiry of such period, the warrant of anesfisan be issued against him.

Omprakash v. State of U.P. 1976 All Cri. C. 312.

32. Operation of the bail—If can bastayed. When the accusedis released on bail, the Court releasing the accused on bail cannot on the prayer of the State stay operation of the bail. Until and unless any Superior Court passes order of stay of operation of the bail, the bail order passed by the Court shall continue. The Sessions while releasing the accused on bail, cannot on the prayer of the State stay the iofi of the order of bail.

Rameswar v State 1975 Cr L.J. 658 (All).

33. Bail granted by Magistrate—power of stay by Sessions Judge. The question arose before the Bombay High Court if the Session Court possesses the legal authority to stay operation of the order of a Magistrate releasing the accused on bail. Against the grant of bail of the accused implicated in an offence under Customs Act Ihe Session Court was moved in Criminal Revisional Jurisdiction who, on entertaining the petition, stayed the operation of the bail. The High Court of Bombay has observed that the Criminal Revision application was for cancellation of bail granted by the Magistrate. The order of cancellation of bail can only be made after examining the materials produced and it being an extraordinary step can only be granted on application of the principles governing the cancellation of bail. There is no power of the Sessions Judge under s. 439(2), Cr PC to make an interim order illation of the bail. The decision of Allahabad High Court in Rameswar State has been relied upon.

State v Sanjoy Gandhi AIR 1978 SC 961; 1978 Cr L.J. 952; Bhagirath v State 1984 Cri. L.J.160.
Yunus Hutsain Raihad v Asst. Controller of Ctiitonu, Bombay 1991 Cr L.J. 437 (Bom.)

34. Oral application for bail—If permissible. Section 437 does not make it mandatory, that the accused has to file written application for bail. Ordinarily, however, an application for bail is to be filed in writing but there is no illegality in the accused in custody applying for bail verbally. It has thus been held that when a person accused of any non-bailable offence is arrested or detained without warrant by an officer-in-charge of police station or appears or is brought before a Court, he can either himself or through a lawyer apply for bail even verbally. It has been observed, that a written application for bail is only intended to place on record that the accused has moved the bail. But itjs not mandatory, that a written application has to be made and the Court can consider the prayer for bail if made by the accused or his lawyer verbally.

Babu Singh v. State of U.P. 1978 Cr. L.J.. 651; R.K. Nabachandra Singh V. Manipur Administration AIR 1964 Mani 39.

35. However, when the interim bail is in vogue and the petitioner prays for -of the interim bail, the same cannot be dismissed on the ground that for confirmation of the interim bail, the accused was not in custody and no bail application cannot be considered unless the accused is in custody. The Supreme Court has held that such a view cannot be taken when at the stage of filing bail application the accused was in custody and at the stage of confirmation of such interim bail it is not required for the accused to surrender to custody.

K.M. Mangrola v. State of Gujarat (2006)9 SCC 54O. (2006)3 SCC (Cri) 224

36. However, in another decision a single judge of Kerala High Court regard being had to Art. 21 of the Constitution has observed that a bail application on behalf of the person who appears in Court on his own volition or is produced in execution of the warrant has to be considered and orders should be passed on the same day Itself since the personal liberty of an accused cannot be curtailed in a whimsical or disdainful manner.

Biju S. Praveen v. State of keral 2007 Cr. L.J. (NOC) 291 (Ker).

37. Allahabad High Court tias also held that the High Court should not direct any subordinate Court to decide the bail application on the same day, as that would be interfering with the judicial discretion of the Court hearing the bail application. It is, however, pointed out that when the bail application is under s. 437, Cr PC, ordinarily, the Magistrate should himself decide the bail application on the same day and if he decides in a rare and exceptional case not to decide on the same day, he must record his reasons in writing.

Amravati v. state of U.P. 2005 Cr. L.J. 755 (ALL) (Full Bench of Seven Judges

38. Withdrawal of bail application. There is no bar to any accused applying subsequently for the withdrawal of the application for bail or not to press the bail petition. But the accused cannot as of right claim withdrawal of bail application.

Ahoke Dhariwal v. State of Rajasthan 1982 Cr. L. J. 2335 (Raj).

39. Magistrate granting bail ex parte. There is no bar to the Magistrate in granting bail ex. Parte during investigation arid such order can be justified bythe urgency of the situation in doing so.

Aruna Goenka v. Rajesh Goenka 1986 Cr. LR 82 (Cal).

40. Order of bail can be modified at any time. It has been observed by Bombay High Court that it is well- settled that the order of bail is an interlocutory order and same can be modified even by the same Court at any time.

Nazeem v. Asst. Collector of Customs 1992 Cr. L. J. 390 (Bom).

41. While granting bail, the Court must indicate the reasons for prima facie concluding why the bail was being granted. Any order dehors such reasons suffers from non-application of mind. Though a conclusive finding in regard to points urged by the parties is not expected of the Court considering the bail application, yet giving reason is different from discussing merits or demerits. But a detailed documentation of the merits of the case has not to be undertaken. But that does not mean that while granting bail some reasons for prima facie is not required to be indicated.

Mansab Ali v. irsan 2003 Cr. L. J. 871 (SC) ; (2003) 1 SCC 632. 3

42. On the other hand, the Bombay High Court has expressed the view that an order granting the bail under s. 437(1) or under s. 439(1), Cr PC is a final eider and if such an order is passed by a Magistrate under &. 432, Gr BG the same can, be challenged in the Court of Session or High Court under the revisional power and there cannot be any bar in entertaining a revisional application under s.437 Cr. PC. The first such decision of Bombay High Court has been rendered in Sakuntala YRoshanlat Agarwal.

BAIL GRANTED

SOME LEGAL POSITIONS WHERE ACCUSED ENTITLED TO BE RELEASED ON BAIL-

Even when the investigation proceeded to some extent no evidence has been collected so far against the accused then the Punjab and Haryana High Court has ordered the accused to be released on bail.

(2) When it is found that the petitioner is in jail for several months and his previous petition for bail was refused by High Court but the present petition has been filed on the ground of delay in trial of the case, the Punjab and Haryana High Court ordered release of the accused on bail on taking the view that it is not known as to how long the trial would continue.

(3) When in a rape case the investigation is already over and evidence so far collected is not very convincing then even though it is neither expedient nor proper to express any opinion regarding the merits or demerits of the prosecution case, yet when the investigation is already over, the accused should not be detained further and should be released on bail.

(4) When it is found that the trial of the accused in a murder case is being dragged and the case was adjourned for two months since the submission of the public Prosecutor that he had illegible copies of the challan papers notwithstanding that original challan papers were on record and the order-sheet also was not showing whether summonses had been issued for the witnesses or whether they had been served or not, the learned Judge of Madhya Pradesh High Court has observed that the accused has been made to suffer the delay which was occasioned by the state of affairs smacking of the abuse of the process of the Court and, therefore, the accused was entitled to be released on bail.

(5) When the High Court found that there was no serious attempt at all on the part of the prosecution, and the Trial Court, for a speedy trial and if what has happened so far as an indication the applicant is surely going to languish for quite some time in jail for no fault of his so far as the tardiness of the trial is concerned, it is a fit case for the accused being released on bail even if he is being tried in an offence under s. 302, IPC.

(6) When it is found that the Magistrate is not committing the accused to Session Court for a period of nine months though the case had been taken by him on several dates, the learned Judge of Allahabad High Court held that the accused is entitled to be released on bail.

(7) When the accused is ailing in jail but despite order of expeditious disposal of the case accused has not been produced before the Court on a number of occassions necessitating adjournment of the case, it is a fit case in which the accused should be released on bail.[B]

(8) Only because there is a necessity of searching the house of the accuse bail cannot be refused when there is no other valid ground for refusing bail.

(9) When the petitioners who were of young age were arrested for offences under ss. 148, 302 and 325, IPC there were no specific allegations made against them in FIR. No incriminating materials were found from them. Their bail application were rejected several times for holding T.I. Parade. Gauhati High Court thought the case fit for granting bail to the petitioners.[15]

(10) In Divrala Sati's case, the accused a child being the real brother of the decreased husband of Rup Kanwar lit fire on the pyre. The Children Court trying the child accused refused bail. The Appellate Court dismissed the appeal on the ground that the accused if allowed to remain in the custody of his parents might believe in the glorification of sati. Before High Court an application under s. 439, Cr PC was moved for the bail of the child accused. The learned Judge released the accused on bail on the ground that in the interest of the child not only for his physical development but also for mental development he should be released on bail instead of being sent to observation home.

(11) The accused persons are prosecuted under ss. 395 and 397, IPC. No recovery of stolen property was made from them. Arrest was made on the next date of the occurrence from a place about 10 or 15 kilometres away from the place of occurrence. No identification parade was held. Even though the challan has been filed against the accused persons, the bail should be granted.

(12) It is found that there is continued extension of judicial detention without production of the accused. Only next date of production has been noted -by the Magistrate on the jail warrant bearing the rubber seal impression. It is held that under s. 309, Cr PC custody of the accused in jail can be maintained and continued only by a warrant issued by the Magistrate and when there is no valid warrant, his confinement is illegal and he should be released on bail.

(13) The accused has been arrested on suspicion of being engaged in manufacture, distribution and sale of adulterated medicine. They are in jail for long and the investigation is almost over. Other persons have already been released on bail. It is a fit case to grant bail on conditions.

(14) When the bail application by accused and co-accused was refused but the CO-accused was granted bail on second application, then the second application by the accused should also be allowed' to maintain parity.

(15) The dispute between the accused party and the complainant party is one for the possession of land and against the complainant party a cross case under SS. 440,447,323 arid 324, IPC is also pending and the accused also sustained injury. So it is a fit case for the accused to-be released on bail.

(16) The charge against the accused is under s. 306, IPC for instigating the deceased to commit suicide. But the deceased committed suicide 13 years after the marriage. No prima facie evidence is there of abetment of suicide. The deceased was a mental patient. So the bail has been granted to the husband of the deceased.

(17) The applicant even though accused of a gruesome murder was in custody for about six months. He was granted interim bail but did not misuse liberty. He is a heart patient. The police is opposing bail application on fabricating materials. The prosecutor has tried to hoodwink the Court by relying on complaints which are false to their knowledge. It has been held by Bombay High Court that the accused cannot be denied bail any longer.

(18) When evidence against the accused is recovery of some stolen articles and the other accused person similarly situated have been released on bail and when the accused is tender aged he should be released on bail even if his earlier bail applications have been rejected.

(19) The accused is the husband of the victim girl who committed suicide. On the basis of the FIR of the step-mother of the victim the accused has been charged under Ss. 304B/498A read with s. 34, IPC. His earlier two bail applications have been rejected. When the third application has been filed, the High Court having considered the materials that transpired during investigation and also considering the fact that the daughter of the petitioner is hardly 20 months' old considered the case on humanitarian ground and directed the accused to be admitted on bail.

(20) When the Trial Court rejected bail petition of the accused only on the ground that Other cases are pending against the accused the High Court in an application under s. 439, Cr PC has observed that only on the ground that other cases are pending against the accused bail cannot be refused. When that was the only ground to refuse bail the High Court granted bail to the accused under s. 439, Cr PC.

(21) After filing of the challan four eye-witnesses have been examined from which no offence has been made out against the accused, the application, for bail has been made to High Court. It is also disclosed that other co-accused who also actively participated in the murder had been released on bail. So the High Court has granted the accused bail with condition that he would appear in Court as and when called by the Court during the pendency of the bail.

(22) The accused, a foreign national is charged with offences under ss. 11, 12 and 13 of the Prevention of Corruption Act 1988 for which maximum punishment is five years. The investigation is completed even though charge-sheet has not yet been submitted. In these circumstances the Delhi High Court granted the accused bail subject to the term that his passport already confiscated will remain with the CBI and the officer of Foreign Registration Office shall not permit the accused to tavel out of India by any Airlines.

(23) When several police constables have been charged with gang rape but the applicant in bail who is a cook in Police Outpost charged for abetting the said rape on ground that even though he had seen the incident he did not prevent commission of offence but he is aged 70 years. So he deserved to be released on bail.

(24) When the accused petitioner is charged with minor offence of exhortation and was neither involved in any other offence nor was a history sheeter, he cannot be denied bail only because the main accused, his elder brother was a desperado and could not be arrested because of political influence.

(25) Occurrence took place ten years before. There is no allegation of apprehension of repetition of offence or abscondence of the accused or tampering with evidence in case of release on bail. So the bail can be granted to the accused even if the accused is implicated in an offence of murder.[11]

(26) The accused persons are charged under s. 120B read with s. 420, IPC. There is no likelihood to tampering with evidence. Bail should be granted.

(27) When there was no strong prima facie case of murder and the complicity of the accused of the same was not proved and initially the case was registered for offence of rash and negligent driving against the driver of the vehicle in which the deceased was traveling and subsequently on the death of the victim the accused was charged with offence of murder, the accused was entitled to be released on bail in view of the above facts and circumstances.

(28) Even though it was a case of murder of a young boy but both the accused persons were behind the bar for more than two years. During the trial only some of the witnesses were examined. There was apprehension that the examination of the remaining witnesses would take much time. The Rajasthan High Court having found that such apprehension was not without any foundation thought it fit to release an accused person on bail.

(29) Where the trial could not commence for long for which the accused respondents were not responsible, it would be travesty of justice to keep the accused under further detention as under-trial prisoners. So, the bail granted by the High Court with the appropriate conditions has been upheld by the Supreme Court.

(30) The accused is in the custody for about a year. Charge-sheet has been filed. Having regard to the fact that the trial may take longtime the Supreme Court released the accused on bail imposing certain conditions on him due to his alleged links with the international terrorists.[16]

(31) Bail cannot be refused merely on the ground that the appellant hailing from another State may abscond from the jurisdiction of the Court who granted bail. So, the bail was granted by the Supreme Court with some conditions for ensuring his participation in the trial.

(32) The accused were aged 79 years and 76 years, The bail is opposed on the ground that the accused were not available for investigation. It was a case of misappropriation of huge amount of money and for the purpose of investigation custody of the accused was not required. The accused persons submitted that they were never called by the investigating agency for the purpose of investigation and that they were ready and willing to co-operate with the investigation. Considering the facts and circumstances of the case, bail was granted to the accused subject to certain conditions.

(33) The affidavit has been filed by the sister of the appellant in May, 2004 that in note of the 24 cases registered against the appellant for the period from the year, 19-80-2002, tthe police had applied for production of the appellant. That averment have not been controverted despite grant of opportunity, it was a fit case for releasing the accused on bail pending trial.

(34) When on facts prima facie a strong case has been made out for grant of bail of the appellant petitioner, the bail was granted by the Supreme Court on certain terms.

(35) in a fodder scam case, the appellant having been in the custody for fourteen months and merely eight months having elapsed since the Supreme Court rejected the last bail application and other accused in the said case who had been in the 'custody for over six months or more having been released on bail, the appellant is also granted bail.

(36) When the economic offences have been alleged against the petitioner, Director of Co-Operative Bank, but there is no apprehension that if enlarged on bail, he will tamper with the evidence and he has deposited the considerable amount of money defalcated and promised to pay the balance by installments he should not be refused bail when in the meantime he has. been removed from the post of the Director.

(37) When the accused alleged to be implicated in murder is in the custody for six years and four months and the co-accused has been granted bail, he should be released on bail.

(38) The allegation against the accused is for cheating and forgery. The investigation was not complete despite expiry of sixty days for filing the charge-sheet. The initial report submitted by the police cannot be treated to be supplementary charge-sheet, so as to defeat the right of the accused as he is in the custody for about six month. The accused is entitled to be released on bail.[6]

(39) The allegations against the accused persons who are office bearers of the Co-Operative Bank are involved in financial irregularities with the applicants/ borrowers resulting in huge loss to the bank. But they have paid part of the loan to the Bank during the criminal proceedings. The other accused having the same status has already been released on bail. When the investigation qua of the applicants have become complete, they should also be released on bail.

(40) The FIR indicated that the shot was fired accidentally. The bail has been rejected by the Trial Court because the informant appeared and stated that the shot was fired in his presence by the accused. It is held that for considering whether the bail should be granted or not, the FIR and materials collected during the investigation were to be looked into. But such statement of the informant before the Court at the time of bail hearing should not be used by the Court to refuse bail. So, the bail was granted by the High Court.

(41) The accused is charged with the offence of conspiring with the co-accused to commit the murder. But the statement of eye-witnesses, confession of the co-accused and the conduct of the co-accused to contact the applicant after crime is not sufficient to connect the applicant with the crime. So, he should be released on bail.

(42) The accused is in the custody for two years. Trial is being postponed for no fault of the accused. Trial is not likely to be concluded soon. So, the accused should be enlarged on bail on imposing certain conditions.[10]

(43) Offence of murder arises out of the political rivalry. The application for bail is resisted only on the ground that one of the bullets/empty case of the revolver of main accused allegedly used by him in commission of crime is yet to be recovered. But even after the custody of the accused for over twenty days, the same cannot be recovered. In such a case, considering the evidence collected by the police, nature of accusation and gravity of offence, the accused has been released on bail by the High Court with P.R. Bond of Rs. 20,000 with one surety."

(44) The accused is charged with pouring acid on the face of two girls. But the case diary and the report of the doctor who examined them did not indicate any attack with acid and only the allegation was of assault. Nothing except a plastic bag alleged to be containing a drop of acid was recovered from the spot but the same has not been chemically examined. The victims were never sent to the Government hospital but were alleged to be treated in the private hospital. The circumstances give rise to reasonable doubt regarding the veracity of the prosecution story. So, the applicant is entitled to bail.

(45) The evidence of prosecution witnesses is already over. But the trial has been stayed by the order of the Supreme Court at the stage of recording the statement of the accused. The applicant-accused persons are already in the jail for over two years. They are, entitled to be released on bail.

(46) The accused involved in s. 498A, IPC is in fact in custody for sufficiently long time. He should be released on bail.

(47) In Telgi Stamp case, the appellant, Deputy Superintendent of Stamps was arrested during the course of investigation about fourteen years after the registration of the case. He is in custody for more than two years and three months. On consideration of the relevant circumstances and taking note of the period during which the accused was in custody, the Supreme Court thought it fit to release him on his furnishing security to the satisfaction of the Special Court and imposing certain conditions.

(48) The accused is charged with the offences under ss. 192, 217, 218, 263(a), IPC read with s. 3 and s. 34 of the Maharashtra Control of Organised Crimes Act, 1999. The allegations in the charge-sheet are not per se sufficient to bring home offence under s. 3 of the Maharashtra Act of 1999. Moreover, maximum punishment under the Maharashtra Act is three years imprisonment of which the accused petitioners are in custody for two years. So, it is a fit case for grant of bail.

(49) Allegations are that the applicant did not supervise the work properly in the capacity as S.D.O. and wrong measurements have been made by his subordinate. But his subordinate has already been released on bail. So, the applicant is entitled to regular bail.

(50) In case of death of a married woman within 5-7 months of marriage, to incriminating m material was found pointing as to homicidal or suicidal death supported by medical evidence. Allegation of torture meted out to the deceased by her husband and relatives for demand of dowry has not been substantiated prima f The doctor conducting post mortem examination has not been examined. Investigation has been completed long back and the accused persons are permanent residents of the locality. Hence, they are directed to be released on bail.

(51) The accused husband sustained number of injuries while trying to save the life of the wife. Injuries were not superficial. Accused can be said to have no intention to cause the death of his wife. Moreover, in the dying declaration there was no mention of dowry or ill-treatment. So for the alleged offence of dowry death. the accused is entitled to bail.

(52) The accused is involved in the offence of criminal conspiracy to commit murder. But no overt act was attributed to the accused in the commission of me crime only an isolated witness who supported the prosecution case had motive to falsely implicate the accused. The trial court did not complete the trial even within extended time. The accused was well-educated youngman not having any objectionable antecedents. He did not indulge in tampering the witness. So, the High Court granted bail to the accused.

(53) The accused police officer was charged in stamp scam for abstaining from taking necessary action by himself or though his subordinate. The plea of the accused is that he himself is a subordinate officer not in position to take some actions alleged to have been taken by him. The High Court granted bail. The Supreme Court did not wish to interfere.

44. The Supreme Court has laid enphsis on the disposal of the bail application the same day.

46. Illegal detention.—Illegal detention of the accused constitutes ground for grant of bail. 49. Where accused applicants office bearers 01 a Cooperative bank were charged for committing financial irregularities, and causing loss to the bank, had paid part of the Idan amount during pending of criminal proceedings, co-accused had already been released on bail, the applicants were enlarged on bail for offences under Ss. 167, 406, 420, 467, 468 and 471 read with S. 120B and S. 46 of the Banking, Regulation Act, especially when investigation qua applicants was over and charge sheet had been submitted in the case.

P.C.: (Per V.M. Kanade, J.)

1. This is an application for bail. Brief facts are that the Petitioner, alongwith other accused, was tried by the Trial Court for the offences punishable under sections 465, 468, 121, 121-A, 120-B read with section 34 of the Indian Penal Code and also under section 25(1) of the Arms Act and section 74 of the Indian Information and Technology Act. The learned Ad-hoc Additional District & Sessions Judge, Thane was pleased to acquit the Petitioner for the offences with which he was charged by the judgment and order dated 22/12/2004.

2. The State preferred an appeal against acquittal vide Criminal Appeal No.315 of 2007 in this Court and while admitting the appeal, this Court directed that action be taken under section 390 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Thereafter, the matter was adjourned from time to time for compliance of action under section 390 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

3. Since the Petitioner was not found at his earlier address, a non-bailable warrant was issued against him by this Court by order dated 18/07/2011. According to the Petitioner, he was informed by his neighbours who were residing at the earlier address that the non-bailable warrant had been issued and, therefore, after taking legal advice, he has filed this application in this court for granting stay to the execution of the non-bailable warrant and for grant of his release on bail, pending the hearing and final disposal of the appeal.

4. The learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the Petitioner submitted that the Petitioner had changed his residence and was residing at his native place near Ratnagiri alongwith his family members and he was not aware about admission of appeal filed by the State in this Court. He submitted that in order to prove that he was residing at Ratnagiri he has relied upon the copy of his and also his wife's election card and also the ration card, Unique Identification Card of his family, Birth Certificate issued by Ratnagiri Municipal Council in respect of his son and his Permanent Account Number Card.

5. The learned APP appearing on behalf of the State, after verification of the said documents, submitted that the said documents are genuine and, therefore, it is apparent that the Petitioner was not deliberately absconding after nonbailable warrant was issued against him. In view of this, by order dated 29/08/2011, this Court was pleased to cancel the non-bailable warrant which was issued by this Court and released him on bail on his executing P.R. Bond in the sum of Rs 5,000/- before the Trial Court.

6. During the course of arguments, the learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the Petitioner made a grievance that in large number of cases though the accused is acquitted by the Trial Court, after action is directed to be taken under section 390 and after he is arrested he continues to languish in jail. He submitted that, in the past also, this Court in the year 2004 and 2009 had given suitable directions to the Trial Court to ensure that accused who are acquitted by the Trial Court should not continue to languish in jail as it clearly amounted to violation of Article 21 of the Constitution of India. He also submitted that in view of recent amendment to the Cr.P.C and introduction of section 437-A, Trail Courts are insisting on execution of P.R. Bond with sureties and, as a result, even after the accused is acquitted, he continues to languish in jail. In support of his submissions, he relied upon the following judgments.

1. State of Maharashtra vs. Bapu Pandu Maili reported in 2010 ALL MR (Cri) 120
2. State of U.P. vs. Poosu and another reported in (1976) 3 SCC 1
3. Shaik Mullapalli Shamshad Begum & Ors. vs. Public Prosecutor, High Court of Andhra Pradesh, reported in II (2004) DMC 105 (DB).
4. State of Punjab vs. Bachittar Singh Lal Singh and others reported in 1972 CRI.LJ. 341 (V 78 C 80) FULL BENCH.

7. We have heard the learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the Petitioner and the learned APP appearing on behalf of the State.

8. It has been brought to our notice that, in large number of cases, though accused are acquitted by the Trial Court, they continue to languish in jail during pendency of the appeal against acquittal filed by the State on account of direction given by this court under section 390 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Secondly, it is also brought to our notice that the provisions of section 437-A are not properly interpreted and on account of likelihood of the victim filing appeal against acquittal, the acquitted accused are directed to furnish P.R. Bond alongwith sureties and, as a result, even after acquittal, those accused who are unable to furnish sureties, continue to languish in jail and, in some cases, on erroneous interpretation of section 437-A bail is granted by the Sessions Court to the accused who are convicted on/or before pronouncement of judgment of conviction. Under these circumstances, therefore, though the Petitioner is released on bail by our order dated 29/08/2011, it has become necessary to lay down certain guidelines on this issue.

9. Section 390 of the Criminal Procedure Code reads as under:-

"390. Arrest of accused in appeal from acquittal.- When an appeal is presented under section 378, the High Court may issue a warrant directing that the accused be arrested and brought before it or any subordinate Court, and the Court before which he is brought may commit him to prison pending the disposal of the appeal or admit him to bail."

On the plain reading of the said provision, it is quite apparent that discretion is vested in the High Court to issue warrant directing the arrest of the accused and his production before it or before any subordinate court who may then commit him to prison, pending disposal of the appeal or admit him to bail. The obvious purpose of giving this power to the High Court is to ensure that the accused who is acquitted by the Trial Court is made available during pendency of the appeal against acquittal and, to that extent, his status as accused revives and, at the same time, it has to be borne in mind that principle that accused is presumed to be innocent is confirmed by virtue of the order of acquittal by the Trial Court and, therefore, he is no longer an accused and, therefore, under normal circumstances, he is entitled to avail of his liberty during pendency of the appeal.

Therefore, if the relevant documents are tendered regarding proof of his permanent residence and ownership of the property then, in such cases, he is entitled to be released on bail as a matter of rule. It has to be also remembered that Mr. Justice

Krishna Iyer in his famous judgment has coined a phrase that bail is a rule and jail is an exception. Therefore, Sessions Court should remember that there is all the more reason to immediately release the accused after he is produced before it and his further detention would certainly be viewed as a breach of his fundamental right under Article 21.

10. The Apex Court in *State of U.P. vs. Poosu and another*1 has traced the background and the circumstances under which the said provision was inserted in the Cr.P.C. In the said case, the question which fell for consideration before the Supreme Court was : whether the Supreme Court, while granting special leave to appeal under Article 126 of the Constitution against an order of acquittal passed by the High Court, can pass similar order as is passed by the High Court under section 390. While answering this question in the affirmative, the Apex Court has traced the historical background of the exercise of such power and also has observed that it does not offend Article 21. The Apex Court has referred to section 427 of the Cr.P.C., 1898 which was re-enacted as section 390 of a new Code of 1973 and has noted that even before its enactment, the High Court, as a matter of judicial practice, had the power pending appeal against the order of acquittal to secure attendance of the accused/respondent by bailable or non-bailable warrant. In 1 (1976) 3 SCC 1 this context, it would be relevant to refer to paragraphs 7 to 10 of the said judgment which read as under:-

"7 It may be noted that this provision was for the first time enacted in the Code of 1882. But even before its enactment, the High Court as a matter of judicial practice, had the power, pending the appeal against an order of acquittal to secure the attendance of the accused-respondent by bailable or non-bailable warrants. As pointed out by Panigrahi, C.J in State v. Badapalli Adi [ILR 1955 Cut 589].

What was formerly the judicial practice received statutory recognition in the year 1882 when this provision in Section 427, Criminal Procedure Code, was introduced. In Empress of India v. Mangu [ILR (1879) 2 All 349] (which was decided several years before the addition of this provision in the Code), a Full Bench of Allahabad High Court held, that the High Court has the power to cause the arrest and detention of the accused in prison, pending an appeal against an order of acquittal. To the same effect was the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Queen vs. Gobin Tewari [ILR (1876) 1 Cal. 281. Again in Queen-Empress vs. Gobardhan [ILR (1887) 9 All 528], Sir John Edge, Chief justice without laying down any inflexible rule, emphasized that it is not desirable that, pending the appeal against acquittal in a capital case, the prisoner should remain at large while his fate is being discussed by the High Court. The ratio of this decision was followed by a Division Bench of Orissa High Court in state v. Badapalli Adi (supra)."

8. Viewed in this perspective, it is clear that even before the enactment of this provision, the High Court had the power to cause, in its discretion, the arrest and detention in prison of the accused respondent or his enlargement on bail, pending disposal of the appeal against his acquittal. This power was ancillary to and necessary for an effective exercise of its jurisdiction in an appeal against an order of acquittal, conferred on the High Court by the Code.

9. As far back as 1824, in the English case, Bana v. Methuen [2 Bens 228] Best, J., following an older precedent, enunciated the rule that When an act of Parliament gives a justice jurisdiction over an offence, it impliedly gives him a power to make out a warrant, and bring before him any person charged with such offence.

10. This is the rationale of Section 427. As soon as the High Court on perusing a petition of appeal against an order of acquittal considers that there is sufficient ground for interfering and issuing process to the respondent, his status as an accused person and the proceedings against him, revive. The question of judging his guilt or innocence in respect of the charge against him, once more become sub judice."

11. The High Court, therefore, has discretion of issuing warrant under section 390. In our view, the said warrant need not necessarily be non-bailable warrant, though section states that he has to be produced before the Trial Court, which would ordinarily mean that the said warrant would be a non-bailable warrant. Secondly, since the power is vested in the High Court, the High Court also would be in a position to direct that the accused when produced before the Trial Court may be released on bail on his execution of P.R. Bond with or without sureties. The High Court or Trial Court may also release him on execution of the same bond and surety which was offered during pendency of the trial. The High Court would be empowered to do so in view of the language used in section 390 and also, in our view, on account of inherent power vested in it under section 482 of the Cr.P.C. The Division Bench of this Court in *State of Maharashtra vs. Bapu Pandu Mali*1 noticed that though the accused was acquitted by the Trial Court he languished in jail for a period of five years. The Division Bench has observed in paras 3, 4, 5 and 6 of its judgment as under:- 1 2010 ALL MR (Cri) 120

"3. This is a sorry state of affairs in which not only the prosecuting agency but also the Courts are involved. This is a reflection on our own system, which needs to be corrected. A person, who is acquitted of the charges by a Court of law, should not remain in jail even for a day after acquittal, unless the order of acquittal is reversed by an appellate Court.

Even if the acquittal of the respondent were to be set aside by this Court today, even then, we cannot justify his detention after his acquittal by the Sessions Court till date.

4. We have perused Section 390 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which section only lays down a mechanism by which it is ensured that an acquitted person does not abscond while an appeal is filed against his acquittal. Therefore, we do not feel that there should be any impediment for the Courts to release the persons who are acquitted during the pendency of the appeals against acquital.

5. After hearing the learned amicus curiae and the learned Additional Public Prosecutor, we give the following directions:-

That in case of warrant under Section 390, the Sessions Judge, on production of the persons, shall immediately offer him bail on conditions which are just and proper, and in appropriate cases, the Sessions Judge may also consider release of such persons on personal bond. However, if he learned Sessions Judges are of the view that the surety is not produced or surety is not sufficient, they would remand the persons to the prison. In that case, they should inform the High Court immediately that the person has been remanded to the custody in case originally, the warrants are issued by the High Court.

6. We are told that such directions were given in year 2004 also, but the learned Sessions Judges have not been following these directions. Therefore, in case, in future, any Sessions Judge is found not to follow the directions, besides taking departmental action against such 13 (APPA-1087.11) learned Sessions Judge, he shall also be liable to contempt of this Court."

12. We are, therefore, constrained to issue similar directions to the Sessions Court. We have been told that though orders which are passed by the Supreme Court and this Court are shown to the Sessions Court, without justifiable reasons or recording any reasons in writing, directions given by this Court are not followed. It is, therefore reiterated that, in case, in future, if any Sessions Judge is found not to follow the directions, besides taking administrative action against such learned Sessions Judge, he shall also be liable for contempt of this Court.

13. The presence of accused can also be secured in the following manner:-

(i) Name and address of the Accused shall be taken on record at the time of pronouncement of Judgment by the Trial Court.

(ii) The accused should submit his local address where he would reside after Order of acquittal as well as address of his native place.

14 (APPA-1087.11)

(iii) Declaration of place of residence should be made and proof of it, if any, may be supplied. No insistence should be made about proof of residence if particulars are given.

(iv) The accused – Respondent should furnish the addresses of his near and dear relatives.

(v) The Accused be also directed to not to leave India without the prior permission of this Hon'ble Court.

(vi) Under certain circumstances, the Accused be directed to furnish the details of his passport and/or passport be deposited with the prosecution agency for a period of six months.

(vii) The Accused may also be released on his executing the same P.R. Bond and Surety Bond if the Accused were on bail pending trial.

(viii) If the Accused is not on bail pending trial then he may be released

15 (APPA-1087.11) forthwith on P.R. Bond and time be granted to him to furnish surety to the satisfaction of the Trial Court.

(ix) The Trial Court may also release the accused on cash bail in appropriate cases and they may be directed to furnish surety within a reasonable period.

14 So far as section 437-A of Cr.P.C. is concerned, it was incorporated by virtue of Amendment Act No.5 of 2009. The aim and object of the said Amendment Act was to ensure that victims are given certain additional rights of filing appeal in three categories of cases. It is brought to our notice that in certain cases even when the accused is convicted, the Sessions Court has released the accused on bail. In Sessions Case Nos.912/07, 956/07 and 480/09 the following order was passed by the Sessions Court.

"CORAM: HIS HONOUR THE 1ST AD-HOC ADDL SESSIONS JUsGE SHRI. S.Y. KULKARNI

APP Shri Kenjalkar for the State present. Sr. PI Ms. Medha Jaiprakash Kadam attached to Churchgate Railway police stn. is present. Accused nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 & 9 produced

16 (APPA-1087.11) from J.C. Adv. Mr. Passbola for accused No.1 present. Adv. Mr. Shinde for accused nos. 2, 7 and 9 present.

Adv. Mr. Shetty for accused nos. 3 & 8 is present.

Adv. Mr. Rajput for accused no.4 is present.

Adv. Mr. Kumthekar for accused no.6 is present.

Adv. Mr. Wahab Khan for accused No.5 is present.

Before pronouncing judgment by invoking provision u/s 437-A of Cr.P.C and as accused no.3 namely Asaitambi and accused no.7 Kadirawan, were on bail during the trial and during the pronouncement judgment they were taken in MCR, therefore accused no.3 Asaitambi @ Langada Statta and accused no.7 Kadiravan are ordered to be released on PR Bond of Rs 40,000/- and furnishing surety of like amount by each. That bail will be forced for further period of 6 months. Before pronouncing judgment by invoking provision u/s 437-A of Cr.P.C the accused nos. 5 & 6 are directed to furnish PR Bond of Rs 20,000/- and furnishing surety of like amount, that surety and PR Bond will be in force for further period of six months in case any appeal is preferred against the present judgment and order. Accused nos. 5 & 6 are permitted to furnish surety on or before 19.5.2011."

17 (APPA-1087.11) In this context, therefore, it is necessary to consider the said provision 437-A which reads as under:-

"437-A. Bail to require accused to appear before the next appellate Court.- (1) Before conclusion of the trial and before disposal of the appeal, the Court trying the offence or the Appellate Court, as the case may be, shall require the accused to execute bail bonds with sureties, to appear before the higher Court as and when such Court issues notice in respect of any appeal or petition filed against the judgment of the respective Court and such bail bonds shall be in force for six months.

(2) if such accused fails to appear, the bond stand forfeited and the procedure under section 446 shall apply."

15. In our view, though the section states that Trial Court may direct the accused to execute the P.R. Bond with sureties the said directions of execution of P.R. Bond with sureties will have to be treated as directory order and not mandatory order since the said provision will have to be 18 (APPA-1087.11) read alongwith other provisions which are there in the Cr.P.C. viz. Sections 441, 445 and, therefore discretion would vest in the Trial Court of directing the accused to execute a P.R. Bond and also ensure that his presence is secured in the manner as stated aforesaid in para 13 above.

16. From the language of section 437-A, it is apparent that the said provision is applicable only in cases where the Trial Court acquits the accused and it would not be applicable on conviction of the accused. All the Sessions Court are, therefore, directed not to release the convicted accused on bail under this provision.

17. In the case of *Hussainara Khatoon and others (1) vs Home Secretary, State of Bihar*1, the Supreme Court had expressed its anguish over the shocking state of affairs in regard to administration of justice in the State of Bihar when it noticed that alarmingly large number of men, women and children were behind bars for years, waiting trial in courts of law even in cases where offences with which some of them were charged were trivial and, even if proved, they would not warrant punishment for more than few months or perhaps for a year or two and yet, they were languishing in jail for a period ranging from 3 to 10 years even without trial. It appears that trials and tribulations of the accused are not over even after they are acquitted by the Trial Court 1 (1980) 1 SCC 81

19 (APPA-1087.11) and merely because appeal against their acquittal is pending in this Court, they continue to languish in jail. The State of Maharashtra is, therefore, directed to find out number of prisoners who fall in this category and who are in jail even after they are acquitted by the Trial Court merely because they are not in a position to furnish surety and report to that effect be submitted to this Court within a period of eight weeks. With these directions, application is disposed of.

Constitution of India, Art.141- PRECEDENTS - Judges are bound by precedents and procedure - They could use their discretion only when there is no declared principle to be found, no rule and no authority - where a single judge or a Division Bench does not agree with the decision of a Bench of co-ordinate jurisdiction, the matter shall be referred to a larger Bench. It is a subversion of judicial process not to follow this procedure - it is the duty of judges of superior courts and tribunals to make the law more predictable. The question of law directly arising in the case should not be dealt with apologetic approaches. The law must be made more effective as a guide to behaviour. It must be determined with reasons which carry convictions within the Courts, profession and public. Otherwise, the lawyers would be in a predicament and would not know how to advise their clients. Sub-ordinate courts would find themselves in an embarrassing position to choose between the conflicting opinions. The general public would be in dilemma to obey or not to obey such law and it ultimately falls into disrepute- One must remember that pursuit of the law, however glamorous it is, has its own limitation on the Bench. * Civil Writ Petn. No. 3420 of 1983, D/- 14-8-1985 (Bom)
Judgement
K. JAGANNATHA SHETTY, J.:- The case involved in these two appeals, with leave, seems indeed straightforward enough, but the High Court of Bombay made it, as we venture to think, unsatisfactory and in a sense against judicial propriety and decorum.
2. The facts which are of central importance may be stated as follows :
On June 19, 1982, the Government of Maharashtra issued a draft notification under See. 3(3) of the Bombay Provincial Municipal Corporation Act, 1949 (the "Act"). The draft notification proposed the formation of what is termed as "Kalyan Corporation" (the "Corporation"). It suggested the merging of Municipal areas of Kalyan, Ambarnath, Dombivali and Ulhasnagar. Against this proposal, there were many objections and representations from persons, companies and the authorities. Amarnath and Ulhasnagar Municipal bodies and also some of the residents therein submitted their representations. They objected to the merger of their municipal areas into the Corporation. It is said that in Ulhasnagar Municipal area, Sindhies are predominant. In 1947, they were the victims of partition of the country. Being uprooted from their home land, they have since settled down at Ulhasnagar. They have formed union or federation called the All India Sindhi Panchayat Federation.. It is interested in having a separate identity for Ulhasnagar. The Federation challenged the said draft notification by a writ petition before the Bombay High Court. The writ petition was not disposed of on merits. It was permitted to be withdrawn on an assurance given by the Government. The Government gave the assurance that the representatives of the Federation would be given an opportunity of being heard before taking a final decision. As per the assurance, they were given personal hearing on their representations. The others who have filed similar representations were not heard. But their objections or representations were duly considered. Thereupon, the Government decided to exclude Ulhasnagar from the proposed Corporation. Accordingly, a notification under Sec. 3(2) of the Act was issued. The Corporation was thus constituted without Ulhasnagar. That was the only alteration made in the proposal earlier notified. All other areas indicated in the draft notification were merged in the Corporation.
3. The residents of Ambarnath Municipal areas were not satisfied. They were, perhaps, more worried by the exclusion of Ulhasnagar than the inclusion of their own area. They moved the High Court under Article 226 of the Constitution challenging the notification issued under Sec. 3(2) of the Act. They interalia, contended that the action of the Government affording an opportunity of being heard only to the Federation and not to other objectors was contrary to Article 14. It was a hostile discrimination to hear only one of the objectors. They asserted that the establishment of the Corporation without Ulhasnagar Municipal area, having regard to the geographical contiguity was unintelligible and incomprehensible. It was arbitrary and opposed to the object of the Act. They also contended that there ought to have been a fresh draft notification after taking a decision to exclude Ulhasnagar from the proposal. With similar contentions and for the same relief, there was another writ petition before the High Court. It was filed by the National Rayon Corporation Limited which is a company located within the Municipal limits of Ambarnath.

4. The Sindhi Panchayat Federation was not a party to the writ petitions. It was, however, allowed as an intervener. Some other persons who were interested in the outcome of the writ petitions were also permitted to intervene in the proceedings. They supported the stand taken by the Government which was the main respondent in the writ petitions.

5. The State in its counter affidavit resisted the- petitioners' claim raising several grounds. The first point to be noted in this context is this :

"That the formation of Municipal Corporation under sec. 3 of the Act is an extension of the legislative process and, therefore, Sec. 3 is nothing but a piece of conditional legislation. The principles of natural justice will not apply to such legislative function nor it could be imparted into it even by necessary implication. The petitioners have not challenged the validity of the subsection (2) of Sec. 3 of the Act and even otherwise the said validity has been upheld by a Division Bench of this Court (Shah and Deshpande, JJ.) in Writ Petition No. 766-A of 1982 (The Village Panchayat Chikalthane and anr. v. the State of Maharashtra and anr.) decided on 23/24 December, 1982. Therefore, it cannot be said that the notification issued in exercise of the said legislative power is vitiated by non-compliance with the principles of natural justice. The conditions laid down by Sec. 3 are fully complied with; a preliminary notification was issued as contemplated by sub-section (4) of Sec. 3 of the Act; the objections and suggestions made by the various citizens and persons were duly considered by the State Government and thereafter the final notification was issued. In the very nature of things there is bound to be difference and variance between the preliminary notification and the final notification. Only because the Ulhasnagar Muncipal Council is excluded from the final notification, it cannot be said that there was any major departure from the preliminary notification or it was necessary to issue a preliminary notification over again before the final notification was issued in that behalf."

The second factual point to be noted in this :

"Due to partition of India in 1947, the Sindhi people have been uprooted from their homeland and with hard labour they have settled themselves in different parts of the country. One can appreciate their feelings about their anxiety to maintain their separate entity. If such a large part is forcibly included in the Corporation ignoring their sentiments and wishes, it may not result in smooth working of the proposed Corporation which is necessary for proper development. It is, therefore, desirable to constitute the new Kalyan Corporation without including Ulhasnagar for the time being."

6. The High Court was not impressed with the above reasonings. The High Court said that the decision to exclude Ulhasnagar was taken by the Government abruptly and in an irrational manner. The decision was arbitrary and against the purpose of the Act. On the legality of the procedure followed by the Government, the High Court said :

"Once that decision was taken, it was obligatory on the part of the Government to reconsider the proposal as a whole so far as the rest of the areas are concerned."

7. Reference was also made to the report of the "Sathe Commission" to fortify the conclusion that Ulhasnagar could not have been isolated. The "Sathe Commission" was a one man Commission appointed by the State Government to enquire and report on the establishment of new Municipal Corporations. The Commission in its report among others, seems to have indicated that Kalyan, Ulhasnagar and Ambarnath are one contiguous stretch of territory with a length of about 8 kms. from north-west to south-east.

8. The High Court then made some general observations as to the purpose for which Municipal Corporations should be constituted and went on:

"It was the avowed policy after independence to change the socio-economic map of the village and town. A corporate life can only be ensured if there is a corporate conscience and an attitude to live together. City is an epitome of the social world where all belts of civilization interest along its avenues. A Municipal Corporation is in nature, where people belonging to different castes,creeds, religions and language want to live with each other. Town planning cannot be denominational or fractional. It is not a museum of human beings otherwise Harijan Bastis, Mominpures and such other Mohallas will have to be preserved to maintain its separate identity and the socio-economic map of the village or city will never change. It cannot be forgotten that we are heading towards a global village. By saying this, we do not want to belittle the achievements of sacrifice of the Sindhi Community. However, that is not very relevant for deciding the question of the establishment of a Municipal Corporation. Its main object is to ensure better municipal government of the city. It appears that Government was also aware of this and this seems to be the reason why the decision "for the time being" is pertinent and clearly indicates that the Government wanted to reconsider the issue at a later stage. However, unfortunately till today Government has not taken any decision in that behalf."

9. The High Court, however, felt that it was not necessary to quash the notification establishing the Corporation. This is how the conclusion was reached :

"It will not be fair to quash the notification as a whole and unsettle the Municipal Administration. In our view, that is also not necessary since from the affidavit of the Government, it is clear that the decision taken in that behalf was tentative, i.e., for the time being and it is not all-time permanent decision. Under sub-section (3) of Sec. 3 of the act, the State Government has power to exclude or include any area specified in the notification issued so far as Ambarnath Town is concerned, reconsideration of the present case of the whole matter was absolutely necessary when the decision to exclude the Ulhasnagar Municipal Council from the proposed Municipal Corporation, though tentative in nature, was taken."

10. Finally, the operative portion of the Order was put in the following terms:

"Therefore, without setting aside the final notification, we direct the State Government to reconsider the proposal under sub-sec. (3) of Sec. 3 of the Bombay Provincial Municipal Corporations Act either to exclude or include any area, within a period of six months from today. The writ of mandamus to be issued accordingly. It is needless to say that after the necessary steps are taken under Sec. 3(3) of the Act, the State Government shall make the necessary amends in the notification issued.

xx xx xx xx xx xx xx

"In the result, therefore, the rule is made partly absolute and the State Government is directed to exercise its power under Sec. 3 sub-sec. (3) of the Act in accordance with law within a period of six months. It is needless to say that the petitioners will be entitled to raise objections and make their suggestions in that behalf after a notification under sub-sec. (3) read with sub-sec. (4) of Sec. 3 of the Act is issued. Since the popular local self Government is not in existence in any of the Municipal Councils or even in the newly established municipal corporation and having regard to the peculiar facts and circumstances of the case, in our view, this is a fit case where the petitioners of these two petitions and All India Sindhi Panchayat Federation should be given a reasonable opportunity of being heard before any final decision in the matter is taken."

11. Against the judgment of the High Court, the State Government has not preferred any appeal. The Kalyan City Corporation though vitally concerned with the matter, has also not appealed to this Court. The present appeals are only by those who were impleaded as interveners in the writ petitions.

12. We have heard counsel for all parties and gave our best attention to the questions raised by the appellants. Counsel for the appellants reiterated the stand taken by the Government before the High Court. He urged that the State has, a wide discretion in the selection of areas for constituting the Corporation and the Court cannot interfere with such discretion. The Court has no jurisdiction to examine the validity of the reason that goes into the decision of the Government. The power to constitute Municipal Corporations under Sec. 3 of the Act is legislative in character. It is an extension of legislative process for which rules of natural justice have no application. He said that the Government in the instant case has complied with the statutory requirements and it was not expected to do anything more in the premises. And, at any rate, it is wholly unnecessary according to the counsel to go through that exercise again as the High Court has suggested.

13. The other limb of the argument of counsel for the appellants relates to the manner in which the High Court disposed of the matter. It was said that a decision of this Court has been disregarded and a binding decision of a co-ordinate Bench of the same Court has been ignored.

14. The grievance of the appellants' counsel, in our opinion, is not wholly unjustified. At the beginning of the judgment, we have said that the High Court rendered the judgment in a sense against the judicial propriety and decorum. We were not happy to make that observation, but constrained to say so in the premise and background of the case. It may be noted that the result of the writ petitions before the High Court turns on the nature and scope of the power conferred on the Government under Sec. 3 of the Act. A division Bench of the High Court has taken the view that that power is in the nature of legislative process. That judgment was rendered on 23/24 December, 1982, by a Bench consisting of Shah and Deshpande, JJ. It was in writ petition No.706-A of 1982 - The Village Panchayat Chikalthana and another v. The State of Maharashtra and another. In that case, the challenge was to the validity of Sec. 3(2) of the Act on the ground that it suffers from the vice of excessive delegation for want of guidelines for the exercise of power. Repelling the contention, it was held that Sec. 3 is in the nature of a conditional legislation and, therefore, laying down the policy or guidelines to exercise the power was unnecessary. It was emphasized that the exercise of power under Sec. 3(2) is conditioned by only two requirements, viz., (1) previous publication as contemplated by sub-sec. (4) of Sec. 3 of the Act, (2) issuance of a notification by the Government after such previous publication. Once the Government publishes such a notification, the legislation becomes complete and the other provisions of the Act are ipso facto attracted to the Corporation so constituted. This was the view taken by the High Court in Chikalthane case. To reach that conclusion, the learned judges relied upon the decision of this Court in Tulsipur Sugar Company case (1980) 2 SCR 1111:(AIR 1980 SC 882).

15. The attention of the High Court in the present case was drawn to the decision in Chikalthane case. Counsel for the State and interveners seemed to have argued that the present case really fell fairly and squarely within that was said there. They were indeed on terra firma since the decision in Chikalthane case was a clear authority against every contention raised by the petitioners. Faced with this predicament, counsel for the petitioners urged before the High Court that their case should be referred to a larger Bench to reconsider the decision in Chikalthane case. But learned Judges, (Dharmadhikari and Kantharia, JJ.) did not heed to that submission. They neither referred the case to a larger Bench nor followed the view taken in the Chikalthane case. It was not as if they did not comprehend the issue to be determined and the principle to be applied. They were very much aware of it when they remarked :

"In our opinion, once it is accepted that this is a piece of conditional legislation, then it will have to be held that the principle of natural justice would not apply to such a case as held by the Division Bench of this Court in village Panchayat Chikalthane's case nor it could be said that because under a mistaken notice the Federation was heard, the denial of such a right to the petitioners will amount to hostile discrimination within the contemplation of Article 14 of the Constitution of India."

16. After referring to these simple legal principles, it was unfortunate that the issue at stake was little explored. The key question raised in the case was side-tracked and a new strategy to interfere with the decision of the Government was devised. The learned Judges directed the Government to publish against a draft notification for reconsideration of the matter. They gave liberty to the writ petitioners and the interveners to submit their representations. They observed that "this is a fit case where the parties should be given a reasonable opportunity of being heard." They did not quash the impugned notification, but told the Government to make necessary changes in the light of fresh consideration. All these directions were issued after recording a positive finding that the exclusion of Ulhas. nagar from the Corporation was arbitrary and irrational. The net result of it is that there is now no discretion with the Government to keep Ulhasnagar away from the Corporation.

17. It would be difficult for us to appreciate the judgment of the High Court.

One must remember that pursuit of the law, however glamorous it is, has its own limitation on the Bench. In a multi-judge court, the Judges are bound by precedents and procedure. They could use their discretion only when there is no declared principle to be found, no rule and no authority. The judicial decorum and legal propriety demand that where a learned single Judge or a Division Bench does not agree with the decision of a Bench of co-ordinate jurisdiction, the matter shall be referred to a larger Bench. It is a subversion of judicial process not to follow this procedure.

18. Deprecating this kind of tendency of some judges, Das Gupta, L, in Mahadeolal Kanodia v. The Administrator General of West Bengal, AIR 1960 SC 936 said (at p. 94l) :

"We have noticed with some regret that when the earlier decision of two Judges of the same High Court in Deorajin's case, 58 Cal WN 64 : AIR 1954 Cal 119 was cited before the learned Judges who heard the present appeal they took on themselves to say that the previous decision was wrong, instead of following the usual procedure in case of difference of opinion with an earlier decision, of referring no less than legal propriety form the basis of judicial procedure. If one thing is more necessary in law than any other thing, it is the quality of certainty. That quality would totally disappear if Judges of co-ordinate jurisdiction in a High Court start overruling one another's decison."

19. The attitude of Chief Justice, Gajendragadkar, in Lala Shri Bhagwan v. Ram Chand, AIR 1965 SC 1767 was not quite different (at p. 1773) :

"It is hardly necessary to emphasize that considerations of judicial propriety and decorum require that if a learned single Judge hearing a matter is inclined to take the view that the earlier decisions of the High Court, whether of a Division Bench or of a single Judge, need to be reconsidered, he should not embark upon that enquiry sitting as single Judge, but should refer the matter to a Division Bench or, in a proper case, place the relevant papers before the Chief Justice to enable him to constitute a larger Bench to examine the question. That is the proper and traditional way to deal with such matters and it is founded on healthy principles of judicial decorum and propriety. It is to be regretted that the learned single Judge departed from this traditional way in the present case and chose to examine the question himself."

20. The Chief Justice Pathak, in a recent decision stressed the need for a clear and consistent enunciation of legal principle in the decisions of a Court. Speaking for the Constitution Bench (Union of India v. Raghubir Singh (1989) 2 SCC 754: (AIR 1989 SC 1933) learned Chief Justice said (at p. 766) (of SCC) (at p. 1939 of AIR):

"The doctrine of binding precedent has the merit of promoting a certainty and consistency in judicial decisions, and enables an organic development of the law, besides providing assurance to the individual as to the consequence of transactions forming part of his daily affairs. And, therefore, the need for a clear and consistent enunciation of legal principle in the decisions of a Court."

Cardozo propounded a similar thought with more emphasis :

"I am not to mar the symmetry of the legal structure by the introduction of inconsistencies and irrelevancies and artificial exceptions unless for some sufficient reason, which will commonly by some consideration of history or custom or policy of justice. Lacking such a reason, I must be logical just as I must be impartial, and upon like grounds. It will not do to decide the same question one way between one set of litigants and the opposite way between another" (The Nature of the Judicial Process by Benjamin N. Cardozo p. 33).

In our system of judicial review which is a part of our Constitutional scheme, we hold it to be the duty of judges of superior Courts and Tribunals to make the law more predictable. The question of law directly arising In the case should not be dealt with apologetic approaches. The law must be made more effective as a guide to behaviour. It must be determined with reasons which carry convictions within, the Courts, profession and public. Otherwise, the lawyers would be in a predicament and would not know how to advise their clients. Subordinate Courts would find themselves in an embarrassing position to choose between the conflicting opinions. The general public would be in dilemma to obey or not to obey such law and it ultimately falls into disrepute.

21. Judge learned Hand has referred to the tendency of some judges "who win the game by sweeping all the chessmen off the table". (The Spirit of liberty by Alfred A. Knopf, New York (1953) p. 131). This is indeed to be deprecated. It is needless to state that the judgment of superior Courts and Tribunals must be written only after deep travail and positive vein. One should never let a decision go until he is absolutely sure it is right. The law must be made clear, certain and consistent. But certitude is not the test of cetainty and consistency does not mean that there should be no word of new content. The principle of law may develop side by side with new content but not inconsistencies. There could be waxing and waning the principle depending upon the pragmatic needs and moral yearnings. Such development of law particularly, is inevitable in our developing country. In Raghubir Singh case, learned Chief Justice Pathak had this to say ((1989) 2 SCC 754 at p. 767 : (AIR 1989 SC 1933 at p. 1939)) :

"Legal compulsions cannot be limited by existing legal propositions, because, there will always be, beyond the frontiers of the existing law, new areas inviting judicial scrutiny and judicial choice-making which could well affect the validity of existing legal dogma. The search for solutions responsive to a changed social era involves a search not only among competing propositions of law, or competing versions of a legal proposition, or the modalities of an indeterminacy such as "fairness" or "reasonableness", but also among propositions from outside the ruling law, corresponding to the empirical knowledge or accepted values of present time and place, relevant to the dispensing of justice within the new parameters.

The universe of problems presented for judicial choice-making at the growing points of the law is an expanding universe. The areas brought under control by the accumulation of past judicial choice may be large. Yet the areas newly presented for still further choice, because of changing social, economic and technological conditions are far from inconsiderable. It has also to be remembered, that many occasions for new options arise by the mere fact that no generation looks out on the world from quite the same vantage-point as its predecessor, nor for that matter with the same perception. A different vantage point or a different quality of perception often reveals the need for choice-making where formerly no alternatives, and no problems at all, were perceived".

Holmes tells us :

"The truth is, that the law is always approaching, and never reaching, consistency. It is forever adopting new principles from life at the end, and it always retains old ones from history at the other, which have not yet been absorbed or sloughed off. It will become entirely consistent only when it ceases to -row." (Holmes The Common Law, p. 36 (1881)).

22. Apart from that the judges with profound responsibility could ill-afford to take stolid satisfaction of a single postulate past or present in any case. We think, it was Cicero who said about someone "He saw life clearly and he saw it whole". The judges have to have a little bit of that in every case while construing and applying the law.

23. Reverting to the case, we find that the conclusion of the High Court as to the need to reconsider the proposal to form the Corporation has neither the attraction of logic nor the support of law. It must be noted that the function of the Government in establishing a Corporation under the Act is neither executive nor administrative Counsel for the appellants was right in his submission that it is legislative process indeed. No judicial duty is laid on the Government in discharge of the statutory duties. The only question to be examined is whether the statutory provisions have been complied with. If they are complied with, then, the Court could say no more. In the present case the Government did publish the proposal by a draft notification and also considered the representations received. It was only thereafter, a decision was taken to exclude Ulhasnagar for the time being. That decision became final when it was notified under Section 3(2). The Court cannot sit in judgment over such decision. It cannot lay down norms for the exercise of that power. It cannot substitute even "its juster will for heirs".

24. Equally, the rule issued by the High Court to hear the parties is untenable. The Government in the exercise of its powers under Section 3 is not subject to the, rules of natural justice any more than is legislature itself. The rules of natural justice are not applicable to legislative action plenary or subordinate. The procedural requirement of hearing is not implied in the exercise of legislative powers unless hearing was expressly prescribed. The High Court, therefore, was in error in directing the Government to 'hear the parties who are not entitled to be heard under law.

25. Megarry, J., in Bates v. Lord Hailsham of St. Marylebone (1972) 1 WLR 1373 while dealing with the - legislative process under Section 56 of the Solicitors .Act, 1957 said (at p. 1378) :

"In the present case, the committee in question has an entirely different function : it is legislative rather than administrative or executive. The function of the committee is to make or refuse to make a legislative instrument under delegated powers. The order, when made, will lay down the remuneration for solicitors generally and the terms of the order will have to be considered and construed and applied in numberless cases in the future. Let me accept that in the sphere of the so-called quasi-judicial the rules of natural justice run, and that in the administrative or executive field there is a general duty of fairness. Nevertheless, these considerations do not seem to me to affect the process of legislation, whether primary or delegated. Many of those affected delegated legislation, and affected very substantially, are never consulted in the process of enacting that legislation; and yet they have no remedy. Of course, the informal consultation of representative bodies by the legislative authority is a commonplace; but although a few statutes have specifically provided for a general process of publishing draft delegated legislation and considering objections (see, for example,: the Factories Act 1961 Schedule 4), 1 do not know of any implied right to be consulted or, make objections, or any principle upon which the courts may enjoin the legislative process at the suit of those who contend that insufficient time for consultation and consideration has been given. 1 accept that the fact that the order will take the form of a statutory instrument does not per se make it immune from attack, whether by injunction or otherwise; but what is important is not its form but its nature, which is plainly legislative."

26. There are equally clear authorities on this point from this Court. The case in Tulsipur Sugar Co. Ltd. v. The Notified Area Committee, Tulsipur, (1980) 2 SCR 1111 : (AIR 1980 SC 882) was indeed a hard case. But then, this Court did not make. and bad law. There a notification dated August 22, 1955 was issued under Section 3 of the U.P. Town Area covering the petitioner's factory. Consequently, the octroi was levied on goods brought by the factory management into the limits of Town Area Committee. The Company questioned the validity of that notification. The case pleaded was that the company had no opportunity to make representation regarding the advisability of extending the limits of the Town Area Committee. Venkatar miah, J., as the present learned Chief Justice then was, while rejecting the contention observed (at pp. 1119-20). (of SCR):. (at p. 887 of AIR):

"The power of the State Government to make a declaration under Section 3 of the Act is legislative in character because the application of the rest of, provisions of the Act to the geographical area which is declared as a town area is dependent upon such declaration. Section 3 of the Act is in the nature of a conditional legislation. Dealing with the nature of functions of a non-judicial authority, Prof. S. A. De Smith in Judicial Review of Administrative Action (third edition) observes at page 163 : "However, the analytical classification of a function may be a conclusive factor in excluding the operation of the audi alteram partem rule. It is generally assumed that in English law the making of a subordinate legislative instrument need not be preceded by notice or hearing unless the parent Act so provides."

27. In Baldev Singh v. State of Himachal Pradesh, (1987) 2 SCC 510 : (AIR 1987 SC 1239) a similar question arose for consideration. An attempt was made to constitute a notified area as provided under Section 256 of the Himachal Pradesh Municipal Act, 1968, by including portions of the four villages for such purposes. The residents of the villages who were mostly agriculturists challenged the validity of the notification before the High Court on the ground that they had no opportunity to have their say against that notification. The High Court summarily dismissed the writ petition. In the appeal before this Court, it was argued that the extension of notified area over the Gram Panchayat limits would involve civil consequences and therefore, it was necessary that persons who would be affected thereby ought to be given an opportunity of being heard. Ranganath Misra, J., did not accept that contention, but clarified (at p. 515) (of SCC) : (at p. 1242 of AIR):

"We accept the submission on behalf of the appellants that before the notified area was constituted in terms of Section 256 of the Act, the people of the locality should have been afforded an opportunity of being heard and the administrative decision by the State Government should have been taken after considering the view of the residents. Denial of such opportunity is not in consonance with the scheme of the rule of law govering our society. We must clarify that the hearing contemplated is not required to be oral and can be by inviting objections and disposing them of in a fair way."

28. The principles and precedents thus enjoin us not to support the view taken by the High Court. We may only observe that the Government is expected to act and must act in a way which would make it consistent with the good administration. It is they, and no one else - who must pass judgment on this matter. We must, therefore, leave it to the Government.

29. In the result and for the reasons stated, we allow the appeals and set aside the judgment of the High Court. In the circumstances of the case, we make no order as to costs.

Appeals allowed.

Criminal Writ Petition 932 of 2006 Of Jul 27,2006

==========

Case Law – Duty of the Judge – The Judge dismissed the complaint by a cryptic order without discussing case Laws – The Courts are not expected to pass such cryptic orders – The Judge should record reasons in his order demonstrating how case law cited by Party is applicable to the case in hand – The Judge should exhibit from the conduct and from their orders concern for the justice and not casualness.

==========

(1.) HEARD learned counsel for the petitioner and respondent no. 1 and learned A. P. P. for the State.

(2.) ALL these writ petitions are directed against cryptic order passed by the Sessions Court on 19. 1. 2006 by which all the complaints filed by the petitioner-bank have been dismissed. The order passed by the Sessions Court reads thus: "ms. Joshi APP for State present. Ms. Pradhan Advocate for applicant and ms. Sagar Advocate for the Respondent are present. Heard. In view of SMS Pharmaceuticals the case cannot be maintained against the present applicant. Complaints against them dismissed. "

(3.) THE courts are not expected to pass such cryptic orders. The learned Judge, in the present case, ought to have record short reasons demonstrating as to how the case in hand was covered by the judgment of the Apex Court in S. M. S. Pharmaceuticals Pvt. Ltd. Vs. Neeta Bhalla and Anr. AIR 2005 S. C. 3512. The learned Judge even did not feel it necessary to mention full title of the judgment of the Apex Court and the citation thereof while dismissing all the complaints relying upon the said judgment. His approach while passing drastic orders, dismissing the complaints under section 138 of the Negotiable instruments Act, 1881 filed by the Bank involving huge amounts, was absolutely casual. The courts should exhibit from their conduct and their orders, concerned for the justice to be done in the cases and not casualness , as seen from the impugned order in the present case. The learned counsel for the parties have fairly agreed that I need not examine the merits of the case and record reasons for setting aside the impugned order and that all the matters be remanded to the Sessions Court for deciding the same on merits in accordance with law. In the circumstances I am satisfied that the following order shall meet the ends of justice: "the orders impugned in all the writ petitions dated 19. 1. 2006 are quashed and set aside. All the revisions stand restored to file. The Sessions Court shall decide all the revisions on merits in accordance with law and by passing speaking order as expeditiously as possible and preferrably within a period of three months from the date of receipt of this order. "

With these observations all the writ petitions stand disposed of.

(PER : HONOURABLE MR.JUSTICE M.R. SHAH)

1.00. As common question of law and facts arise in this group of Appeals, they are disposed of by this common order.

2.00. All these Tax Appeals have been preferred by the common appellant - assessee challenging the common impugned judgement and order passed by the Income Tax Appellate Tribunal, Rajkot Bench, Rajkot in ITA Nos.1249 to 1252 of 2010 with respect to Assessment Years 2002-03, 2004-05 and 2006-07.

2.01. It is required to be noted that in the respective appeals, the appellant proposed the following substantial questions of law :

TAX APPEAL No.847 of 2013 :-

"1. Whether Tribunal is right in law and on facts in confirming addition of Rs.24,151/-, Rs.4,443/- & Rs.4,70,000/- towards alleged bogus purchases/sales in contravention of settled principles of law?

2. Whether on facts and in law, the Tribunal has substantially erred in not resorting to provision of section 255 for referring the matter to Full Bench/Special Bench and deciding the disputed issue of purchases & sales in conflict with earlier Tribunal's decision of the same Bench pressed into service by the appellant?

3. Whether on facts and in law, the Tribunal's and conclusion for confirming addition towards purchases and sales for the year under consideration is in ignorance of relevant material on record and taking aid of irrelevant factors not germane to subject matter of appeal with the result that the finding and conclusion of the Tribunal is "vitiated" on facts and in law?"

"1. Whether Tribunal is right in law and on facts in confirming addition of Rs.3,42,311/- & Rs.1,42,908/- towards alleged bogus purchases/sales in contravention of settled principles of law?

2. Whether on facts and in law, the Tribunal has substantially erred in not resorting to provision of section 255 for referring the matter to Full Bench/Special Bench and deciding the disputed issue of purchases & sales in conflict with earlier Tribunal's decision of the same Bench pressed into service by the appellant?

3. Whether on facts and in law, the Tribunal's and conclusion for confirming addition towards purchases and sales for the year under consideration is in ignorance of relevant material on record and taking aid of irrelevant factors not germane to subject matter of appeal with the result that the finding and conclusion of the Tribunal is "vitiated" on facts and in law?"

TAX APPEAL No.849 of 2013 :-

"1. Whether Tribunal is right in law and on facts in confirming addition of Rs.6,42,769/- & Rs.1,83,168/- towards alleged bogus purchases/sales in contravention of settled principles of law?

2. Whether on facts and in law, the Tribunal has substantially erred in not resorting to provision of section 255 for referring the matter to Full Bench/Special Bench and deciding the disputed issue of purchases & sales in conflict with earlier Tribunal's decision of the same Bench pressed into service by the appellant?

3. Whether on facts and in law, the Tribunal's and conclusion for confirming addition towards purchases and sales for the year under consideration is in ignorance of relevant material on record and taking aid of irrelevant factors not germane to subject matter of appeal with the result that the finding and conclusion of the Tribunal is "vitiated" on facts and in law?"

2.02. By order dtd. 1/10/2013 passed in the respective Tax Appeals, we dismissed all these Tax Appeals so far as proposed Question Nos.2 and 3 are concerned and issued notice to consider proposed Question No.1 and observed as under :

"Now, so far as the proposed substantial question of law i.e. question No.1 is concerned, Shri Patel, learned counsel appearing on behalf of the appellant assessee has heavily relied upon the decision of this court in the case of Commissioner of Income Tax vs. President Industries reported in 258 ITR 654, which seems to be not dealt with and/or considered by the learned Tribunal. Hence, for the aforesaid, NOTICE returnable on 21st October 2013. Direct service is permitted."

2.03. Mr.R.K. Patel, learned advocate appearing on behalf of the appellant has vehemently submitted that with respect to addition made towards alleged bogus purchases / sales, the assessee heavily relied upon the decision of this Court in the case of

Commissioner of Income Tax vs. President Industries, reported in 258 ITR 654. It is submitted that though the said decision was cited before the learned tribunal and even the same was so stated in the Written Submission before the learned tribunal, the tribunal has not considered and/or dealt with the same at all.

2.04. Mr.Pranav Desai, learned advocate appearing on behalf of the respondent – revenue has tried to support the common order of the tribunal impugned in the main Tax Appeal, however, he has fairly conceded that the learned tribunal has not considered and dealt with the decision in the case of Commissioner of Income Tax vs. President Industries reported in 258 ITR 654, relied upon by the assessee and even cited by the assessee in the written submission before the learned tribunal.

3.00. Considering the fact that the decision of this Court in the case of Commissioner of Income Tax vs. President Industries (supra), which was relied upon by the assessee, was cited and pointed out before the learned tribunal, the learned tribunal at least ought to have considered and dealt with the same. From the written submissions, it also appears that the aforesaid decision was cited before the learned tribunal. From the impugned Judgment and Order passed by the learned tribunal it appears that the learned tribunal has not considered and/or dealt with the aforesaid decision relied upon by the assessee at all.

4.00. Whenever any decision has been relied upon and/or cited by the assessee and/or any party, the authority/tribunal is bound to consider and/or deal with the same and opine whether in the facts and circumstances of the particular case, the same will be applicable or not. In the instant case, the tribunal has failed to consider and/or deal with the aforesaid decision cited and relied upon by the assessee. Under the circumstances, all these appeals are required to be remanded to the tribunal to consider the addition made by the Assessing Officer towards alleged bogus purchases/sales and to take appropriate decision in accordance with law and on merits and after considering the decision of this Court in the case of Commissioner of Income Tax vs. President Industries reported in 258 ITR 654. However, it is clarified that we have not expressed any opinion on merits whether in the facts and circumstances of the case, the decision of this Court in the case Commissioner of Income Tax vs. President Industries (supra) will be applicable or not. It is ultimately for the learned tribunal to consider the same in the facts and circumstances of the case.

5.00. With this, all these appeals are allowed in part and the same are remanded to the learned tribunal to consider the issue with respect to addition made towards alleged bogus purchases/sales and to consider the decision of this Court in the case of Commissioner of Income Tax vs. President Industries reported in 258 ITR 654. As stated hereinabove, so far as Question nos.2 and 3 are concerned, by our earlier order dtd. 1/10/2013 we have already dismissed the present appeals. Present appeals are allowed in part to the aforesaid extent only.

Precedents – How to deal with case law relied by the party - Sessions Judge merely reproduced the head notes/placitums - The Magistrate also did not discuss the case law with reference to the ratio of the decisions - Held, many Judicial Officers follow practice of reproducing the head notes/placitum from the reported precedents. The Judicial Officers need to understand that the head notes are drawn by editors/staff members of the Law Journals. It is necessary to read the precedent in entirety. The judicial Officer is required thereafter to cull out the ratio of the authority. The matching of facts and circumstances would then enable the Court to examine whether such ratio is applicable to the case with which the Court is required to deal with- the Judicial Officers shall avoid such practice. They shall not merely quote the head notes/placitum appearing from the indexes or the prelude to the judgments reported in the law Journal.(Para 6)

The learned sessions Judge quoted a part of the observations of the Single Bench in support of his conclusion that filing of the complaint by a power of attorney is prima facie legal and proper. However, the quotation as stated in paragraph 14 of the impugned order is just reproduction of the head notes/placitums. Not only that but even in respect of other quotations, the learned sessions Judge merely reproduced the head notes/placitums. The learned Judicial Magistrate also did not discuss the case law with reference to the ratio of the decisions.

This Court has noticed, of late, the practice adopted by many Judicial Officers to simply refer the decision of this Court or the apex Court without examining whether the ratio is really applicable to the given case. So also, many Judicial Officers follow practice of reproducing the head notes/placitum from the reported precedents. The Judicial Officers need to understand that the head notes are drawn by editors/staff members of the Law Journals. It is necessary to read the precedent in entirety. The judicial Officer is required thereafter to cull out the ratio of the authority. The matching of facts and circumstances would then enable the Court to examine whether such ratio is applicable to the case with which the Court is required to deal with. Unfortunately, both the Courts below have failed to undertake such exercise before making references to the authorities cited before them. How I wish, the Judicial Officers shall avoid such practice. They shall not merely quote the head notes/placitum appearing from the indexes or the prelude to the judgments reported in the law Journal.

JUDGEMENT

1. THIS is an application filed by the original accused. They challenge legality and correctness of orders passed by learned judicial Magistrate, First Class, Aurangabad and learned IVth Additional Sessions Judge, aurangabad in SCC 2888/2001 and Criminal revision Petition No. 76/2003. They seek quashing of the orders of issuing process and denying discharge from the Criminal Case.

2. THE applicants allege that the proceedings of Criminal Case (SCC No. 2888/ 2001) are liable to be quashed inasmuch as the same amounts to abuse of process of law.
Background facts may be summarised as follows :
The Respondent No. 1 Sk. Tamisuddin claims himself to be Special Power of Attorney of deceased Sairabi. He alleges that on 20. 6. 2001 the applicants issued a cheque for amount of Rs. 1,00,000/- (Rupees one lac)towards part payment of agreed amount payable to Sairabi for her share in an immovable property. The cheque was presented for encashment in the concerned Bank. However, it was dishonoured. A demand notice was issued by the Respondent No. 1 which drew blank. He, therefore, lodged the complaint before the learned Judicial Magistrate, First Class, aurangabad, on 8. 8. 2001. The learned magistrate issued process on 18. 8. 2001 on the basis of verified statement of the Respondent no. 1 - Sk. Tamisuddin.
The applicants filed an application (Exh. 41) to acquit them U/s. 256 of the Cr. P. C. for the reason that in the month of June, 2002, aggrieved person, namely, Sairabi demised. Thereupon, the Respondent NO. l filed an application (Exh. 43) seeking permission to grant leave to continue the complaint proceedings in his capacity as legal representative of the deceased Sairabi i. e. original complainant.
3. THE applicants filed yet another application for recalling the process on the ground that the complaint filed by the respondent No. 1 for and on behalf of said sairabi was untenable. They asserted that the respondent No. 1 had no locus-standi to file such complaint nor process cou d be issued on the basis of his verified statement. They asserted that the complaint filed on behalf of the deceased Sairabi ought to have been signed by herself and she ought to have verified correctness of the contents. Therefore, they urged to dismiss the complaint.
By a common order dated 12. 3. 2003 the learned Magistrate rejected both the applications filed by the applicants. The applicants preferred a Revision Petition (Cr. Rev. No. 76/2003) which came to be dismissed.
4. MR. Jondhale, learned advocate for the applicants, would submit that the complaint for offence U/s. 138 of the N. I. Act could not be filed by the Respondent No. 1 in the name of deceased Sairabi. He argued that verification of the complaint by the Respondent no. 1 is totally illegal inasmuch as the respondent No. 1 is not the holder of cheque in due course. He argued that the Respondent No. 1 had no legal authority to file the complaint under his own signature. It is argued that issuance of the process without recording verified statement of original complainant - Sairabi is illegal and liable to be set aside. It is contended that the power of Attorney holder cannot substitute himself as a complainant. It is argued that the impugned orders deserve to be set aside inasmuch as the complaint proceedings are totally illegal. Per contra, Mr. P. R. Patil, learned advocate for the Respondent No. 1 and learned a. P. P. support the impugned orders.
A perusal of the complaint reveals that the complaint was filed in name of deceased smt. Sairabi whose age was shown as 72 years at that time, and it was presented through Special power of attorney, namely, Sk. Tamisuddin. The complaint purports to show that Sk. Tamiusddin is well conversant with the facts of the complaint. He claimed to be authorised person to file the complaint by virtue of the Special power of Attorney executed by said Smt. Sairabi. The complaint reveals that Smt. Saira had interest in a property which the applicants agreed to develop. The appellants allegedly entered into a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) with her four sons. The allegations in the complaint further disclose that a notice of demand was issued by the deceased Smt. Saira to pay her the due share. The applicants had agreed to pay Rs. 3,00,000/- (Rupees three lacs). The cheque in question was issued as a part payment for discharging the liability which they accepted, she being lawful co-sharer of the property left by her husband, likewise her sons. The cheque issued on 20. 5. 2001 was dishonoured when presented to S. B. I, at Kranti chowk branch, Aurangabad. The demand notice issued by the deceased drew blank and, therefore, the complaint was filed.

Another significant fact which can be noticed on perusal of the complaint is that the complaint is signed by the special power of attorney - Sk. Tamisuddin as a complainant. The complaint is not signed by deceased Smt. Saira. The complaint is verified by Sk. Tamisuddin as if he is the original complainant. The verified statement which purportedly is of complainant smt. Saira is signed by Sk. Tamisuddin in her stead, being special power of attorney. Obviously, the complaint is not signed and verified by deceased Smt. Saira. The learned magistrate issued process on the basis of such a verified statement of the special power of attorney. No attempt was made to call upon deceased Smt. Saira to sign the complaint. The vakilpatra was also filed by Sk. Tamisuddin as special power of attorney of complainant Smt. Saira.

5. IN the above backdrop, definition of the word "complaint" as enumerated in section 2 (d) of the Cr. P. C. may be noticed. The word "complaint" means a written or oral accusation made to Judicial Magistrate to start appropriate proceedings against a known or unknown person as per provisions of the Code. It does not include report given to Police (F. I. R.). So, the complaint may be oral. The purpose of complaint is to move the Judicial magistrate for setting Criminal Law in motion. However, Section 142 of the Negotiable instruments Act specifically deals with the expression "complaint" filed under the N. I. Act. A plain reading of Section 142 of the N. I. Act shows that the cognizance of any offence punishable U/s. 138 of the N. I. Act cannot be taken unless there is complaint, in writing made by the payee or by holder of the cheque in due course. Section 142 commences with non-obstante clause. Therefore, it supersedes the general definition of the word "complaint" as given in Section 2 (d) of the Code of Criminal procedure. The legal requirements of a valid complaint for the purpose of N. I. Act are :

(i) There has to be a complaint in writing regarding commission of offence; (ii) The complaint must be made by the payee or one who is holder of the cheque in due course;

(iii) The allegations in the complaint shall make out a prima facie case of cognizable offence.

6. AT this juncture, it may be said that verification of the complaint U/s. 200 of the cr. P. C. is necessary. The purpose of such verification is to determine prima facie truth into the allegations made in the complaint. The verification of complaint is essential U/s. 200 of the Cr. P. C. before taking cognizance of the offence not only with a view to find out prima facie truth but also in order to identify the person who, in case the prosecution is found to be frivolous or malafide, would be liable to answer the charge of perjury or to indemnify the accused persons. In other words, when the complainant gives statement before the Judicial magistrate, in support of his complaint, it is implicit that if certain statements are found to be false then identity of perjurer is explicitly made clear. So also if the complaint is found to be malicious and frivolous then action for recovery of compensation can be taken against such a complainant. In this context, observations of the Apex Court in "sabitha Ramamurthy and another Vs. R. B. S. Channabasavaradhya (2006 AIR SCW 4582 : 2007 ALL SCR 190) may be usefully quoted as follows :

"by reason of the said provision a person although is not personally liable for commission of such an offence would be vicariously liable therefore. Such vicarious liability can be inferred so far as a company registered or incorporated under the companies Act, 1956 is concerned only if the requisite statements, which are required to be averred in the complaint petition, are made so as to make the accused therein vicariously liable for the offence committed by the company. Before a person can be made vicariously liable, strict compliance of the statutory requirements would be insisted. Not only the averments made in paragraph 7 of the complaint petitions does not meet the said statutory requirements, the sworn statement of the witness made by the son of respondent herein, does not contain any statement that Appellants were in charge of the business of the company. In a case where the court is required to issue summons which would put the accused to some sort of harassment, the court should insist strict compliance of the statutory requirements. In terms of Section 200 of the Code of Criminal procedure, the complainant is bound to make statements on oath as to how the offence has been committed and how the accused persons are responsible there for. In the event, ultimately, the prosecution is found to be frivolous or otherwise malafide. the court may direct registration of case against the complainant for malafide prosecution of the accused. The accused would also be entitled to file a suit for damages. The relevant provisions of the Code of Criminal procedure are required to be construed from the aforementioned point of view. " (Emphasis supplied)

The statutory provision requires, therefore, that the complaint must be signed by the complainant and that it shall be verified by the complainant. In the other words, a complaint which is not signed by the complainant, is, therefore, incomplete and on the basis of such incomplete complaint, no cognizance can be taken U/s. 142 of the N. I. Act. As stated before, verification of the complainant is essential in order to ensure that in future nobody may be allowed to deny liability arising out of frivolous complaint, false charges, malicious prosecution or like unfounded criminal action. Corollary of the foregoing discussion is that for the purpose of a valid complaint the test is to examine whether identity of the person, who would be liable to pay compensation to the accused persons, may be U/s. 357 of the Cr. P. C. or may be under the tortious liability, is clearly set out in the complaint. Looked from this angle, the complaint filed by the special power of attorney does not show that he accepted any liability for such adverse effects on the complaint being found frivolous or vexatious. The recitals of the copy of special power of attorney filed alongwith the complaint also do not show that sk. Tamisuddin agreed to indemnify the accused persons in case any compensation was found payable under provisions of the Law. It is difficult to say, therefore, that the complaint which is not signed by deceased Smt. Saira could be regarded as a complaint within the meaning of the provisions of the N. I. Act. It was incomplete complaint. The defect cannot be cured because Smt. Saira died, during the intervening period, on 28. 6. 2002. By his application Exh. 43 the special power of attorney holder sought leave of the Court to prosecute the complaint on her behalf. The leave was granted to him as per order dated 12. 3. 2003.

In "finolex Industries Ltd. Vs. Mr. Pravin V. Sheth and others" 2002 (2)ALL MR 644, a Single Bench of this Court held that for the purpose of Section 142 of the n. I. Act, the complaint must be signed by the complainant. It is held that the complaint which is not signed by the complainant, is, therefore, incomplete and on basis of incomplete complaint, no cognizance can be taken U/s. 142 of the N. I. Act. The learned Sessions Judge placed heavy reliance on "dr. Pradeep mohanbay Vs. Mr. Minguel Carlos Dias", [2000 (2) ALL MR 664] : 2000 Vol. 102 (1)Bom. L. R. 908. In the given case a Single Bench of this Court held that a power of attorney has right to file complaint U/s. 138 of the N. I. Act but cannot depose on behalf of the complainant. He can appear as a witness. The learned sessions Judge quoted a part of the observations of the Single Bench in support of his conclusion that filing of the complaint by a power of attorney is prima facie legal and proper. However, the quotation as stated in paragraph 14 of the impugned order is just reproduction of the head notes/placitums. Not only that but even in respect of other quotations, the learned sessions Judge merely reproduced the head notes/placitums. The learned Judicial Magistrate also did not discuss the case law with reference to the ratio of the decisions.

This Court has noticed, of late, the practice adopted by many Judicial Officers to simply refer the decision of this Court or the apex Court without examining whether the ratio is really applicable to the given case. So also, many Judicial Officers follow practice of reproducing the head notes/placitum from the reported precedents. The Judicial Officers need to understand that the head notes are drawn by editors/staff members of the Law Journals. It is necessary to read the precedent in entirety. The judicial Officer is required thereafter to cull out the ratio of the authority. The matching of facts and circumstances would then enable the Court to examine whether such ratio is applicable to the case with which the Court is required to deal with. Unfortunately, both the Courts below have failed to undertake such exercise before making references to the authorities cited before them. How I wish, the Judicial Officers shall avoid such practice. They shall not merely quote the head notes/placitum appearing from the indexes or the prelude to the judgments reported in the law Journal.

7. REVERTING to the case of "dr. Pradeep Mohanbay Vs. Mr. Minguel Carlos dias" [2000 (2) ALL MR 664] (supra) it may be mentioned that a specific question was raised by the Single Bench as to whether the power of attorney can depose on behalf of the complainant. The learned Single Judge held that the power of attorney holder can appear, plead and act on behalf of a party but he cannot become a witness of the party. He can only appear in his own capacity. The principle enunciated U/o. 3, Rule 2 of the C. P. C. is equally applicable to appearance of a power of attorney in criminal proceedings. True, in case of "dr. Pradeep Mohanbay Vs. Mr. Minguel Carlos dias", the learned Single Judge held that a complaint for offence U/s. 138 of the N. I. Act can be filed by the power of attorney in terms of Section 142 of the said Act. Filing of complaint by the power of attorney holder is quite different from signing of the complaint and due verification thereof. A power of attorney holder can file a complaint for and on behalf of the person who has delegated the power to him for presentation of the complaint. However, he cannot depose instead of such a complainant on whose behalf he files the complaint. The learned Single Judge (R. K. Batta, J.) in the given case clearly observed :

"the complainant can appoint a Power of attorney for filing the complaint in view of section 142 of the said Act. However, neither Code of Criminal Procedure nor the said Act contemplates that any one can depose for and on behalf of the complainant. In such complaint the Power of Attorney is entitled to appear as a witness and depose in respect of facts which are within his knowledge and on the basis of record on which reliance is placed. "

There is no difficulty in accepting the proposition that a Power of Attorney may enter witness box in his own capacity so as to spell out the facts known to him. In no case, however, he can substitute himself in place of the complainant right from the stage of verification of the complaint till end of the trial. In other words, the original complainant cannot be a mere name lender when the complaint is filed for the offence under the N. I. Act. This is more so having regard to the purpose of the verification U/s. 200 of the Cr. P. C. being one to fix identity of the person who may be made liable to pay compensation when the complaint is found to be false, frivolous or vexatious.

8. MR. P. R. Patil, learned counsel for the Respondent, seeks to rely on "m/s. G. J. Packaging Private Ltd. and another Vs. M/ s. S. S. Sales and another", [2005 ALL MR (Cri) 2782] : 2006 (2) Bankers Journal 244. The question before the learned Single Judge (S. P. Kukday, J.) in the said case was whether a complaint filed for offence punishable U/s. 138 of the N. I. Act, 1881, could be quashed U/s. 482 of the Cr. P. C. on the ground that it was defective because it was filed by the power of attorney in the name of the payee or holder in due course. The learned Single Judge held that even if the complaint is signed by a person, who is not properly authorised, this defect can be subsequently rectified. The complaint cannot be quashed merely on this ground. The learned single Judge observed, during the course of discussion, that "where a power of attorney has full knowledge of the transaction, his statement can be recorded by the Magistrate for verification of the complaint for ascertaining the truth of the allegations and to enable him to take appropriate decision that the process should be issued or not. " These observations are merely obiter. The issue involved was whether or not the order regarding the issuance of process by the learned Chief Judicial Magistrate called for interference on the ground that the complaint was filed by unauthorised person. The earned single Judge observed :

"this Court in Mamtadevi Prafullakumar bhansali (supra) after noticing relevant provisions came to the conclusion that in cases where Power of Attorney holder can depose on behalf of the principal if he transacts business from the beginning to the exclusion of the principal, as his capacity as a witness and as Power of Attorney merges in such a case. " (emphasis supplied)In the fact situation of the present case, there is hardly any material to infer that Respondent Sk. Tamisuddin transacted the business from beginning and that too to the exclusion of deceased Smt. Saira. There is nothing in the statement of Sk. Tamisuddin to show that Smt. Saira had no knowledge about the transaction which entailed issuance of the cheque for rs. 1,00,000/- nor the complaint is signed by said smt. Saira. In "jimmy Jahangir Madan Vs. Mrs. Boly Cariayappa Hindley (Deceased) by l. Rs. " (A. I. R. 2004 Supreme Court 48), the apex Court held that Power of Attorney holder cannot file an application U/s. 302 of the Cr. P. C. on behalf of the heirs of the complainant and unless permission is obtained from the Court he cannot be treated as a pleader. The delegated powers may be availed by the Special Power of attorney only to the extent of filing of the complaint and pursuing the same by making appropriate applications during the trial.

A Division Bench of this Court in

"maharaja Developers and another Vs. Udaysingh Pratapsinghrao Bhonsle and another" (2007 Cri. L. J. 2207), held that it is mandatory for the Magistrate to examine the complainant U/s. 200 of the Cr. P. C. The division Bench held that non-obstante clause in Section 142 of the N. I. Act does not relieve the Magistrate of his duty to examine the complainant and his witnesses on oath U/s. 200 of the Cr. P. C. In "janki Vashdeo Bhojwani and another Vs. Indusind Bank Ltd. and others", [2004 (5) ALL MR (S. C.) 396] : (A. I. R. 2005 Supreme Court 439), the Apex court crystalised scope of Order 3, Rule 1 and 2 of the C. P. C. It is held that power of attorney holder cannot depose in place and instead of the principal. A Single Bench of this Court (J. H. Bhatia, J.) in "sanjay Vinze and others Vs. State of Maharashtra and others" 2007 ALL mr (Cri) 3170, held that order to issue process on the basis of verification statement by son of the complainant, in regard to the facts which were only within exclusive knowledge of the complainant, was improper and illegal. The order issuing process was therefore, quashed. The relevant observations may be reproduced for ready reference :

"merely because he was constituted power of attorney holder, he could not claim to be the complainant himself or witness of the facts which were not known to him but which were within the exclusive knowledge of the complainant. In view of this, it must be held that verification statement of the respondent No. 3 was not verification statement made by the complainant or by witness who had personal knowledge of the fact. Therefore, on the basis of such statement, the learned Magistrate could not proceed to issue process under Section 204 of the Cr. P. C. "

In "s. P. Sampathy Vs. Manju Gupta" 2002 (4) ALL MR (JOURNAL) 6, a Division bench of Andhra Pradesh High Court held that complaint ought to be made and signed by the payee or holder in due course. The power of attorney holder, it is held, cannot file complaint. In "anil G. Shah Vs. J. Chittranjan Co. and another" 1998 (2) Crimes 347, a Single Judge of Gujarat High Court held that cognizance taken on complaint filed by payee or through power of attorney holder does not suffer from illegality. It is further held that death of the payee of the cheque has no bearing on the trial. The legal heirs of the original complainant are entitled to come forward and ask for their substitution in place of the complainant so as to proceed further with the trial.

There are cases and cases. Each case needs to be examined on the basis of the fact situation obtained therein. In the case in hand, the complaint filed by Respondent - Sk. Tamisuddin was defective because it was not signed by the complainant - Smt. Saira. The defect was curable during her life time. She could have been asked to sign the complaint. That was not done. The complaint is verified by the Respondent although, he did not state in clear words that he is not only Special Power of Attorney holder but has the full knowledge of the facts in which the cheque was issued by the applicants in name of Smt. Saira, as a result of liability to discharge the legal debt or money due to her. It appears that gist of the complaint is reproduced as the verified statements of Sk. Tamisuddin. The copy of Special Power of attorney does not show that the Respondent did undertake the liability to indemnify the accused persons if the complaint was found to be frivolous or false. The issuance of process on the basis of such a verified statement is, therefore, illegal and improper.

9. THE matter does not stop here. After the death of Smt. Saira, the Respondent obtained permission to continue the prosecution as her Special Power of Attorney. He did not seek his substitution as a legal heir of the deceased. Secondly, when the initial complaint itself was defective and process could not be issued thereunder, there arise no question of substitution of the complainant U/s. 256 of the cr. P. C. In this view of the matter, I am of the opinion that both the impugned orders are improper and illegal. Needless to say, the prosecution against the applicants would tantamount to abuse of the process of law.

10. THE Chapter relating to penalties in case of dishonour of cheques was introduced by the Banking, Public Financial Institutions and negotiable Instruments Laws (Amendment)Act, 1988. The Chapter XVII comprising of sections 138 to 142 came on the statute book with a view to enhance the acceptability of cheques in settlement of liabilities by making the drawer liable for penalties in case of bouncing of cheques. The civil liability is partly transformed into criminal liability. The offence u/s. 138 of the N. I. Act is, therefore, a hybrid product of Civil and Criminal Laws. The special enactment requires certain conditions to be satisfied before taking cognizance of the offence. Hence, the provision of Section 142 will have precedence over the normal procedure of entertaining a complaint. The Respondent cannot be termed as the payee of the cheque in question nor can he be regarded as holder thereof in due course. Hence, his complaint would not be maintainable.

For the reasons aforesaid, the application is allowed. The impugned orders are quashed and the complaint filed by the respondent shall be deemed as dismissed as the order to issue process thereon is unsustainable. No costs. Application allowed.

JUDICIAL ADVENTURISM – Order by ignoring case laws of Supreme Court - The appellant would be entitled to costs quantified at Rs. 20,000.00 - Sub ordinate Courts should not pass orders by ignoring law settled by Higher Courts – When a position, in law, is well settled as a result of judicial pronouncement of this Court, it would amount to judicial impropriety to say the least, for the subordinate Courts including the High Courts to ignore the settled decisions and then to pass a judicial order which is clearly contrary to the settled legal position. Such judicial adventurism cannot be permitted and we strongly deprecate the tendency of the subordinate Courts in not applying the settled principles and in passing whimsical orders which necessarily has the effect of granting wrongful and unwarranted relief to one of the parties. It is time that this tendency stops - It is unfortunate, that notwithstanding the authoritative pronouncements of this Court, the High Courts and the Courts subordinate thereto, still seem intent on affording to this Court innumerable opportunities for dealing with this area of law, thought by this Court to be well settled - The observation of the High Court that reference to judicial decisions will not be of much importance was clearly a method adopted by it in avoiding to follow and apply the law as laid down by this Court- (Para 32 ,33,29)

Civil 3376 Of 1997 , May 07,1997

KIRPAL, J.

(1.) Special leave granted.

Having been thrawted by orders of the court below in its attempt to get encashment of the bank guarantees, issued by the State Bank of India, Meerut Cantt. Branch (respondent No.2) respondent No. 1 has led to the filing of this appeal by the aggrieved beneficiaries.

(2.) The appellant and respondent No. 1 had entered into an agreement on 27/07/1994 whereby respondent No. 1 was to supply boiling house equipment the cost of which was Rs. 5.23 crores. The supply of equipment and material was to start from 15/09/1994 and the same was to be completed by 10/08/1995, as per the schedule of the supply agreed to by the parties.

(3.) According to one of the clauses of the aforesaid agreement respondent No. 1 had agreed to furnish bank guarantees in favour of the appellant. Out of the above six, only four bank guarantees were furnished including bank guarantee No. 40/51 dated 1/12/1994 for a sum of Rs. 26,15,000.00 and bank guarantee No.40/47 dated 24/11/1994 for a sum of Rs. 35 lacs. These are the bank guarantees with which we are concerned in the present case.

(4.) Bank guarantee No. 40/51 was issued to ensure timely delivery of equipment and supply by respondent No. 1. The relevant clauses of the said bank guarantee No. 40/51 are as follows :

"In consideration of the premises the Guarantor hereby unconditionally and irrevocably undertakes to pay to the Purchaser on their first written demand and without demur such a sum not exceeding Rs. 26,15,000.00 (Twenty six lacs fifteen thousand only) as the purchasers may demand representing 5% (five per cent) of the contract price, and if the guarantor fails to pay the sum on demand the guarantor shall also pay on the sum demanded interest at the bank lending rates then prevailing reckoned from the date of demand till the date of payment.

2. The guarantor shall pay to the purchaser on demand the sum under clause 1 above without demur and requiring the purchasers to invoke any legal remedy that may be available to them, it being understood and agreed firstly that the purchasers shall be the sole judge of and as to whether the sellers have committed breach(es) of any of the terms and conditions of the said agreement and secondly that the right of the purchasers to recover from the guarantor any amount due to the purchasers shall not be affected or suspended by reasons of the fact that any dispute or disputes have been raised by the sellers with regard to their liability or that proceedings are pending before any Tribunal, arbitrator(s) or Court with regard to or in connection therewith, and thirdly that the guarantor shall immediately pay the aforesaid guaranteed amount on demand and it shall not be open to the guarantor to know the reasons of or to investigate or to go into the merits of the demand or to question or to challenge the demand or to know any facts affecting the demand, and lastly that it shall not be open to the guarantor to require the proof of the liability of the seller to pay the amount before paying the aforesaid guaranteed amount to the purchasers.

(5.) The other bank guarantee No.40/47 was originally issued for a sum of Rs. 51,70,000.00 for securing advance payment. The agreement contemplated the liability being gradually reduced and on 28/08/1995 this bank guarantee was reduced for a diminished amount of Rs. 33 lacs. The relevant clause of this bank guarantee is as follows :

"In consideration of the premises the guarantor hereby unconditionally and irrevocably undertakes to pay to the purchaser on their first written demand and without demur such a sum not exceeding Rs. 51,70,000.00 (Rupees fifty one lacs seventy thousand only) as the purchasers may demand representing 10% (Ten per cent) of the contract price, and if the guarantor fails to pay the sum on demand the guarantor shall also pay on the sum demanded interest at the bank lending rates then prevailing reckoned from the date of demand till the date of payment. Provided that liability of the guarantor hereunder shall reduce to the extent of the advance adjusted under clause 13 of the said agreement.

The guarantor shall pay to the purchaser on demand the sum under clause 1 above without demur and requiring the purchasers to invoke any legal remedy that may be available to them, it being understood and agreed firstly that the purchaser shall be the sole judge of and as to whether the sellers have committed any breach(es) of any of the terms and conditions of the said agreement and secondly that the right of the purchasers to recover from the guarantor any amount due to the purchasers shall not be affected or suspended by reasons of the fact that any dispute or disputes have been raised by the sellers with regard to their liability or that proceedings are pending before any Tribunal, arbitrator(s) or court with regard thereto or in connection therewith, and thirdly that the guarantor shall immediately pay the aforesaid guaranteed amount on demand and it shall not be open to the guarantor to know the reasons of or to investigate or to go into the merits of the demand or to question or to challenge the demand or to know any facts affecting the demand, and lastly that it shall not be open to the guarantor to require the proof of the liability of the seller to pay the amount before paying the aforesaid guaranteed amount to the purchasers".

(6.) According to the appellant respondent No. 1 did not supply the equipment at site, within the time allowed, nor replaced any of the defective items which, according to the appellant, had resulted in the late commencement of the trial crushing in the mill. It is further the case of the appellant that it had to make direct purchases of many parts from other sources as the respondent No. 1 had failed to supply the equipment. Ultimately by letter dated 21/11/1995 written to respondent No. 2, the appellant invoked the bank guarantee. The material portion of his letter was as follows :

"We wish to inform you that M/s Prem Heavy Engineering Works (P) Ltd. Rani Mill, Delhi Road, Meerut have failed to fulfil the conditions of our agreement dated 27-7-1994 in so far as timely supply of the machinery and equipment under order with them.

In view of their failure, we hereby invoke the bank guarantee in terms of clause 1, 2 and 3 of the aforesaid guarantee and hereby demand payment of Rs. 26,15,000.00 (Rupees twenty six lakhs fifteen thousand only). You are, therefore, required to issue a demand draft drawn in favour of our company payable at Najibabad for Rs. 26,15,000.00 (Rupees twenty six lakhs fifteen thousand only). The original guarantee is enclosed which may please be acknowledged."

(7.) Respondent bank did not make the payment, notwithstanding the receipt of the aforesaid letter dated 21/11/1995 but the effect which this letter had was that, on 23/11/1995, respondent No. 1 filed original Suit No. 1182 of 1995 before the Court of Civil Judge, Meerut, under Section 20 of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1940. In the said suit the appellant herein was impleaded as defendant No. 1 while the State Bank of India was impleaded as defendant No. 2. The only relief claimed in this suit was that the dispute between the parties should be referred to an arbitrator. Along with this suit respondent No. 1 also filed an application for the grant of injunction restraining the appellant herein from encashing the aforesaid bank guarantee No. 40/51 which had been issued for a sum of Rs. 26,15,000.00.

(8.) It appears that there was some discussion between the representatives of the appellant and respondent No. 1 in connection with the encashment of the said bank guarantee No.40/51. Pursuant thereto letter dated 24/11/1995 was written by respondent No. 1 to the appellant which was to the following effect :

As discussed with your managing director Sh.G.R. Mararka today at your Delhi guest house, we are confirm that we shall despatch balance parts except lime elevator direct from our works by 26-11-1995 and shall arrange despatch of balance fright oil after payment except air compressor by 27-11-1995. We shall ensure commissioning of the two shall (sic) of cooling towers of one complete shall of twin crystalizer and F.M. Piping by 30-11-1995 and F.M. Tonor with rouling in 10-12-1995. We request you to kindly keep the invocation of the above guarantee in abeyance till 10-12-1995.

(9.) According to the appellant it was not aware that original Suit No. 1182 of 1995, along with an application for injunction had already been filed by respondent No. 1 a day earlier to the respondent's letter dated 24/11/1995. Acting on the basis of the aforesaid letter of the respondent No. 1 the appellant wrote a letter dated 27/11/1995 to the Manager, State Bank of India, Meerut Cantt. After expressing its regret that the proceeds of the guarantee had not been paid to the appellant, it was stated in this letter that respondent No. 1 had assured to make a complete supply of the ordered plant and machinery within next three or four days. In view of this it withdrew its letter of invocation dated 21/11/1995 but it was added that "it may, however, be noted that demand payment is being withdrawn without prejudice to our right of invocation under the guarantee".

(10.) Apparently having succeeded in pursuading the appellant to write the aforesaid letter dated 27/11/1995 withdrawing the letter of invocation, respondent No. 1 on the very next day, i.e. 28/11/1995 obtained an ex parte injunction from the Court of Civil Judge, Meerut, restraining the appellant from encashing the aforesaid bank guarantee No. 40/51.
(11.) According to the appellant, respondent no. 1 did not make the requisite supplies with the result that vide letter dated 9/01/1996, written to the Assistant General Manager, State Bank of India, Meerut, it invoked bank guarantee No. 40/51 by, inter alia, stating as follows :
"As per clause 14 of the supply agreement M/s Prem Heavy Engineering Works (P) Ltd., Meerut has failed to deliver the equipments and its commissioning within the scheduled time frame.
Now we hereby invoke the aforesaid guarantee for Rs. 26,15,000.00 (Rupees twenty six lacs fifteen thousand only) being 5% of the contract value and enclose herewith the original guarantee for your record. Kindly hand over the Demand Draft in our favour payable at Najibabad, Distt. Bijnor, Uttar Pradesh towards the invocation amount."
(12.) As on 28/11/1995 respondent No. 1 had already obtained an ex parte injunction restraining the encashment of bank guarantee, no payment was made to the appellant by the bank.
(13.) Respondent No. 1 then filed another injunction application dated 12/01/1996 with regard to the second bank guarantee dated 24/11/1994 which was for a sum of Rs. 33 lacs. It obtained an ex parte injunction in respect thereto on the same day. Being ignorant of this the appellant wrote a letter dated 16/01/1996 to the respondent bank invoking the said bank guarantee No.40/47. In the said letter it was stated that respondent No. 1 had failed to deliver the equipment as per the terms of the agreement and that the appellant had bought equipment from various markets due to which the advance amount which had been paid to respondent No. 1, in respect of which this bank guarantee had been issued, remained unadjusted. The bank was accordingly required to pay the said amount of Rs. 33 lacs.
(14.) According to the appellant it is only after 16/01/1996 that it became aware of the filing of the aforesaid suit and the injunction application and it entered appearance in Court on 18/01/1996 even though no notice had been served on it. As per the appellant, there was delay in the disposal of the injunction application, consequently it approached the High Court for appropriate directions and the Allahabad High Court vide order dated 10/05/1996 directed the Civil Judge, Meerut Cantt, to dispose of the suit within the time fixed by it.
(15.) By a detailed order dated 20/08/1996, the Second Civil Judge (Sr. Division), Meerut vacated the ex parte injunctions which had been granted and dismissed the injunction applications. In arriving at this conclusion it observed that respondent No. 1 had not stated that the work had been completed and nor was there any allegation of cheating or fraud contained in the plaint which had been filed. The trial court referred to a number of decisions of this Court and came to the conclusion that there was no basis, in law, for the grant of any interim prohibitory order.
(16.) The appellant on 22/08/1996 again approached the respondent bank for the encashment of the bank guarantees, but without success.
(17.) Respondent No. 1 then filed revision petition No. 257 of 1996 on 10/09/1996* before the Allahabad High Court challenging the order dated 20/08/1996 of the trial court. Single Judge of the Allahabad High Court took up the revision petition and disposed it of on the same day and, after setting aside the order dated 20/08/1996 it remanded the matter back to the trial court for a fresh decision but, at the same time, directed that till the disposal of injunction application the bank guarantees in question shall not be invoked or encashed. The trial court was directed to hear the parties within fifteen days of the receipt of the order and to dispose of the injunction application within fifteen days thereafter. Needless to state, due to dilatory tactics adopted by respondent No. 1, which is evident from the documents available on the record of this case, the said injunction applications have not been disposed of till date with the result that the injunction granted by the single judge of the High Court vide order dated 10/09/1996 still continues.

(18.) While allowing the civil revision the single judge in his judgment did not think it necessary to refer to the judicial decisions which were cited before him. The court observed that reference to the same was not necessary because the trial court, who had observed that the plaint did not contain any allegation with regard to fraud, had not noticed that allegation of fraud was contained in the injunction application. The learned judge noticed that the liability of bank under the guarantee was absolute and that it was not supposed to question the authority of the beneficiary to encash the bank guarantee but observed that the same "could not be the guideline for allowing the defendant to encash the bank guarantee unless there was a finding that the defendant was having undue enrichment thereby".

(19.) The aforesaid decision of the High Court has been assailed by Sh. Harish N. Salve, learned senior counsel for the appellant, who has contended that the High Court fell in serious error in ignoring and not in even referring to the decisions of this Court where the principles regarding the grant of injunction in matters relating to encashment of bank guarantees have been clearly spelt out. Had this been done, the learned counsel submits, the High Court could not, in law, have continued with the temporary injunction.

(20.) Numerous decisions of this Court rendered over a span of nearly two decades have laid down and reiterated the principles which the Courts must apply while considering the question whether to grant an injunction which has the effect of restraining the encashment of a bank guarantee. We do not think it necessary to burden this judgment by referring to all of them. Some of the more recent pronouncements on this point where the earlier decisions have been considered and reiterated are Svenska Handelshanken v. M/s. Indian Charge Chrome, (1994) 1 SCC 502 : (1993 AIR SCW 4002), Larsen and Toubro Ltd. v. Maharashtra State Electricity Board, (1995) 6 SCC 68 : (1975 AIR SCW 4134), Hindustan Steel Workers Construction Ltd. v. G. S. Atwal and Co. (Engineers) Pvt. Ltd., (1995) 6 SCC 76 : (1995 AIR SCW 3821) and U. P. State Sugar Corporation v. Sumac International Ltd., (1997) 1 SCC 568 : (1997 AIR SCW 694). The general principle which has been laid down by this Court has been summarised in the case of U. P. State Sugar Corporation's case as follows :

"The law relating to invocation of such bank guarantees is by now well settled. When in the course of commercial dealings an unconditional bank guarantee is given or accepted, the beneficiary is entitled to realize such a bank guarantee in terms thereof irrespective of any pending disputes. The bank giving such a guarantee is bound to honour, it as per its terms irrespective of any dispute raised by its customer. The very purpose of giving such a bank guarantee would otherwise be defeated. The Courts should, therefore, be slow in granting an injunction to restrain the realization of such a bank guarantee. The courts have carved out only two exceptions. A fraud in connection with such a bank guarantee would vitiate the very foundation of such a bank guarantee. Hence if there is such a fraud of which the beneficiary seeks to take the advantage, he can be restrained from doing so. The second exception relates to cases where allowing the encashment of an unconditional bank guarantee would result in irretrievable harm or injustice to one of the parties concerned. Since in most cases payment of money under such a bank guarantee would adversely affect the bank and its customer at whose instance the guarantee is given, the harm or injustice contemplated under this head must be of such an exceptional and irretrievable nature as would override the terms of the guarantee and the adverse effect of such an injunction on commercial dealings in the country."

Dealing with the question of fraud it has been held that fraud has to be an established fraud. The following observations of Sir John Donaldson, M.R. in Bolivinter Oil S. A. v. Chase Manhattan Bank, (1984) 1 All ER 351, are apposite:
"The wholly exceptional case where an injunction may be granted is where it is proved that the bank knows that any demand for payment already made or which may thereafter be made will clearly be fraudulent. But the evidence must be clear both as to the fact of fraud and as to the bank's knowledge. It would certainly not normally be sufficient that this rests on the uncorroborated statement of the customer, for irreparable damage can be done to a bank's credit in the relatively brief time which must elapse between the granting of such an injunction and an application by the bank to have it charged."
(21.) The aforesaid passage was approved and followed by this Court in U. P. Co-operative Federation Ltd. v. Singh Consultants and Engineers (P.) Ltd., (1988) 1 SCC 174.
(22.) The second exception to the rule of granting injunction, i.e., the resulting of irretrievable injury, has to be such a circumstance which would make it impossible for the guarantor to reimburse himself, if he ultimately succeeds. This will have to be decisively established and it must be proved to the satisfaction of the Court that there would be no possibility whatsoever of the recovery of the amount from the beneficiary, by way of restitution.
(23.) In the instant case, as has been already noticed there were two types of bank guarantees which were issued. Bank Guarantee No. 40/51 for Rs. 26,15000.00 was issued to ensure timely performance of the agreement by respondent No. 1. The relevant terms of this guarantee firstly makes it clear that the bank has unconditionally and irrevocably undertaken to pay to the appellant, on written demand and without demand, the amount demanded by it. Secondly, Clause II of the said guarantee clarifies that the payment shall be made without demand and on the undertaking that the appellant is to be sole Judge whether the seller has committed any breach. Consequently the right of the appellant to recover the guaranteed amount is not to be effected or suspended by reason of any dispute which can be raised or pending before the Courts tribunals or arbitrator. Thirdly the guarantor had no right to know the reasons of or to investigate the merits of the demand or to question or to challenge the demand or to know any facts affecting the demand and lastly it was not open to the bank to require the proof of the liability of respondent No. 1 to pay the amount before paying the aforesaid guaranteed amount to the appellant.
(24.) The letter of invocation issued by the appellant demanding the payment of Rs. 26,15,000.00 was in accordance with the terms of bank guarantee No. 40/51 and the bank was, therefore, under an obligation to honour its undertaking and to make the payment. It, however, chose not to fulfil its obligation. If the bank could not in law avoid the payment, as the demand had been made in terms of the bank guarantee, as has been done in the present case, then the Court ought not to have issued an injunction which had the effect of restraining the bank from fulfilling its contractual obligation in terms of the bank guarantee. An injunction of the Court ought not to be an instrument which is used in nullifying the terms of a contract, agreement or undertaking which is lawfully enforceable. In its aforesaid letter dated 24/11/1995 respondent No. 1 had clearly admitted that entire supply had not been made. In view of this also the High Court was not justified in granting an injunction.
(25.) Bank guarantor No. 40/97 dated 24/11/1994, which had been issued to secure the advance of Rs. 129.24 lacs which had been given by the appellant, was also similar in terms to the earlier bank guarantee No. 40/51. The main contract between the parties contemplated that the amount of bank guarantee shall stand reduced on adjustment being made. It is contended by Shri Sudhir Chandra, learned counsel for the respondents that the full amount which was given had been adjusted and no amount remained outstanding and, therefore, the bank guarantee No. 40/47 could no longer be regarded as alive. In support of this contention, the learned counsel relied on the observations of this Court in Larson and Toubro Ltd. v. Maharashtra State Electricity Board, (1995) 6 SCC 68 : (1995 AIR SCW 4134) where an injunction was granted where the bank guarantee which was issued was to be kept alive till the successful completion of trial operations. In our opinion, this decision can be of no assistance to respondent No. 1 because in Larson and Toubro's case (supra) this Court found that the guarantee which had been given by the bank was to ensure only till the successful completion of the trial operations and the taking over of the plant. The documents revealed that the contractual term in this regard has been complied with and after successful completion of the trial operation, the plant had admittedly been taken over. In view of this, it was held by this Court that the terms of the bank guarantee did not permit its invocation once the trial operations have been successfully completed.

(26.) In the present case clause 3 of bank guarantee No. 40/47 relating to adjustment of the advance stipulated as follows :

"The guarantee shall come into force from date thereof and shall remain valid till the full advance amount is adjusted under Clause 13 of the said agreement which according to the terms and conditions of the said Agreement is stipulated to be adjusted proportionately from each bill of the Sells against actual deliveries of the machinery and equipment at site but if the deliveries as aforesaid have not been completed by the Sellers within the said period for any reason whatsoever the Guarantor hereby undertakes that the Sellers shall furnish a fresh or renewed guarantee on the Purchaser's pro forma for such further period as the purchaser's may intimate failing which the guarantor shall pay to the purchaser a sum not exceeding Rs. 51,70,000.00 (Rupees fifty one lacs seventy thousand only) or the residual amount of balance unadjusted advance left after proportionate adjustment in accordance with clause 1 above as the purchaser may demand."

(27.) No plea was taken before the Courts below, and no document has been shown to us by the respondents, which can prima facie indicate that the full amount of advance had been adjusted under Clause 13 of the main contract between the appellant and the defendant No. 1. According to the appellants, the original guarantee was for Rs. 51,70,000.00 but the same, after adjustment of the advance, in terms of clause 13 of the main agreement, stood reduced to Rs. 33,00,000.00. This amount was still outstanding and, therefore, the bank guarantee had not come to an end and was rightly invoked.

(28.) Coming to the allegation of fraud, it is an admitted fact that in the plaint itself, there was no such allegation. It was initially only in the first application for the grant of injunction that in a paragraph it has been mentioned that the appellant herein had invoked the bank guarantee arbitrarily. This application contains no facts or particulars in support of the allegation of fraud. A similar bald averment alleging fraud is also contained in the second application for injunction relating to bank guarantee No. 40/47. This is not a case where defendant No. 1 had at any time alleged fraud prior to the filing of injunction application. The main contract, pursuant to which the bank guarantees were issued, was not sought to be avoided by alleging fraud, nor was it at any point of time alleged that the bank guarantee was issued because any fraud had been played by the appellant. We have no manner of doubt that the bald assertion of fraud had been made solely with a view to obtain an order of injunction. In the absence of established fraud and not a mere allegation of fraud and that also having been made only in the injunction application, the Court could not, in the present case, have granted an injunction relating to the encashment of the bank guarantees.

(29.) It is unfortunate that the High Court did not consider it necessary to refer to various judicial pronouncements of this Court in which the principles which have to be followed while examining an application for grant of interim relief have been clearly laid down. The observation of the High Court that reference to judicial decisions will not be of much importance was clearly a method adopted by it in avoiding to follow and apply the law as laid down by this Court. Yet another serious error which was committed by the High Court, in the present case, was not to examine the terms of the bank guarantee and consider the letters of invocation which had been written by the appellant. If the High Court had taken the trouble of examining the documents on record, which had been referred to by the trial Court, in its order refusing to grant injunction, the Court would not have granted the interim injunction. We also do not find any justification for the High Court in invoking the alleged principle of unjust enrichment to the facts of the present case and then deny the appellant the right to encash the bank guarantee. If the High Court had taken the trouble to see the law on the point it would have been clear that in encashment of bank guarantee the applicability of the principle of undue enrichment has no application.

(30.) We are constrained to make these observations with regard to the manner in which the High Court had default with this case because this is not an isolated case where the Courts, while disobeying or not complying with the law laid down by this Court, have at time been liberal in granting injunction restraining encashment of bank guarantees.

(31.) It is unfortunate, that notwithstanding the authoritative pronouncements of this Court, the High Courts and the Courts subordinate thereto, still seem intent on affording to this Court innumerable opportunities for dealing with this area of law, thought by this Court to be well settled.

(32.) When a position, in law, is well settled as a result of judicial pronouncement of this Court, it would amount to judicial impropriety to say the least, for the subordinate Courts including the High Courts to ignore the settled decisions and then to pass a judicial order which is clearly contrary to the settled legal position. Such judicial adventurism cannot be permitted and we strongly deprecate the tendency of the subordinate Courts in not applying the settled principles and in passing whimsical orders which necessarily has the effect of granting wrongful and unwarranted relief to one of the parties. It is time that this tendency stops.

(33.) Before concluding we think it appropriate to mention about the conduct of the respondent-bank which has chosen not to be in this case. From the facts stated hereinabove it appears to us that the respondent bank has not shown professional efficiency, to say the least, and has acted in a partisan manner with a view to help and assist respondent No. 1. At the time when there was no restraint order from any Court, the bank was under a legal and moral obligation to honour its commitments. It, however, failed to do so. It appears that the bank deliberately dragged its feet so as to enable respondent No. 1 to secure favourable order of injunction from the Court. Such conduct of a bank is difficult to appreciate. We do not wish to say anything more but it may feel that it will be prejudicial in the event of the appellant taking action against it.

(34.) For the aforesaid reasons this appeal is allowed. The judgment and order of the Allahabad High Court dated 10/09/1996 in revision petition No. 257 of 1996 is set aside and the order of the trial Court dated 20/08/1996 dismissing the injunction application is restored. The appellant would be entitled to costs which are quantified at Rs. 20,000.00.

Appeal allowed.

Bhagavad Gita, Verses 63 and 73, referred to In the present case there was a deliberate and conscious obstruction, put and recorded by the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court, even when the judicial order of the Supreme Court was before them, in support of the prayer for an early hearing of the appeal. This case is of a negative or reverse action instead of a bare inaction of far less in gravity on the part of the Judges of the High Court. Patently the order of the Supreme Court had been flouted by the High Court. (Para 9)

Bayer India Ltd. v. State of Maharashtra, (1993) 3 SCC 29, relied on

It has obvious ramifications, far and significant. The Supreme Court's action has parameters ranging between total apathy and punishment for contempt after initiating contempt proceeding. Therefore, the advice of the Solicitor General of India besides that of the senior advocates appearing for the parties as to what step need the Supreme Court take in respect of the erring Judges of the High Court had to be taken. They in one voice advised the Court to show at this juncture judicial statesmanship, and let the present order go on record, more as a reminder and a message, travelling far and wide, less as a warning, solely to uphold and preserve the independence and majesty of the Supreme Court, as the highest Court of justice in the Sovereign Republic of India; a pillar of the body politic, established under the Constitution, conferred with plenary powers under Articles 141, 142 and 144 of the Constitution. The Supreme Court has singular constitutional role and correspondingly all authorities, civil or judicial in the territory of India have assisting role towards it, who are mandated by the Constitution to act in aid of the Supreme Court. That the High Court is one such judicial . authority covered under Article 144 is beyond question. The order of the Supreme Court was indeed a judicial order and otherwise enforceable throughout the territory of India under Article 142. The High Court was bound to come in aid of the Supreme Court when it required the High Court to have its order worked out. The language of request often employed by the Supreme Court in such situations is to be read by the High Court as an obligation, in carrying out'the constitutional mandate, maintaining the writ of the Supreme Court running large throughout the country.

B) Practice and procedure— Supreme Court's order to High Court— It should normally be in the form of a request, not command or direction- The language of request often employed by the Supreme Court in such situations is to be read by the High Court as an obligation, in carrying out'the constitutional mandate, maintaining the writ of the Supreme Court running large throughout the country.

> For Arjuna, the freedom given to act as he wished to, was an illusion; acting in conformity with the instructions of Krishna a bounden duty. This message has perceptibly percolated down as part of Indian culture, philosophy and behavioural setting the tenor in the Constitution for interaction between the high constitutional authorities and institutions. One needs only to be aware of this thought with which the Constitution is soaked.

Dipankar P. Gupta, Solicitor General (G.L. Sanghi, K. Parasaran, S. Arvind, V. Balachandran, P. Parameswaran, Ajit Kumar Sinha, Ms Sarin Khanjuria and Ms Indu Malhotra, Advocates, with them) for the appearing parties.

JUDGMENT:

The Order of the Court was pronounced by PUNCHHI, J.- It has been said before, and needs to be said again, what we are about to through this order, to strengthen the functional chains which pull the judicial machine to its destination on the track laid by the Constitution.

2.We have on our board Special Leave Petition Nos. 12597- 600 of 1993 against the judgment and order dated 29-4-1993 of a Division Bench of the High Court of Judicature at Madras passed in some CMPs in OSA Nos. 6973 of 1993. These are at the instance of the first and the second defendant in the original suit filed by the plaintiff-first respondent, pending before a learned Single Judge of the High Court, in which in intra-court appellate jurisdiction the petitioners have been subjected to certain interim orders of significance by the Division Bench. This Court on 10-9-1993 ordered issuance of notice in the special leave petitions as also on the application for stay returnable within four weeks. On response, and consideration of the counter- affidavits filed by the respondents and rejoinder affidavits by the petitioners, we had on 14-1-1994 passed the following order:

"Let the matter stand by three months. In the meantime, parties' counsel shall approach the High Court for an early disposal of the OSA Nos. 69-73 of 1993 pending before it and apprise to us on the next date of hearing the result of it. We have no doubt that the High Court when approached for the purpose would give the matter due attention as is expected by us."

3. In order to await the outcome of the order we had kept the matter adjourned from time to time when a Division Bench of the Madras High Court consisting of Hon'ble Mr Justice Gulab C. Gupta (now Chief Justiceof Himachal Pradesh High Court) and Hon'ble Mr Justice K.A. Thanikkachalam passed on 18-8-1994 the following order: "These applications are filed for fixing early hearing of the appeal. The order of the Supreme Court dated 14-1-1994 in Special Leave Appeal (Civil) No. 12597-600/93(AN) is produced before us to support the aforesaid prayer. We have considered the matter with the seriousness it deserves; but find nothing important so as to give precedence to the appeals over large numbers of pending appeals in this Court. The appellant must take his chance strictly in order in which he approached this Court by filing these appeals, The applications are rejected."

4. Patently our order dated 14-1-1994 has been flouted, which is a matter of grave concern to us. On our part what else is expected? It has obvious ramifications, far and significant. We therefore have on our own solicited the advice of the Solicitor General of India Mr Dipankar P. Gupta, besides that of Mr K. Parasaran, Senior Advocate, the ex-Attorney General of India representing one of the parties instantly, and Shri G.L. Sanghi, Senior Advocate appearing for the other parties, as to what step need we take in respect of the Hon'ble but erring Judges of the High Court. Conceivably our action has parameters ranging between total apathy and punishment for contempt after initiating contempt proceeding. They have, in all seriousness, in one voice, advised us to show at this juncture judicial statesmanship, and let the present order go on record, more as a reminder and a message, travelling far and wide, less as a warning, solely to uphold and preserve the independence and majesty of the Supreme Court, as the highest court of justice in the Sovereign Republic of India; a pillar of the body politic, established under the Constitution, conferred with plenary powers under Articles 141, 142 and 144 of the Constitution. We appreciate and value their advice. We would rather remain advised on a matter like this, for then we are on sure ground.

5. The Articles above referred to are reproduced hereafter as a reminding exercise:

"141. Law declared by Supreme Court to be binding on all courts.The law declared by the Supreme Court shall be binding on all courts within the territory of India.

142. Enforcement of decrees and orders of Supreme Court and orders as to discovery, etc.- (1) The Supreme Court in the exercise of its jurisdiction may pass such decree or make such order as is necessary for doing complete justice in any cause or matter pending before it, and any decree so passed or order so made shall be enforceable throughout the territory of India in such manner as may be prescribed by or under any law made by Parliament and until provision in that behalf is so made, in such manner as the President may by order prescribe.

(2)Subject to the provisions of any law made in this behalf by Parliament, the Supreme Court shall, as respects the whole of the 263 territory of India, have all and every power to make any order for the purpose of securing the attendance of any person, the discovery or production of any documents, or the investigation or punishment of any contempt of itself.

144, Civil and judicial authorities to act in aid of the Supreme Court.- All authorities, civil and judicial, in the territory of India shall act in aid of the Supreme Court."

6. Ex facie courtesy is the blend of our order of 14-1-1994. Outwardly it is neither commanding in nature nor explicitly in terms of a direction. Such is not the sheen and tone of our order, meant as it was, for a high constitutional institution, being the High Court. It comes from another high constitutional institution (this Court) hierarchically superior in the corrective ladder. When one superior speaks to another it is always in language sweet, soft and melodious; more suggestive than directive. Judicial language is always chaste.

7. Traditions and norms in this regard, well-established and followed in this country since time immemorial, are best reflected in the "Song Celestial", the Bhagavad Gita. It would for the purpose be apposite to turn to the 18th Chapter of the Bhagavad Gita, containing the concluding portion of the dialogue between Lord Krishna, the Best of Beings, (Purushotamma) and Arjuna, the Best of Humans, (Narotamma), both superiors in themselves. Verse 63 in the words of Lord Krishna is:

9. Recently, on a lesser aberration, this Court in Bayer India Ltd. v. State of Maharashtra' had occasion to strike a sad note in the following words: (SCC pp. 31-32, paras 5-6) "5. We are saddened to notice that in spite of the Court's request contained in this order dated 6-2-1991, the High Court has not disposed of the review petition till now. The High Court was requested to dispose of the said writ petition within four months from the date of the said order and, at any rate, by 30-9-1991. It is more than two years since the order was made. While we certainly respect the independence of the High Court and recognise that it is a co-equal institution, we cannot but say, at the same time, that the constitutional scheme and judicial discipline requires that the High Court should give due regard to the orders of this Court which are binding on all courts within the territory of India. The request made in this case was contained in a judicial order. It does no credit to either institution that it has not been heeded to. We hope and trust that the delay in the disposal of the review is either accidental or on account of some or other procedural problem. Be that as it may, the present situation would not have arisen if only the review petition had been disposed of within the time contemplated in the order dated 6-2-1990.

6. In this view of the matter, the IA is disposed of with the following directions: (1)We reiterate our request to the High Court to dispose of the review petition expeditiously, at any rate within two months of this order.

The case which we are dealing with is far more angular because there is a deliberate and conscious obstruction, put and recorded by the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court, even when the judicial order of this Court dated 14-1-1994 was before them, in support of the prayer for an early durated hearing of the appeal. The case in hand is of a negative or reverse action, whereas Bayer India case 1 was barely of inaction, far less in gravity.

10. The afore-narrated words, we think, presently, are enough to assert the singular constitutional role of this Court, and correspondingly of the assisting role of all authorities, civil or judicial, in the territory of India, towards it, who are mandated by the Constitution to act in aid of this Court. That the High Court is one such judicial authority covered under Article 144 of the Constitution is beyond question. The order dated 14-1-1994 of this Court was indeed a judicial order and otherwise enforceable throughout the territory of India under Article 142 of the Constitution. The High Court was bound to come in aid of this Court when it required the High Court to have 1 (1993) 3 SCC 29 its order worked out. The language of request oftenly employed by this Court in such situations is to be read by the High Court as an obligation, in carrying out the constitutional mandate, maintaining the writ of this Court running large throughout the country.

11. Therefore, in these circumstances, we upturn the order of the High Court dated 18-8-1994 and reiterate our request to it to dispose of OSA Nos. 69-73 of 1993 expeditiously, at any rate now within one month from the date of communication of this Order, as this Court awaits the result thereof. Orders be communicated to the High Court forthwith. Copies thereof for information be also sent to the Hon'ble Judges of the Division Bench with our utmost respect.

12. The special leave petitions be listed on 31-1-1995. 266

VAIDIALINGAM

(1.) J.: The accused in this appeal, by special leave, challenges the common order dated 16/12/1968 passed by the Patna High Court dismissing Criminal Revision Nos. 345 and 346 of 1968 and the connected Criminal Miscellaneous Petition Nos. 248 and 249 of 1968. The Criminal Revisions and the Criminal Miscellaneous Petitions were all directed against the orders passed by the criminal courts directing that the appellant should stand his trial for offences under Ss. 167, 466 and 471 of the Indian Penal Code (hereinafter called the Penal Code).

(2.) The facts giving rise to the Criminal Revisions and the Criminal Miscellaneous Petitions may be stated : In 1963 the appellant was posted at Patna as Magistrate, Ist Class with special powers to try Bad Livelihood Cases (which are called B. L. Cases) under

S. 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (hereinafter called the Code). In September, 1963, two B. L. Cases Nos. 4 and 5 of 1963 had been started against Kailash Gope and Ramprit Gope and others respectively. Those cases were transferred to the file of the appellant for disposal. At the time of the transfer of cases, the accused persons had already been enlarged on bail. But the appellant claims to have noticed some defects in the bail bonds furnished by those persons. He gave directions that the defects the bail bonds should be rectified. On the parties failing to rectify the defects, the appellant cancelled the bail bonds and remanded them to jail custody. The parties against whom the B. L. Cases had been started, filed two applications before the District Magistrate. Patna for transferring their cases from the file of the court of the appellant to the file of another Magistrate on the grant that they seriously apprehended that they will not get justice at his hands. After coming to know of the filing of the transfer applications, the appellant recorded two orders on the order sheets of cases Nos. 4 and 5 making very serious allegations against the District Magistrate before whom the transfer applications were pending to the effect that the latter was attempting to interfere with the course of justice in the proceedings connected with the cases Nos. 4 and 5. The appellant is alleged to have inserted these two orders in the order sheets of the two cases long after the last orders were passed in those cases to make it appear that the remarks against the District Magistrate had been made much earlier. The District Magistrate called for a report from the appellant and he sent the records of the proceedings to the District Magistrate with his report. In his report he had also stated that the matter is of great importance and the entire case and the order sheets should be kept intact for favour of any action that the High Court may consider fit and proper.

(3.) In view of the allegations made by the appellant against the District Magistrate mentioned in the order sheets, the latter transferred the transfer applications to the file of the Additional District Magistrate on 11/11/1963. The Additional District Magistrate after hearing the parties transferred both the cases from the file of the appellant to another Magistrate and sent a report to the District Magistrate for initiation of proceedings against the appellant for having committed forgery in the order sheets in both the B. L. Cases. The report of the District Magistrate was forwarded to the State Government, who accorded sanction for prosecuting the appellant. The Senior District Prosecutor, Patna filed on 21/12/1964 a complaint in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Patna Sadar against the appellant. In the complaint it was alleged that the appellant has committed offences under Ss. 167, 465, 466 and 471 of the Penal Code. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate after taking cognizance of the offences alleged to have been committed by the appellant, transferred the cases to the file of the Magistrate, 1st Class, Patna, initiating two commitment proceedings in respect of the alleged offences said to have been committed in each of the B. L. Cases. After examining the witnesses and perusing the documents, the Magistrate, 1st Class, committed the appellant to the Court of Session in both cases for trial under Ss. 167, 466 and 471 of the Penal Code.

(4.) The two Sessions Cases were accordingly started in the Court of the Assistant Sessions Judge, Patna and charges were framed against the appellant under Sections 167, 466 and 471 of the Penal Code.

(5.) The appellant filed two petitions before the Assistant Sessions Judge that his trial could not be proceeded with as the mandatory provisions of Sections 195 and 476 of the Code have not been complied with. In fact his prayer in the applications filed before the Assistant Sessions Judge was that he should be acquitted. The Assistant Sessions Judge by his order dated 22/11/1966 rejected the applications filed by the appellant and declined to consider the competency of trial as a preliminary issue at that stage.

(6.) The appellant filed Criminal Revisions before the Sessions Judge against the order made by the Assistant Sessions Judge with a prayer to quash also the commitment orders of the Magistrate. He had also made a prayer for a reference to be made to the High Court to quash the proceedings pending before the Assistant Sessions Judge. The Sessions Judge rejected the applications filed by the appellant. ln consequence the appellant filed before the High Court Criminal Revision Nos. 345 and 346 of 1968 against the orders of the Sessions Judge declining to quash the commitment proceedings and to making a reference to the High Court in the two Sessions Cases against the appellant. He also filed Criminal Miscellaneous Petitions Nos. 248 and 249 of 1968 to quash the orders of the Magistrate, Ist Class to stand his trial for offences under Ss. 167, 466 and 471 of the Penal Code.

(7.) The High Court rejected both the Criminal Revisions and the Criminal Miscellaneous Petitions.

(8.) Mr. Jyoti Narayan, learned counsel for the appellant, has urged that the entire proceedings initiated against the appellant were without jurisdiction inasmuch as the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was not competent to take cognisance of the complaint filed by the Senior District Prosecutor. According to the learned counsel the authority to file the complaint against the appellant was the court to which the appellant was subordinate at the material time as is mandatory under S. 195 (1) (b) and (c) of the Code. His further contention is that there has been a violation of the mandatory provisions of S. 476 of the Code. The mere sanction given by the State Government under S. 197 at the Code is not, in the circumstances, sufficient to give jurisdiction to the Magistrate to take cognizance of the offences alleged against the appellant.

(9.) On the other hand, Mr. R. C. Prasad, learned counsel for the State urged that the offences alleged against the appellant are under Ss. 167, 466 and 471 of the Penal Code. None of these sections is covered by S. 195 (1) (b) of the Code. Section 466 is not covered by cl. (c) of S. 195 (1) of the Code. Section 471, is no doubt, taken in by the said clause but in order to attract that clause it is necessary that the offence alleged should have been committed "by a party to any proceeding in any court ...." If the conditions mentioned in cl. (c) are satisfied, then the complaint should be made in writing by the court before whom the offence is committed or by some other court to which such court is subordinate. The appellant can by no means be characterized to be a party to any proceeding in any court, in respect of the offence under S. 471 alleged against him. Therefore, there is no violation of either cl. (b) or (c) of S. 195 (1) of the Code. Section 476 of the Code also, according to Mr. Prasad does not apply as the conditions stated therein do not exist in the present case.

(10.) Briefly the allegations is the complaint are as follows. The appellant has recorded serious allegations in the order sheets against the then District Magistrate, Patna, Sri R. C. Sinha and the counsel Sri Mathura Sharma, appearing on behalf of the accused in the B. L. Cases. The said allegations and certain other entries were interpolations and forgery. The appellant has framed incorrect documents with intent to cause injury and he has committed forgery in judicial records and used the forged documents as genuine with intent to cause injury to others. The said entries, interpolations and forgeries have been committed by the appellant between 7/11/1963 and Nov 11/11/1963 after the appellant received the order dated 6/11/1963 of the District Magistrate Patna directing him to submit a report in respect of the allegations made against him in the transfer applications filed by the parties in the B. L. Cases. The complaint alleged that the appellant has committed offences under Ss. 167, 465, 466 and 471 of the Penal Code.

(11.) We have already indicated that the appellant has been committed to the Sessions to take his trial only under Ss. 167, 466 and 471 of the Penal Code.

(12.) According to Mr. Jyoti Narayan, the point of time at which the legality of the cognisance taken by the Magistrate is to be adjudged, is the time when cognizance is actually taken under S. 190 of the Code and applying that test in the present case, it will be seen that there has been a breach of S. 195 (1) (b) and (c) and S. 476 of the Code. The proposition that the point of time at which the legality of the cognisance taken is to be adjudged is the time when cognisance is actually taken is laid down by this Court in M. L Sethi v. R. P. Kapur (1967) 1 SCR 520 = (AIR 1967 SC 528). The Magistrate has normally got jurisdiction to take cognizance under Section 190 of the Code in the circumstances enumerated therein. Section 195 is in fact a limitation on the unfettered powers of a magistrate to take cognizance under S. 190 of the Code. Therefore, at the stage when the magistrate is taking cognizance under S. 190, he must examine the facts of the complaint before him and determine whether his power of taking cognizance under S. 190 has or has not been taken away by any of the clauses (a) to (c) of S. 195 (1). Therefore, it is needless to state that if there is a non-compliance with the provisions of S. 195, the Magistrate will have no jurisdiction to take cognizance of any of the offences enumerated therein.

(13.) Mr. Jyoti Narayan on the basis of the decision of this Court reported in Nasir-Ul-Huq v. The State of West Bengal, 1953 SCR 836 = (AIR 1953 SC 293) urged that though S. 195 trade no bar to the trial of an accused person for a distinct offence disclosed by same facts and which is not included within the ambit of that section, the provisions of that section cannot be evaded by resorting to device of charging a person with an offence to which that section does not apply.

(14.) We have already referred to the sections of the Penal Code under which the appellant has been charged. They are sections 167, 466 and 471. Admittedly, none of these sections is covered by cl (b) of S. 195 (1). Therefore clause (b) prima facie will not in terms bar the jurisdiction of the magistrate to take cognizance of the offence under section 167 of the Penal Code. The contention of Mr. Jyoti Narayan is that the various averments made in the complaint will really show that the nature of the offence, if any, committed by the appellant will really come under Ss. 192 and 193 I. P. C. It the charge has been framed under section 193 of the Penal Code, it will squarely fall under cl. (b) of S. 195 (1) of the Code. With a view to really evade the bar of cl. (b) of S. 195 (1), the prosecution has adopted the device of not charging the appellant under S. 193 of the Penal Code, though in effect they want him to be convicted for an offence under S. 193 of the Penal Code. We are not inclined to accept this contention of the learned counsel.

(15.) The High Court after a careful analysis of the allegations made in the complaint and the materials placed before it and after a very elaborate consideration of the matter has come to the conclusion that on the case of the prosecution the charge framed under Section 167 of the Penal Code, is justified. The High Court has considered the ingredients of the offence under Ss. 192 and 193 as well as Section 167 of the Penal Code. As the charge has been framed under S. 167, the bar under S. 195 (1) (b) or (c) of the Code has no application. We agree with the view of the High Court S. 195 (1) (b) or (c) is no bar to the magistrate taking cognizance for an offence under S. 167. The offence under S. 466 of the Penal Code is, admittedly, not covered by cl.(b) or cl. (c) of S. 195 (1) of the Code. Therefore, that section does not operate as a bar in respect of this offence.

(16.) Section 471 of the Penal Code, no doubt is taken in by cl. (c) of S. 195 (1). But, for crl (c) to operate as a bar to taking cognizance for an offence under S. 471, it is essential that the offence must be alleged to have been committed "by a party to any proceeding in any court.. . . . . " According to Mr. Jyoti Narayan, the appellant must be considered to be a party to the transfer applications filed by the persons concerned in the B. L. Cases, which transfer applications were pending before the District Magistrate.

Allegations have been made against the appellant in the transfer applications and the District Magistrate has called for a report from the appellant in respect of those allegations. The Additional District Magistrate has inquired into the allegations made in the transfer applications and given a decision transferring the cases from the file of the appellant to another Magistrate. All the above circumstances according to the learned counsel, will make the appellant a party to the proceedings connected with the transfer applications, which were pending before the Additional District Magistrate.

(17.) We have no hesitation to reject the contention of the learned counsel. Merely on the basis that the applications for transfer of certain cases pending before the appellant had been filed making allegations against the appellant will not make the appellant a party to those proceedings. He was functioning as a magistrate and he has no personal interest in the outcome of the transfer applications. No doubt when allegations of prejudice have been made against the appellant, it was his duty as a subordinate court and as an officer against whom allegations have been made to offer explanations in his report sent to his superior or appellate authority, namely, the Additional District Magistrate. Therefore, cl. (c) of Section 195 (1) again does not bar the jurisdiction of Magistrate to take cognizance of offence under Section 471 of the Penal Code.

(18.) The further contention of Mr. Jyoti Narayan is based upon Section 476 of the Code. According to him the Additional District Magistrate has inquired into the applications filed by the counsel for the parties in the B. L. Cases filed against the appellant under Sections 466 and 471, I. P. C. The Additional District Magistrate inquired into the matter behind the back of the appellant and after examining the witnesses passed an order on 16/12/1963 holding the appellant guilty of the said offences and forwarded a copy of the order to the State Government to sanction criminal and administrative action being taken against the appellant. The complaint filed in this case suffers from an infirmity inasmuch as it has not been filed by the Additional District Magistrate. We are not inclined to accept this contention either. We have already held that S. 195 (1) (b) or of the Code does not apply to the of the appellant. If that is so, that finding is enough to hold that S. 476 of the Code does not come into picture. Even otherwise. S. 476 of the Code will not apply as we will presently show. The records, no doubt, show that the counsel appearing for the parties in the B. L. Cases in connection with the transfer applications filed by them, filed an application before the Additional District Magistrate that action should be taken by him to file a complaint against the appellant for offences under Ss. 467 and 471 of the Penal Code. It is also seen that the Additional District Magistrate has examined certain witnesses and ultimately passed an order on 16/12/1963. This order is a combined order dealing with transfer applications as well as the application filed by the lawyer for filing a complaint against the appellant. The Additional District Magistrate has held that prima facie the appellant must be considered to be guilty of having committed forgery and interpolations in the order sheets and therefore there is a good ground for transferring the B. L. Cases from his file to another magistrate. Accordingly, the Additional District Magistrate transferred the B. L. Cases to the file of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Patna Sadar. He had directed that a copy of the order be sent to the State Government for considering the question of giving sanction to take criminal and administrative action against the appellant. It may appear prima facie that the Additional District Magistrate was conducting a preliminary inquiry under S. 476 (1) of the Code. But a perusal of the order passed by the Additional District Magistrate will dearly show that all the findings recorded against the appellant were only reasons for transferring the B. L. Cases from the file of the appellant. He himself has not taken any action as contemplated under S. 476 of the Code. He was merely dealing with the transfer application and incidentally also with the applications filed by the lawyer. It was on the basis of this order that the State Government ultimately gave the sanction. The validity of the sanction given by the State Government as such is not challenged. The contention is that over and above the sanction given by the State Government, the provisions of S. 195 (1) (b) and (c) and S. 476 of the Code should have been complied with. We have already held that the bar of either clause (b) or (c) to S. 195 (1) does not apply. From our discussion of the nature of the inquiry conducted by the Additional District Magistrate on the complaint filed by the lawyer appearing on behalf of the parties of the B. L. Cases, it follows that S. 476 of the Code also has no application. In our opinion none of the provisions relied on by the learned counsel operated in a bar to the jurisdiction of the magistrate taking cognizance of the complaint in this case.

(19.) We have already referred to the fact that in the complaint the offence under S. 465 of the Penal Code was also included. Section 463 of the Penal Code defines forgery and S. 465 deals with punishment for the said offence. Section 463 of the Penal Code is, no doubt, taken in by cl. (c) of S. 195 .(i) of the Code. Even on the basis that S. 465 of the Penal Code will also be covered by cl. (c) as the offence under S. 463 is dealt with therein, nevertheless, cl. (c) will not operate as a bar to the jurisdiction of the magistrate in taking cognizance of the said offence as the offence is not alleged to have been committed "by a party to any proceeding in any court . . . " We have already discussed this aspect in the earlier part of our judgment. We have also referred to the fact that the appellant has been committed only for the offences under Sections 167, 466 and 471 of the Penal Code. Section 465 of the Penal Code is not the subject of the committal order. Any how we have discussed about that section also as the appellant was contesting the jurisdiction of the magistrate to take cognizance on the basis of S. 195 (1) (b) and (c).

(20.) Mr. Jyoti Narayan referred to the contempt proceedings that may be started against the appellant. The question whether action for contempt can or cannot be taken against the appellant does not at all arise nor consideration a present.

(21.) Finally Mr. Jyoti Narayan contended at the complaint does not disclose offence and therefore the committal proceedings should be quashed. This contention is absolutely devoid of any merit. Whether the appellant is ultimately found to be guilty or not is a different point. The allegations in the complaint do disclose that the offences alleged against the appellant require investigation. Therefore, it cannot be said that no offence is disclosed in the complaint This contention is also rejected.

(22.) Before concluding it must be emphasized that any observations made in this judgment agreeing with the views expressed by the High Court are only for the purpose of dealing with the contentions raised on behalf of the appellant based on the provisions of Section 195 (1) (b) and (c) and Section 476 of the Code.

(23.) In the result the order of the High Court is confirmed and this appeal dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Criminal P.C. (2 of 1974), S.197 - SANCTION FOR PROSECUTION - Prosecution of judges and public servants - Complaint under Section 504 I.P.C. - Use of words "non-sense" and 'bloody fool' by Presiding Officer against complainant - Sanction to prosecute, not necessary – This is not the part of his official duty.

A Presiding Judge is expected to maintain decorum in the proceedings before him. He is expected also to act with restraint- One would expect him to be sober, unruffled and temperate in language even when faced with a situation where those appearing before him may tend to lose their composure. In this scheme of things any vituperative outburst on the part of the Presiding Officer, howsoever grave the provocation to him, cannot be countenanced as an action sustainable as one performed by him "while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty."

Judgement

1. V. K. MEHROTRA J. :- Respondent Shri M. S. Mandyal (at present posted as Additional District and Sessions Judge, Shimla) was posted as Sub-Divisional Judicial Magistrate, Palampur in the month of July, 1981. On July 7, 1981 head constable Bidhi Singh (petitioner before us) escorted some under-trial prisoners for their production in the Court of Shri Mandyal along with some constables. The under-trial prisoners were produced in hand-cuffs before the learned Magistrate. It is said that on seeing that the under-trial prisoners were brought before him hand-cuffed, the learned Magistrate lost his temper and abused Bidhi Singh by uttering the words 'non-sense' and 'bloody fool'.

2. On July 22, 1981 applicant Bidhi Singh filed a complaint in the Court of the Chief Judicial Magistrate. He alleged that by his conduct in the open Court Shri Mandyal had intentionally insulted the complainant Bidhi Singh and had given provocation to him, knowing that it was likely to cause the complainant to break public peace. Preliminary evidence was recorded by the Chief Judicial Magistrate. He directed issue of summons to Shri Mandyal to answer an offence under Section 504 IPC. This was on October 30, 1981.

3. Shri Mandyal felt aggrieved by this order and assailed it in criminal revision No. 1 of 1982 which came to be heard by the Additional Sessions Judge, Kangra Sessions Division at Dharamshala. The learned Additional Sessions Judge held in his order of February 10, 1983 that cognizance could not have been taken by the Chief Judicial Magistrate of the complaint against Shri Mandyal in the absence of a proper sanction under Section 197 Cr. P.C. He also held that there is no, prima facie, case justifying issuance of the process to Shri Mandyal. The proceedings pending before the Chief Judicial Magistrate were quashed.

4. The present petition has remained pending for several years in view of an order of September 19, 1983 by the then Chief Justice of this Court that it be listed for admission "after the decision of Contempt Petition (Cr.) No. 3 of 1982 - Court on its Own Motion V. Milkhi Ram". After disposal of the Contempt petition, the present proceedings came up before us on June 2, 1992. After hearing Shri K. C. Rana appearing for petitioner Bidhi Singh we directed issue of notice, pending admission of the petition, to respondent Shri Mandyal. Shri M. S. Chandel appeared on behalf of the respondent. After hearing him as well, we directed that the matter be listed for dictation of judgment in open Court.

5. Shri Malkiat Singh Chandel has, with his usual fairness, urged before us that the view taken by the learned Additional Sessions Judge that cognizance of the complaint made by petitioner Bidhi Singh against the Presiding Officer Shri M. S. Mandyal could not be taken in the absence of a proper sanction as envisaged by Section 197(1) Cr. P.C. is sound law and the present petition should be dismissed at this stage itself. He has also urged, in the alternative, that having regard to the circumstances of the present case this Court should not interfere with the order of the Additional Sessions Judge quashing the proceedings against Shri Mandyal.

6. It has not been disputed before us that Shri Mandyal, while functioning as the Sub-Divisional Judicial Magistrate at Palampur on July 7, 1981 used the two words attributed to him, namely, 'Non-sense' and 'Bloody fool' addressing them to complainant Bidhi Singh when he escorted certain under-trial prisoners and produced them before the Court of the Magistrate in hand-cuffs, along with some other constables. It is also not disputed that Shri Mandyal falls in the category of persons contemplated by Section 197(1) Cr. P.C.

7. Section 197(1), Cr. P.C. in its material part, says :

"197. Prosecution of Judges and public servants :

(1) When any person who is or was ..... Magistrate ..... not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of the Government is accused of any offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty, no Court shall take cognizance of such offence except with the previous sanction -

(a) .....

(b) in the case of person who is employed or, as the case may be, was at the time of commission of the alleged offence employed, in connection with the affairs of a State, of the State Government.

(4) The ..... State Government ..... may determine the person by whom, the manner in which, and the offences for which, the prosecution of such ..... Magistrate ..... is to be conducted, and may specify the Court before which the trial is to be held."

8. The provision has come up for consideration, time and again, before various Courts in this Country. In S. B. Saha v. M. S. Kochar, AIR 1979 SC 1841 : (1979 Cri LJ 1367) the Supreme Court, speaking through Sarkaria, J. said, (in paragraph 18), that :

"the words "any offence alleged, to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty" employed in Section 197(1) of the Code, are capable of a narrow as well as a wide interpretation. If these words are considered too narrowly; the Section will be rendered altogether sterile, for, "it is no part of an official duty to commit an offence, and never can be". In the wider sense, these words will take under their umbrella every act constituting an offence, committed in the course of the same transaction in which the official duty is performed or purports to be performed. The right approach to the import of these words lies between these two extremes ..... an act constituting an offence, directly and reasonably connected with his official duty will require sanction for prosecution under the said provision. As pointed out by Ramaswami, J. in Baijnath v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1966 SC 220 : (1966 Cri LJ 179) at p. 222 "it is the quality of the act that is important and if it falls within the scope and range of his official duties, the protection contemplated by Section 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code will be attracted."

9. Later; (in paragraph 21) the Supreme Court extracted the observations from an earlier Constitution Bench decision in Matajog Dobey v. H. C. Bhari, AIR 1956 SC 44 : (1956 Cri LJ 140) where it had said that :

"in the matter of grant of sanction under Section 197, the offence alleged to have been committed by the accused must have something to do, or must be related in some manner, with the discharge of official duty ..... there must be a reasonable connection between the act and the discharge of official duty, the act must bear such relation to the duty, that the accused could lay a reasonable claim, but not a pretended or fanciful claim, that he did it in the course of the performance of his duty."

10. The aforesaid observations have been extracted from those made by the Supreme Court in paragraph 17 of its judgment in Matajog Dobey. These observations echo the view expressed by the Supreme Court earlier in Amrik Singh v. State of Pepsu, AIR 1955 SC 309 : (1955 Cri LJ 865) when it said (in paragraph 8) that :

"It is not every offence committed by a public servant that requires sanction for prosecution under Section 197(1), Criminal P.C.; nor even every act done by him while he is actually engaged in the performance of his official duties; but if the act complained of is directly concerned with his official duties so that, if questioned, it could be claimed to have been done by virtue of the office, then sanction would be necessary; and that would be so, irrespective of whether it was, in fact, a proper discharge of his duties.....".

And, (in paragraph 9) that :

"..... If the acts complained of are so integrally connected with the duties attaching to the office as to be inseparable from them, then sanction under Section 197(1) would be necessary; but if there was no necessary connection between them and the performance of those duties, the official status furnishing only the occasion or opportunity for the acts, then no sanction would be required."

11. The view expressed in these decision's has been reiterated by the Supreme Court again and again as is clear from what it said in B. S. Sambhu v. T. S. Krishnaswamy, AIR 1983 SC 64 : (1983 Cri LJ 154); Balbir Singh v. D. N. Kadian, AIR 1986 SC 345 : (1986 Cri LJ 314) and Bakhshish Singh Brar v. Smt. Gurmej Kaur, AIR 1988 SC 257 : (1988 Cri LJ 419).

12. The legal position admits of no doubt in view of these pronouncements.

13. Our attention was invited by Shri Malkiat Singh Chandel to some decisions of a few High Courts wherein prosecution for use of abusive language by the Presiding Officer, during the course of proceedings before him was said to require sanction under Section 197 Cr. P.C. or example, in Lala Bhagirath v. Saiyid Ali Hamid Sahib, AIR 1931 Oudh 392 : (32 Cri LJ 991) a complaint against the Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki, before whom a miscellaneous application was presented by 145 persons, was returned by the Judge on the ground that it did not contain the parentage and place of residence of the applicants, while observing "in a somewhat facetious vein that there was only one personage known to him in history whose miraculous birth gave rise to the Christian theological dogma of the Immaculate Conception, and that surely these 145 applicants did not claim the same divine origin." and further remarking that the application which was written in Urdu was so badly written that the name of one of the applicants Gupta could be read as 'kutta' (dog), was held not sustainable for want of sanction, interalia, on the ground that Mr. Gupta himself had filed no complaint against the Subordinate Judge for the alleged defamatory remark said to have been made against him and that, "to compare the birth of Jesus Christ with that of these two complainants is not to defame the latter however in-apposite and irreverent the comparison may be."

14. In Harumal Hotchand v. Haji Imambux Jatoi, AIR 1933 Sindh 165 : (34 Cri LJ 819) an Executive Engineer, while dealing with an application made by a Zamindar requesting to provide him a more liberal supply of water used abusive language in relation to the Zamindar. It was held that a complaint made against the Executive Engineer was not maintainable in absence of a valid sanction, because when he uttered those words "he was clearly acting in his official capacity. The words used by him could not have been uttered except in that capacity."

15. The occasion when the offending words used by the Executive Engineer alone seems to have been taken into consideration by the Court in coming to this conclusion.

16. Sukhdeo v. Emperor, AIR 1934 All 978 : (36 Cri LJ 331) was a case where the Special Magistrate of Benares (as Varanasi was then called) used abusive language towards the complainant when he was appearing as a witness before the Magistrate in the witness box. The complaint by the witness against the Magistrate was dismissed for want of sanction under Section 197 Cr. P.C. The learned Judge, dealing with the matter in the High Court, said at Page 332 :

"In the present case there is no doubt that Rai Kishanji was acting or atleast purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty, when it is said that he used insulting language to the petitioner. The test is whether the officer at that particular moment was actually engaged in the discharge of his official duty."

17. This decision overlooks that it is not only the occasion when offending words are used by the Presiding officer which is to be considered but also the fact that "there should be something in the nature or quality of the act complained of which attaches to or partakes of the official capacity of the offender." and that there should be "reasonable connection between the act.....and the doer."

18. Yet another single Judge in M. Subbiah v. T. Ramacharlu, AIR 1939 Madras 604 : (40 Cri LJ 853) took the view that on being disturbed in the dictation of judgment, the President of a Panchayat Court :

"who.....got up from his seat abusing the complainant and slapped him on the cheek twice and on his protest unlaced his shoe, took it up in his hand raised it saying "I will beat you with my shoe" :

....." was acting throughout, till the very minute when the alleged offence had been committed in, official capacity and that no Court could take - cognizance of the matter in the absence of a sanction under Section 197 Cr. P.C.

19. Mewalal v. Totalal, AIR 1957 MP 230 : (1957 Cri LJ 1413) was a case where the complainant was examined as a witness in a case and while he was being so examined, the learned Civil Judge before whom be was being examined, was said to have used the expression 'Nalayak' (unfit) and ultimately to have expressed that the witness would be turned out after being given shoe beating.

The view taken was that : "What was said to have been done was an offence in relation to the official act of a Judge."

20. Likewise, in Prabhu Dayal v. Milap Chand, AIR 1959 Rajasthan 12 : (1959 Cri LJ 82) the Sarpanch of a Panchayat which was acting as a Court is said to have asked the complainant to go out of the Court-room and upon the complainant trying to argue out against it,, abused the complainant. The view taken by the High Court was that the Sarpanch ".....purported to act in the discharge of his official duty when he asked the complainant to go out of his Court-room," though he was not expected to use objectionable language. As such, sanction under Section 197 Cr. P.C. was necessary before cognizance could be taken by the Court of the matter.

21. In State v. P.C. Sharma, (1975 ILR Himachal Series 700) a Divisional Forest Officer, while making an injury from his subordinate, lost his temper when this subordinate gave a reply and he, in a fit of anger, dragged him and gave a cane blow to the subordinate. The Court took the view that the action of the D.F.O. was not proper. But since he was making an inquiry from the subordinate in the purported exercise of official duties, the action attributed to him though in excess of his authority under a wrong notion about the extent of powers, could not be said to be one which was not done in purported exercise of his official duties. Sanction under Section 197 Cr. P.C. was thus, necessary before prosecution the Divisional Forest Officer.

22. These decisions, we feel, are not apposite precedents in view of the legal position clarified by the Supreme Court.

23. We would like to borrow the words from the opinion of Lord Simonds in H. H. B. Gill v. King, AIR 1948 PC 128 : (49 Cri LJ 503) when he says (in paragraph 30) that :

"A public servant can only be said to act or to purport to act in the discharge of his official duty, if his act is such as to lie within the scope of his official duty. Thus, a Judge neither acts nor purports to act as a Judge in receiving a bribe, though the judgment which he delivers may be such an act : nor does a Government medical officer act or purports to act as a public servant in picking the pocket of patient whom he is examining, though the examination itself may be such an act. The test may well be whether the public servant, if challenged, can reasonably claim that, what he does, he does in virtue of his office.....".

24. a Presiding Judge is expected to maintain decorum in the proceedings before him. He is expected also to act with restraint. One would expect him to be sober, unruffled and temperate in language even when faced with a situation where those appearing before him may tend to lose their composure. True it is that the Presiding Officer has to be firm in maintaining decorum in the Court and deal decisively with those who present themselves in the Court-house irrespective of the distinction that they possess, yet, we reiterate, that the action should be consistent with the dignity of the high pedestal on which society places him, while he is discharging his duty as a Judge. In this scheme of things any vituperative outburst on the part of the Presiding Officer, howsoever grave the provocation to him, cannot be countenanced as an action sustainable as one performed by him "while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty."

25. Thus viewed, the use of the words 'Non-sense' and 'Bloody fool' by Shri Mandyal cannot be said to be one attributable to him "while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty". We are unable to accept the submission made by Shri M. S. Chandel in this regard or to uphold the view taken by the learned Additional Sessions Judge that sanction under Section 197(1) Cr. P.C. was necessary, before the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Kangra could take cognizance of the offence in respect whereof complaint had been filed by - petitioner Bidhi Singh against Shri Mandyal.

26. In spite of the view expressed by us, we feel disinclined to interfere with the order passed by the Additional Sessions Judge way back in the year 1983. Shri Chandel is plainly right in his submission that the action complained of has become stale by lapse of time, albeit, without much fault on the part of the complainant. It would seem inappropriate to permit it to be reopened after the lapse of more than a decade from July 7, 1981 when the incident is said to have taken place in the Court of Shri M. S. Mandyal. Moreso, when we find that in respect of the same incident the Presiding Officer, that is Shri M. S. Mandyal, had made a reference requesting this Court for initiation of contempt proceedings against petitioner Bidhi Singh and his witnesses Gian Singh and Kanshi Ram. This was through a letter dated July 8, 1981. The complaint against the Presiding Officer was filed by petitioner Bidhi Singh thereafter on July 22, 1981.

27. We, therefore, refuse to intervene in the matter and dismiss the present petition.

JUDGMENT

1. This is an appeal against the acquittal filed by the State. All the accused - respondents were prosecuted for offence under Sections 306 read with 34, 498 and 498A of the Indian Penal Code by the Sessions Judge, Nashik in Sessions Case No. 131 of 1986.

2. The facts giving rise to the case of the prosecution were as under:

Deceased Mina was married to accused Kamalakar at Ahmednajar on 27.4.1982. She was ill-treated on account of non-payment of sufficient dowry and also because she was black in complexion, she was beaten, driven out of the house. The marriage had taken place due to intervention of Vimalabai who was the maternal aunt of Mina and who was also living in the said village where the accused used to live. Mina used to complain to maternal" aunt about the ill-treatment given by the accused. Vimalabai therefore, intervened and asked the accused No. 3 mother-in-law to treat Mina properly. Mina went to her parents, stayed there for 6-7 months, when she was brought back by her mother, she was insulted and sent away.

However before January 1983 she went to stay with them again.

3. In January 1983 parents of Mina received a telegram of accused No. I inquiring if Mina had come to their house. Mina's brother Subhash went to Yeola to the house of the accused and he learnt that Mina was staying in the house of one Sarode Talathi. Subhash found that Mina was in very bad condition at the house and she was in semi-dead condition. At that time she told about the cruel ill-treatment given to her by the accused and about severe beating given to her. She, therefore, requested Subhash to take her away as her life was in danger. Accordingly Subhash brought her back to Ahmednagar, Thereafter Mina stayed with parents for over 7-8 months and filed a petition for maintenance under Section 125 of the Criminal Procedure Code. During the pendency of that petition, her husband accused No. 1 approached Subhash, asked for a loan, but Subhash did not agree. Thereafter maintenance application was decided in March 1985. The maintenance was not paid but thereafter accused started showing their willingness to keep Mina in their house and then on the pretext of some Satyanarayan Puja, Mina was brought back to the house on 16-2-1986 and on 28.4.1986 Mina was burnt in the house. She was removed to Civil Hospital, Nashik. Ultimately because she had 94% of burns, on the next day Mina died.

4. While Mina was being removed to Civil Hospital from Yeola to Nashik one Kantilal went to Yeola Police Station and gave information about the incident. An entry was taken down in that regard by the Constable Deshmukh. Panchanama was done by the said Constable Deshmukh. Some articles were seized.

5. Thereafter Subhash lodged a report to the police at Sarkarwada Police Station as per Exhibit 14. It was registered as an accidental death and then ultimately after investigation charge-sheet was filed under Sections 306, 498-A.

6. During the trial the prosecution examined in all eight witnesses. After the prosecution evidence was over, the accused filed an application for calling the dying declaration of Mina. The same was taken on record, exhibited and after hearing the arguments, the accused were acquitted of all the charges levelled against them. The acquittal was based mainly upon the dying declaration and the so-called settlement between Mina on one side and the accused on the other side after the order of maintenance under Section 125 of the Criminal Procedure Code was passed, certain letters filed of Mina were also made the basis for acquittal, It is this judgment of acquittal that is challenged by the State in this case.

7. When matter appeared before us on 26.8.2002, the learned APP, Pravin Singhal after going through the papers requested for time to personally verify the record and then prayed for calling original case papers from Civil Hospital, Nashik, pertaining to medico legal case of Mina Bhavsar. We gave necessary directions and thereafter doctor from Civil Hospital, Nashik, produced the case papers.

8. Secondly the arguments advanced by Mr. Singhal, the learned APP for the State and Mr. Pendse for all the accused were heard by us at length.

9. The learned APP vehemently and strenuously urged before us that the entire judgment is perverse and this is a case where not only the Trial Court has erred in allowing dying declaration of Mina to come on record but according to him the learned APP who conducted the trial, the learned defence Counsel, the Investigating Officer, the doctor from the Civil Hospital, and the Judge himself have conspired together to bring on record a forged dying declaration of Mina and he, therefore, urged that necessary action against all these persons should be taken by us. In addition Mr. Singhal also contended that there was more than sufficient evidence to prove the charge under Sections 306 and 498-A of Indian Penal Code against all the accused coupled with the fact that the presumption under Section 131-A of the Evidence Act was required to be used against the accused because Mina died within 7 years of her marriage. According to him the rejection of the evidence of the witnesses by the Trial Court was totally wrong. Further, according to him the assumption of the Court that there must have been a settlement between the parties after the order of maintenance under Section 125 of Criminal Procedure Code and when Mina went to reside with the accused had factual basis and assumption was based on surmises. Further the blame put by the Trial Court upon the prosecution for non-production of dying declaration of Mina was totally uncalled for because the dying declaration and the medical certificate were totally forged and fabricated. Secondly according to him even on facts the dying declaration was proved to be false because the dying declaration of Mina which was exhibited as Exhibit 40. It was stated by Mina that she woke up at night, fell on chimney i.e. a very small burning lantern and the chimney broke, the kerosene spread on her saree and she caught fire. Mr. Singhal pointed out that in the panchanama it is mentioned mainly that there were electric lines in the house and that no chimney was found either intact or in broken condition but to the contrary circumstances found and noted in the panchanama clearly pointed out the accused as abetting suicide of Mina.

10. The learned Counsel for the accused did not try to meet the arguments of Mr. Singhal about taking action against all the concerned officers who were conducting the trial including the Investigating Officer, Medical Officer and the Judge also, but he contended that dying declaration which came on record at the behest of the accepted was genuine and that was rightly accepted by the Court and accused were rightly acquitted. So far as the oral evidence of witnesses is concerned, the learned Advocate for the accused contended firstly that the witnesses were interested, there were omissions and improvements in the evidence and the circumstances did not point out at all that Mina was subjected to ill-treatment. In the alternative it was contended by the Advocate for the accused that even if some ill-treatment was there to Mina, the same stood wiped out as soon as Mina joined her matrimonial home even after the order of maintenance. It was also contended that there was no direct nexus between her death and the ill-treatment and the instances of ill-treatment were stale instances and there was no evidence of any immediate provocation to Mina to commit suicide by any of the accused. It was, therefore, urged that the judgment of the Trial Court was proper and even if other view was possible that was not a ground to allow this appeal against acquittal.

11. Since the submissions made by Mr. Singhal about forgery and fabrication of the dying declaration and achieving the said object jointly by all those involved in conducting the case including the defence lawyer, Police Prosecutor, I.O., Doctor and even the Judge are very serious, it is necessary to consider the said argument at the outset.

12. We had before us the original record of the trial. From the said record it is clear that charge against the accused was framed on 23.10.1986. Recording of evidence was started before the Sessions Judge, Nashik, Witness P.W. 8 was examined on 26.11.1986. On that date itself accused filed an application for exhibiting the dying declaration. The dying declaration was taken on record and marked Exhibit 40. Further statement of the accused was recorded on 27.11.1986, arguments were heard and on 29.11.1986 judgment was delivered and the accused were acquitted.

13. Regarding the dying declaration Exhibit 40 and the application of the accused in that regard Exhibit 39, Mr. Singhal took strong objection and exception. According to him by filing application Exhibit 39 accused had called upon the prosecution to produce the dying declaration, which meant if such an application is made, according to Mr. Singhal, then the Court has to pass an order calling upon the prosecution to produce the said document and the prosecution can produce document on the same day if it is with it or can take time to produce the said document and then on the next date they will produce the document along with list or pursis and thereafter the Court will decide about the admissibility of the document. If the prosecution admits the document or their contents under Section 294 of the Criminal Procedure Code the document will be exhibited otherwise the defence will have to prove the contents of the document by examining the witnesses and then after the evidence the document will be exhibited.

14. According to Mr. Singhal in this case what is strange and suspicious that the application for production of the dying declaration was filed on 26.11.1986 vide Exhibit 39. The Court did not pass any order directing the prosecution to produce the document. The Prosecutor did not take any time to produce document. Roznama of 26.11.1986 does not show who produced the document on record or at whose instance it was brought. Thereafter no notice was given by the defence to the prosecution to admit the said document nor the defence examined any witness to prove the dying declaration that is they did not examine the Special Judicial Magistrate who recorded the dying declaration nor the doctor who gave an endorsement and without following any of the procedures without taking any of the steps the Court directly exhibited the document as Exhibit 40, took it into consideration and on the very next date or on 29.11.1986 judgment of the acquittal was passed.

15. Mr. Singhal on the basis of the original medical case papers which were produced by the doctor of Civil Hospital, Nashik contended that the medical papers have been tampered with. He also contended that Dr. Narayan Pawar who is alleged to have given the certificate about Mina's fitness and capacity to give the dying declaration was not concerned with the burns ward of the said hospital but was concerned with post mortem of Mina and that lie has no business to give any certificate of fitness of Mina to give dying declaration.

16. In order to appreciate submissions made by Mr. Singhal, it is necessary to see the application, Exhibit 39 itself (Exhibit 39 page 143 of English File I). The title of the application is "Notice - calling upon the prosecution to produce the Dying Declaration", and the accused has called upon prosecution to produce dying declaration of the deceased Mina dated 28.4.1986 and has also prayed that the said be exhibited and read in evidence. Application is signed by accused Kamalakar and his Advocate. The order of the Court is of the same, date. It is to the effect "Dying Declaration be produced and taken on record marked Exhibit". Roznama of 26-11-1986 shows as under ;

"Ex. 39 - Application by accused No. 1 for exhibiting the Dying Declaration.

Ex. 40 - Dying Declaration of deceased Mina Kamalakar dated 28.4.1986."

Dying declaration Exhibit 40 is on record page 145 of English File I.

17. From the aforesaid, Exhibit 39 and the Roznama dated 26-11-1986 it is absolutely clear that as soon as the application Exhibit 39 was filed for production of the dying declaration dated 28.4.1986, the order was passed by the Court and the dying declaration was taken on record and marked Exhibit 40. There is nothing anywhere on the record to show and also on Exhibit 39 and in the Roznama dated 26.11.1986 as to who produced this dying declaration, Police Prosecutor/ APP, who was conducting the prosecution has not given his say on Exhibit 39, he has not stated whether the dying declaration was with him at that very moment and he was ready to produce it from police record, nor he has asked for time to produce the document if the same was not with him. The learned Sessions Judge in the order passed on Exhibit 39 nowhere says as to who produced the dying declaration or from whose custody the dying declaration was produced. The Roznama dated 26.11.1986 also does not show who produced the dying declaration or at whose instance or from whose custody the dying declaration was produced.

18. Roznama of 26.11.1986 also shows that on that day deposition of P.W. 8 was recorded vide Exhibit 36 and the extract of diary dated 28.4.1986 was also taken on record and marked Exhibit 37. This order was passed requiring the accused to enter upon defence as per Exhibit 38 and in the same sequence of events, application Exhibit 39 came to be filed, and order came to be passed thereupon and the dying declaration was exhibited on the same day as Exhibit 40. The trial Court recorded further statements of accused Nos. 1 to 5 and adjourned the case for arguments on 27.11.1986. The said further statement is marked as Exhibit "O".

19. In fact even though the roznama dated 26.11.1986 shows that after exhibiting the dying declaration as Exhibit 40, further statement of accused Nos. 1 to 5 was recorded, the roznama of the said date does not show that prior to that statement of the accused under Section 313 of Criminal Procedure Code was recorded at all. In the sequence of happenings of 26.11.1986 whatever has happened has been produced above and if the last witness of the prosecution was examined as Exhibit 36 on 26.11.1986 and the prosecution has closed his case, first there could have been pursis by the prosecution, that it has closed its case then the Court should have recorded the statement of the accused under Section 313 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and if thereafter some document was produced and further statement was necessary, then the Court should have recorded the further statement. The roznama of 26.11.1986 does not show that after the evidence of the prosecution was over, statement of the accused was recorded. What it shows only is that after exhibiting the dying declaration further statements of the accused Nos. 1 to 5 was recorded.,

20. On the other hand statements of the accused are there on record and they show that all the statements were recorded on 26.11.1986 initially and then four lines were added to it showing recording of further statement. In the aforesaid so-called further statements only two questions are put to the accused : (1) Do you wish to examine yourself as a witness on oath, and (2) Do you wish to examine any witness in your defence. The answer to both these questions obviously from all the accused were in the negative.

21. What will be clear therefore, from the roznama on 26.11.1986 is that the evidence of the prosecution was over on 26.11.1986 after examining P.W. 8, thereafter no statement of the accused was recorded and immediately application for calling upon the prosecution to produce the dying declaration was made vide Exhibit 39, order was passed therein, dying declaration was tendered (by whom not known) it was exhibited and then further statement of the accused as shown to have been recorded.

22. We have already noted above that evidence in this case commended on 24.11.1986, it was concluded on 26-11-1986 and the judgment of acquittal was delivered on 29.11.1986. The speed with which the trial has proceeded before the Trial Court and the manner in which things took place on 26.11.1986 as noted above from the roznama, create a very suspicious picture about fairly conducting the trial.

23. Chapter XVIII of Criminal Procedure Code deals with trial before the Court of Sessions. Section 231 refers to evidence of prosecution, Section 232 deals with acquittal if there is no evidence but if there is evidence Section 233 requires the Court to call upon the accused to enter upon his defence and adduce any evidence he may have in support thereof. Exhibit 38 is an order of the Court, on the same date calling upon the accused to enter into their defence, if any. Section 233 thereafter requires "that if the accused applies for issue of any process for..... the Judge shall issue such process or (call upon the production of document) unless the Judge decided to reject the application on the ground that it is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice". It is, therefore, clear from this Section 233 that the judicial order has to be passed by the Sessions Court, if an application for production of document is made. In this case such an application was made by the accused vide Exhibit 39 and, therefore, the Judge should have taken care to record as to from whose custody the dying declaration is produced, who is producing it and prior to that the Judge should have called upon the Police Prosecutor/APP to file his say to the said application, ascertain whether the dying declaration was in existence, whether it was in the custody of police and then call upon the prosecution to produce the said document; Nothing has been done and directly the dying declaration is taken on record without clarifying anywhere either on Exhibit 39 or in the Roznama as to who produced the dying declaration or at whose instance it was produced or from whose custody it was produced and taken on record.

24. This is, therefore, a serious lapse on the part of the Trial Court.

25. Secondly when the dying declaration came on record, there is no explanation, nothing on record to show as to how the same came to be exhibited as Exhibit 40. The record does not show that any notice was given by the accused. When the dying declaration came on record admittedly the accused were relying upon the same because it was to their benefit. Accused did not examine any witness to prove the dying declaration because when they were questioned in their so called further statement under Section 313 of Criminal Procedure Code whether they want to examine any defence witness, their reply was in the negative. Therefore, Special Judicial Magistrate who recorded the dying declaration was not examined by the accused. The doctor who gave endorsement about the mental condition of the deceased Mina was also not examined. The police officer to whom the dying declaration should have been handed over by the Special Judicial Magistrate was not examined or if the dying declaration was with the Special Judicial Magistrate throughout from the date of recording till its production in Court, nobody was there to examine these facts. Nobody was examined to prove the thumb impression of the deceased on the dying declaration of the deceased nor any notice was given by the accused to the prosecution under Section 294 of the Cr.P.C. to admit the document. Section 294 provides "that where any document is filed before any Court by the prosecution or the accused, the particulars of every such document shall be included in the list and the prosecution and the accused.....shall be called upon to admit or deny the genuineness of such document". Sub-section (2) provides "that the said list as may be prescribed" and Sub-section (3) provides "that where the genuineness of any document is not disputed such document may be read in evidence without proof of the signature of the person to whom it purports to be signed". Proviso to Section 294 provides "that the Court may in its discretion require such signature to be proved".

26. Therefore, it will be clear that when the dying declaration came on record, it was obligatory and necessary for the accused to examine the Special Judicial Magistrate, the doctor and/or the police officer to prove the contents of the dying declaration as well as thumb impression of the deceased Mina. Examining of the doctor was necessary to prove the endorsement about the mental condition of Mina before and after the dying declaration. Admittedly this was not done by the defence or by the accused nor the defence or accused gave any notice under Section 294 of the Cr. P.C. to the prosecution to admit the genuineness of the document and no opportunity was given by the Trial Court in that regard. Without following any of these mandatory legal provisions the dying declaration was marked as Exhibit 40 on the same day and read in evidence, relied upon and the accused acquitted.

27. On the other hand Trial Court observed in para 11 of its judgment that:

"The. prosecution did not produce the document as its evidence though it was bound to do so". Regarding exhibiting of the document the Trial Court in the same para has stated : "Since the accused sought production of this document and since it is in the custody of the prosecution, there was no difficulty in exhibiting this document and admitting the same In evidence". It is surprising to note that without clarifying anything in the order of Exhibit 39 or in the roznama as to from whose custody document came to be produced, and without following any procedure or taking any caution in that regard, how the trial Judge came to the conclusion that the document was in the custody of the prosecution and, therefore, it could be exhibited easily without following any legal provisions in that regard. Further the Court has observed in para 11 : "In fact, it is the evidence of the prosecution, and normally the prosecution ought to have produced this evidence. In fact, the prosecution tried to suppress and withhold this document". These observations are also unjustified and uncalled for because the Judge himself committed grave mistake of not following the procedure and taking a document on record without clarifying as to from whose custody it was being produced or tendered. The Court has accepted the dying declaration and as such in the same para observed : "If Ex. 40 is thus taken to be the piece of evidence, that negatives the case of the prosecution that Mina committed suicide".

28. The matter does not end here as is urged by Mr. Singhal. The original case papers of Mina were called from the Civil Hospital, Nashik and they were produced by the doctor of the said hospital. Production of these papers was necessary because on the dying declaration Exhibit 40 there is an endorsement of doctor in the beginning of the dying declaration as well as in the end and the endorsement in the beginning is to the following effect:

"Date 28.4.86 at 9.05 a.m. Patient is fully conscious and in condition to speak properly and give her statement properly."

An endorsement at the end is as under:

"28.4.86 at 9.40 a.m. Pt. is fully conscious and in condition to speak properly and give her statement properly."

Signed by the same doctor.

29. According to Mr. Singhal, this entire dying declaration is fabricated and forged to further benefit of the accused. Some of the circumstances pointed out by him have been discussed by us as above regarding the production of the dying declaration and the order passed therein. Further it was pointed out by Mr. Singhal that this doctor who gave an endorsement is Dr. Narayan Manohar Pawar who was examined as P.W. 5 and he has stated in his evidence that on 28.4.1986 at 1 p.m. the dead body of Mina Kamalakar Bhavsar of Yeola was brought to Civil Hospital, Nashik for P.M. Examination and he and Dr. Doshi conducted the post mortem from 1.30 to 2.30 p.m. Mr. Singhal contended that this doctor has not stated in his evidence that he was attached to the burns ward where Mina was kept on 28.4.1986 and record does not show that Dr. Narayan Pawar, P.W. 5 was so attached to burns ward or with ,the casualty ward and had any duty to examine about Mina about her mental condition when the Special Judicial Magistrate allegedly recorded her dying declaration. Number of circumstances pointing to the forgery and fabrication of the dying declaration including the certificate of the doctor are pointed out in this regard and some of them are :

(i) that the original medical case papers are tampered and page No. 3 is inserted therein subsequently in order to substantiate this fitness certificate given by Dr. Pawar;

(ii) Dr. Pawar was not attached to bums ward or casualty ward and had no business to give any certificate about the mental condition of Mina;

(iii) condition of Mina was extremely serious at the time when the alleged dying declaration was recorded;

(iv) that Mina died at 10.10 a.m. when her dying declaration is alleged to have been recorded between 9.10 a.m. to 9.45 a.m.;

(v) Mina was having 94% of burns and was not at all in a position to give any statement;

(vi) that when P.W. 5 Dr. Narayan Pawar was examined on 25.11.1986 by the Trial Court the dying declaration Exhibit 40 was not on record, there was nothing on record to suggest that any dying declaration of Mina was recorded by the police. Even then the question was put to Dr. Pawar in the cross-examination by the Advocate of the accused and Dr. Patil admitted "that he was requested to examine Mina at 9.05 a.m. to find out whether she was in a position to make the statement, he then examined her and certified that she was fully conscious and in a state to make a statement properly". Thereafter her statement was recorded but he was not present. Same question is put to P.W. 7 Ramesh Manohar Patil in the cross-examination on 25.11.1986 when the dying declaration Exhibit 40 was not in record at all and P.W. 7 admitted "Mina has given dying declaration before the Special Judicial Magistrate, Nashik, I have read it and therein she has not involved any of the accused".

30. We find strong force in the contention of Mr. Singhal and all his objections about the dying declaration being forged and fabricated.

31. Admittedly on 25.11.1986 when P.W.7 and P.W. 5 were examined, dying declaration was not before the Court. Dr. Narayan Pawar was not confronted with any dying declaration. No witness has stated about the dying declaration of Mina but even then in anticipation of the dying declaration being filed in future, both P.W. 5 and P.W. 7 were questioned in cross-examination and they admitted that Mina gave a dying declaration.

32. Secondly the time of recording of the dying declaration is shown in Exhibit 40 as between 9.05 to 9.35 a.m. The time is written by Special Judicial Magistrate, Nashik Mr. P.S. Bawiskar. Original medical case papers show that when Mina was examined by doctor at 8.00 a.m. doctor noted 'urine not passed' and when she was admitted at 4.50 a.m. doctor has noted "inform seriousness of the patient to relatives". Further it was noted oxygen elasation SOS meaning thereby she was on oxygen right from the time she was admitted. The exact words used by Doctor are "02 inhalation". Therefore, if the condition of Mina was so critical at the time of admission and at 8 O'clock she had not passed urine and was on oxygen or was likely to be given oxygen any time then certifying by Dr. Pawar on 28-4-1986 that Mina was fully conscious and in a condition to speak properly and give her statement properly at 9.05 a.m. and at 9.45 a.m., is highly improbable and suspicious.

33. Not only Dr. Pawar has given endorsement on Exhibit 40 but on the medical case papers also he has given his endorsement. The original case papers are running from 1-7 pages. On the first page history is given in the form and noting dated 28.4.1986 recorded at 4.50 a.m., on the third page is the noting regarding 28.4.1986 at 10 a.m. and then at 10.10 noting about her health, on page No. 5 there is noting of Mina at 8 a.m. on 28.4.1986 that urine not passed. However, Dr. Pawar gave his note on 2nd page on 28.4.1986 at 9.05 a.m. about the fitness of mental condition of Mina, neither the earlier noting nor the subsequent noting are in the handwriting of Dr. Pawar. In his evidence also he has nowhere stated that he was attached to burns ward or casualty ward or emergency ward. He has not stated who requested him to examine Mina and how he was authorised to deal with the patient. He came to be examined as prosecution witness because he has performed post mortem of Mina but inspite of that he gave admission in favour of the accused in the cross-examination that he examind Mina and found her fit to give statement and that he examined her.

34. All these circumstances i.e. the manner in which Exhibit 40 came on record, roznama, original medical case papers, putting questions to doctor and P.W. 7, in the cross-examination with reference to the dying declaration, when dying declaration was not before the Court at all, getting their admission in favour of the accused, critical condition of Mina right from the stage of admission and her immediate death at 10.10 a.m. and giving of fitness certificate by Dr. Pawar (P.W. 5) when he was not attached nor concerned with the burns ward, casualty ward or emergency ward. Whatever that may be are the circumstances that justify the submissions of Mr. Singhal that the dying declaration Exhibit 40 is forged and fabricated so also endorsement of the doctor thereupon. Non-explanation by the Court as to from whose custody the dying declaration came on record is also a serious factor which throw serious doubt about the genuineness of the dying declaration.

35. Mr. Singhal also argued that even on facts this dying declaration has to be considered as a forged and fabricated one and, therefore, totally false one. As per this dying declaration, Exhibit 40, Mina alleged to have stated to Answer No. 4 that she woke up at 1 a.m. night for drinking water, at that time she gave dash to the chimney i.e. a small lantern. It was kept on tin. The said chimney fell on her person. She was, therefore, burn and at that time she was wearing nylon saree (chimney is a small lamp which burns on a kerosene with glass around it and a glass to hold kerosene and holder of tin by which the chimney attached to wall or kept on anything so required, it contains kerosene maximum upto 50 or 70 milliliters), In order to substantiate its contention Mr. Singhal pointed out that spot panchanama of the house was recorded by the police in the morning of the same day i.e. on 28.4.1986 between 8.25 a.m. to 9 a.m. and in the spot panchanama it is noted that the house and electric light fittings had electric lights. There are two rooms, one of 6' x 12' and the other kitchen of the same size and measurement and there is no mention in the panchanama of any chimney. There is no cross-examination of the witnesses to the effect that they had not prepared the panchanama according to the spot or that they had made false entries or deliberately avoided to make mention about the chimney. To the contrary, this panchanama was proved by witness Prabhakar P.W. 4. There is no suggestion about the chimney. Only one question was asked wherein the witness admitted that there was a lantern but its glass was not broken. It needs to be clarified that lantern is much big in shape and size than chimney. It will, therefore, be clear that the panchanama so far as it does not mention the finding of any chimney is concerned has gone unchallenged.

36. We find considerable force in the contention of Mr. Singhal that the dying declaration Exhibit 40 is belied by the panchanama as chimney was not found. To the contrary what is found in the room where the incident has taken place is the saree, petticoat, blouse, brassier. Burnt pieces of all these clothes were found and all were smelling of kerosene. There was a can of 4 liters which was also smelling of kerosene and it was empty and one match box having 3-4 match sticks and one burnt match stick was found on the ground.

37. The panchanama therefore, belies dying declaration and lends strong support to the contention of Mr. Singhal that it is a forged and fabricated dying declaration. All the clothes which Mina was wearing at the time and the burnt pieces which were found as stated above were smelling of kerosene shows that kerosene was poured upon her. If chimney was there and Mina had fell down and the glass container containing 50 to 70 milli-litres kerosene was spread, it cannot spread over all the clothes. Further finding of one burnt match stick falsifies the dying declaration totally and completely.

38. In view of the aforesaid facts, it is clear that reliance placed by the Trial Court on the dying declaration of Mina is wholly unjust, illegal and improper. The said dying declaration, Exhibit 40 should not have been relied upon and no benefit of the same should have been given to the accused. The finding of the Trial Court in that regard are, therefore, perverse and are required to be quashed.

39. So far as the case on merits is concerned, it was contended by Mr. Singhal that prosecution has succeeded in proving its case under Sections 306 and 498-A read with 34 of I.P.C. beyond reasonable doubt and order of acquittal is totally wrong and it has to be set aside. He also contended that on other counts the judgment of the Trial Court is perverse. Mina died on 28.4.1986 soon after at 10 O'clock after she was admitted in the hospital. She was married to the accused Kamalakar on 27.4.1982. She died within 7 years of her marriage and since the dying declaration has to be totally disregarded as fabricated document and since panchanama shows that kerosene was used, it has to be held that Mina committed suicide. Since the accused are charged under Section 306 it has to be seen whether there is evidence for abetment of the suicide.

40. The admitted facts in that regard are that Mina had filed proceedings under Section 125 of Criminal Procedure Code against husband on 12.10.1983 and the same came to be decided in her favour on 6.3.1985. Filing of maintenance proceedings clearly show that Mina was not satisfied with the treatment given to her by her husband. The judgment of the Magistrate under Section 125 also forms part of the record and in the said judgment the Magistrate who decided her application has given a specific finding. Copy of the judgment is forming part of the paper book it is at Exhibit 13. It is an admitted fact that the accused did not challenge the judgment by filing appeal. The following four points out of six are held by the Magistrate in the affirmative. They are :

(1) Whether Mina proves ill-treatment to her on the part of the opponent ? Affirmative

(2) Does she prove neglect ion and refusal to maintain her on the part of the opponent ? Affirmative

(3) Whether she is ready to maintain herself ? and

(4) Whether she is entitled to maintenance ? Both in Affirmative

The date of the order of judgment as stated above is March, 1985.

41. The Trial Court has taken note of this judgment and the Magistrate has observed in paragraph 12 of the judgment that the reasons and findings therein are stated to be not relevant in the present case. The Trial Court also accepted that there was a settlement between the parties about the past and that whether whatever ill-treatment or cruelty was there was condoned and matrimonial offence was washed away. About this the Trial Court has further given its finding in paragraph 13 as under:

"Even accepting the submissions of Mr. Pawar, APP for moment that circumstances, of Mina going to her maternal aunt and complaining about ill-treatment just after 8-10 days, her going to parents and complaining to the same effect, her stay in the house for 6-7 months just after marriage, her finding in feeable condition in the house of P.W. 3 Radhikabai and complaint made at that time, filing of maintenance application and the decision there in based on the ground of ill-treatment, would indicate some kind of cruelty, yet as submitted by Mr. Abhyankar, all that episode had come to an end on 16.2.1986 when Mina went to stay with accused."

Further the Trial Court has observed in the same para :

"However, just thereafter on 16.2.1986, Mina was taken to the house of accused and this would go to show that there must have been settlement of the disputes between the parties."

The Trial Court further gave finding :

"As rightly submitted by Mr. Abhyankar, therefore, if cruelty is assumed on the basis of the circumstances enumerated above, that must have been condoned and no longer existed after 16th February, 1986."

All these findings are absolutely perverse. There is no evidence at all to show that either Mina or her parents had condoned earlier instances of cruelty, placing reliance upon certain letters to which we will refer subsequently by the Trial Court was wholly unjustified. Therefore, in this background of the matter further finding of the Trial Court that:

"If the possibility of ill-treatment after 16.2.1986 is thus ruled out, there remains no cause for Mina to commit suicide and that the letters relied upon by the accused and brought in evidence negatived the possibility of suicide."

42. So far as not finding of lantern or chimney in the house as per the panchanama is concerned, the Trial Court has given very strong reasoning in paragraph 14 again while considering the submission of APP. In this regard the Trial Court has held that submissions made by the APP do not arise at all because existence of chimney is not the case or the defence of the accused but that is the case of the Mina stated by Mina in dying declaration, The Trial Court has stated :

"If anything is to be disbelieved from the circumstances that no lantern was found, that would be the dying declaration."

About clothes smelling of kerosene, the Trial Court has stated those clothes were not forwarded to the Chemical Analyser. These reasonings are totally devoid of any merit and they arc perverse. If factual position on record falsify the dying declaration, then the Court would have rejected the dying declaration and if the clothes smelling of kerosene, namely saree, blouse, petticoat, brassier etc. were not sent to the Chemical Analyser, the Court should have taken the I.O to task.

43. About the smell of kerosene to all the clothes of Mina, namely saree, blouse, petticoat and brassier, the Trial Court held in paragraph 14 that :

"It is equally possible that kerosene might have spread on the clothes and perhaps that might be giving the smell of kerosene."

It pains us to note that the Judge who conducted the trial or before whom the trial proceeded was knowing very well about the quantity of kerosene in chimney cannot be more that 50 to 70 milli-litres and if chimney fell and kerosene spread it can almost spread to some negligible part of the saree and petticoat touching the ground and the blouse cannot smell of kerosene but even this aspect appears to have been twisted by the Trial Court to the benefit of the accused.

44. Mina's maternal aunt Vimlabai is an important witness for the prosecution. She is examined as P,W. 2. She stays at Yeola where the accused are staying. She has arranged the marriage of Mina with the accused Kamalakar. She has slated that after 8-10 days of marriage Mina came to see her and told her that her mother-in-law, sister-in-law and husband were ill-treating her on the ground that she was black in complexion, and that she was short of hearing. 7-8 days thereafter P.W. 1 Subhash came to her house and asked that if Mina had come to her. He also staled that he has also received a telegram from accused No. 1 two months before the incident. According to this witness mother of Mina had brought Mina and left her in the house of the accused. There is no cross-examination of this witness by accused Nos. 2 to 5 and only one question was asked by accused No. 1. in cross-examination and that if the witness had not herself seen ill-treatment to Mina.

45. Next witness is P.W. 3 Radhikabai Sarode. This witness has staled that 2-3 months after the marriage of Mina she came to her house at about 8.15 a.m. and told her that her husband, mother-in-law and sister-in-law had beaten her previous night and she would commit suicide if she was required to go back. This thing was conveyed to Vimlabai by

P.W. 3 Radhikabai. He said that he will send telegram to the father of Mina. At about 2 p.m. accused No. 1 Kamalakar went to the house of P.W. 3 and enquired about Mina but since Mina started crying P.W. 3 told accused No. 1 that Mina was not in their house. In the same manner accused No. 3 went to the house of this witness to enquire about Mina but she was also told that Mina was not in the house. In the night the accused No. 2 went to the house of P.W. 3 and saw Mina. He asked Mina to come with him. Mina got frightened and started weeping, then the husband of P.W. 3 intervened and asked accused No. 2 to allow Mina to stay in the night. Next morning P.W. 1 Subhash, brother of Mina came and took Mina away. There is no cross-examination worth consideration at all of this witness.

46. Evidence of cruel treatment to Mina is given by Subhash P.W. 1. He corroborates P.W. 2 and further stated that after a month of the marriage, his father went and brought Mina back and at that time Mina told the same story and also further stated that she was not allowed conjugal happiness by accused No. 1. Mina stayed with her parents for about 6-7 months thereafter. Thereafter mother of Mina took Mina to her husband's house but at that time accused No. 3 threw rubbish on them and told them accused No. 1 would keep mistress instead of keeping Mina and she would not be even allowed to wash clothes of accused No. 1, therefore, Mina and her mother returned back. Then accused No. 1 approached Subhash in January 1983 and asked for Rs. 2,000-3,000 as hand loan for starting new business and put the condition that if the amount is paid then he will take Mina for cohabitation. That this incident took place in January, 1983. Subhash has stated that in January, 1983 he received a telegram from accused No. 1 as to whether Mina had come to their house. He went to Yeola along with Bhaskarrao Chavan, contacted maternal aunt P.W. 2, Mina was not there. Then he went to the house of the accused and learnt that Mina was in the house of Sarode Talathi. At that time he found that Mina was lying in semi-conscious condition in the house of Sarode. She was found to have been put to starvation and froth was coming from her mouth and Mina told her that she was being harassed severely and that she should be taken away. Mina narrated her ghast (?) and told that sisters of Kamalakar accused Nos. 4 and 5 were saying that Kamalakar accused No. 1 should perform second marriage. Mina also told that she was severely beaten. Mina was taken to Bhagirathseth - a prominent panch of Yeola. He advised them to take back Mina to Ahmednagar.

47. Thereafter according to P.W. 1 Subhash, Mina filed maintenance proceedings and he has also stated that accused did not pay maintenance inspite of the order of the Court. Further according to her at the time of Rathasapatami festival of 1986 mother of accused No. 1 came to their house and offered to take away Mina. Mina was however not sent. Thereafter accused No. 3 alone came and asked them to send Mina because of some Satyanarayan Puja but Mina was not sent with her. On 16.2.1986 the mother of Mina took Mina to the house of the accused but she found that there was no S.alyanarayan Puja. Soon thereafter i.e. on 28.4.1986 Subhash learnt that Mina was burnt and was admitted in the hospital. He then lodged complaint to the police.

48. The aforesaid evidence of P.Ws. 1,2 and 3 was challenged by the Counsel for the accused on the ground that Mina stayed in Sarode's house. Her narration of torture to P.W. 3 Radhikabai does not say a word. Further it was argued that from the letters on record it is clear that all these instances of cruelty were forgiven and were the thing of the past since Mina came to reside with the accused from 18-2-1986.

49. At this juncture therefore, it is necessary to consider the letters with which P.W. 1 was confronted. Those letters are Exhibits 17,18,19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24 and 25. They are dated respectively.

Exhibit 17 is letter dated 16.8.1982,

Exhibit 18 is letter dated 11.9.1985,

Exhibit 19 is letter dated Nil,

Exhibit 20 is letter dated 5.2.1986,

Exhibit 21 is letter dated 19.2.1986,

Exhibit 22 is letter dated 25.2.1986,

Exhibit 23 is letter dated 7.3.1986,

Exhibit 24 is letter dated 6.4.1986, and

Exhibit 25 is letter dated Nil.

Out of these letters Mina has written Exhibit 20 letter dated 5.2.1986 and Exhibit 25 letter - no date. It will be seen that out of all these letters only two are written by Mina. In none of these two letters Mina has ever expressed that she has pardoned the accused for ill-treatment given to her or that forgiven them. In Exhibit 25 Mina has shown her willingness to go to the house of the accused because of Puja. Year and month of Puja cannot be ascertained from this letter. Exhibit 20 is a general letter not throwing any light upon the relationship of the parties. Exhibit 19 is a letter without any date and does not reflect upon the relationship of the husband and the wife or between Mina and her in-laws. Exhibit 21 is written by Tarabai. It is written to Aunty. It is about safe arrival of Mina and her mother at Yeola. This letter appears to have been written by accused No. 3. Exhibit 22 is addressed to accused Nos. 2 and 3. It also does not speak anything about the relationship between Mina and her in-laws or the husband. Exhibit 23 is addressed to accused Nos. 2 and 3. It is dated 7.4.1986 and it is about informing Mina's well-being. Exhibit 24 is written by Subhash to accused No. 1 and Mina. It is dated 6.4.1986. It is also a letter general in nature. However, Counsel for the accused pointed out from this letter that Subhash P.W. 1 has written that Mina should presume family of her husband to be her own family and she should serve them as far as possible and it should be her duty as a wife. Exhibit 25 is written by Mina as stated earlier.

50. It will, therefore, be clear that in none of her two letters, Mina has ever forgiven accused or has stated that she is ready to join the company of the accused by forgiving the past nor in the other letters particularly those written from her parents or brother, there is no mention that his past ill-treatment was to be pardoned or forgiven. The Trial Court has however drawn totally wrong and perverse inference on the basis of these letters to the effect that these letters show that Mina has forgiven the accused and the ill-treatment given to her was and cannot be taken into consideration for the purpose of this case.

51. What emerges from the evidence of P.Ws. 1, 2 and 3 that Mina was subjected to mental and physical torture and ill-treatment because of her black complexion, because of the allegation that she was short of hearing. She was brutally beaten and assaulted, made to starve and she was brought back to home by the accused inspite of the maintenance order and inspite of his failure to pay the maintenance on the false pretext of Satyanarayan Puja, the accused have therefore, strong motive to further torture and harass Mina. About Satyanarayan Puja, Question No. 23 was put to the accused in their statement under Section 313 and they admitted that Mina's mother brought Mina to their house but there was no Satyanarayan Puja. The accused have admitted that Mina was brought by her mother but due to some difficulty Puja could not be performed. This lends support to the submission of Mr. Singhal that it was on the pretext of Satyanarayan Puja that Mina was brought in the house.

52. In this regard it was strenuously urged by Counsel for the accused that from evidence of the prosecution, it cannot be said that any ill-treatment was meted out to Mina, in the near proximity of her death. It was further contended that old and stale instances of ill-treatment could not be taken as abetment to suicide. We do not find any substance in this argument because the fact of ill-treatment is amply proved by the prosecution, the fact of an order in favour of Mina is also proved, the fact of non-payment of maintenance is also proved and the pretext of Satyanarayan Puja that was given by the accused for taking back Mina is also proved to be false. It is, therefore, clear that while maintenance order was hanging on their head accused took Mina to their home. There was no intervention of any elderly members for this, nor any compromise after the maintenance order between Mina and husband, nor Mina had forgiven or pardoned the accused for the ill-treatment given to her.

53. Writing letter by Subhash asking Mina to accept the house of the accused as her own is a general advice given by any man to his wife or to daughter. It cannot be inferred from such advice or from Mina's letter that she had decided to treat the chapter of ill-treatment as closed for ever. There is, therefore, strong and sufficient evidence to connect the accused with the offence charged, namely Sections 498-A and 306 of the I.P.C.

54. Mr. Singhal also further contended that when Mina was having 94% burns and a valuable period of 4-5 hours was wasted in the Government Hospital, Nashik, it was impossible that Mina would be in a fit physical and mental condition to give any declaration. He further contended that conduct of the accused No. 1 husband or of the other accused was also suspicious inasmuch as there were only two rooms to the house. The accused and Mina were sleeping in kitchen and others were sleeping in the front room. If Mina had accidentally caught fire as alleged in the dying declaration there would have been an attempt on the part of the accused No. 1 or other accused to extinguish the fire and it would not have been difficult to extinguish the fire because it was caught (if story of dying declaration is accepted) by breaking of chimney and catching fire by the lower portion of the petticoat and saree. Further according to Mr. Singhal record shows that none of the accused made any attempts to extinguish the fire. There are no burn injuries to anyone including the accused No. 1 and this is, therefore, a strong circumstance which has to be taken into consideration. We also find considerable force in this argument. Even in their statement under Section 313 of the Cr. P. C. none of the accused have given any explanation as to what they were doing at the house and why no attempts to extinguish the fire were made.

55. In the aforesaid background and for the reasons stated above, this appeal is to be allowed and accused are required to be convicted.

56. The learned APP, Mr. Singhal also submitted that this Court should take action against all those who were concerned for fabrication of the dying declaration including the Judge of the Trial Court, we have given consideration to the submissions regarding this prayer. The only contention of the respondents-accused through their Advocate was that there is no forgery or fabrication. We are disagreeing with the same and rejecting the same. There is more than sufficient material on record to hold that the dying declaration, Exhibit 40 is forged and fabricated in all respects. So far as taking action is concerned it is true that the Trial Court committed serious lapses in that regard, however, it cannot be held that the Trial Court was a party to the conspiracy of fabrication of the dying declaration, it could be a bonafide mistake on the part of the Trial Court.

57. However so far as Additional Public Prosecutor (Mr. B.A. Pawar), defence lawyer (Mr. B.J.Abhyankar), Dr. NarayanManohar Pawar Civil Hospital, Nashik, PS1 Ramesh' Manobar Patil - Yeola City Police Station is concerned, action is required to be taken and also against Mr. P.V. Baviskar, Special Judicial Magistrate.

58. Section 340 of the Criminal Procedure Code has laid down procedure in that regard and as per it if in the opinion of the Court it is expedient in the interest of justice to make an enquiry into any offence referred to in Sub-clause (b) of Sub-section (1) of Section 195 in relation to a proceeding in that Court or in respect of document produced or given in evidence the Court may as per Sub-section (2). These powers can be exercised by any Court to which the Sessions Court is subordinate and, therefore, those powers can be exercised by this Court. Section 340 empowers the Court to record the finding and to make a complaint in writing. However before filing such complaint it would be appropriate that the persons concerned above named are given notice to show cause. Section 344 of the Cr. P. C. gives summary powers to the Court to try offenders for giving false evidence. According to us this is a fit case to take action under Section 344 after giving reasonable opportunity to those offenders to show cause and, therefore, we are passing the following order. However, a note of appreciation for the commendable job done by the learned APP, Mr. Pravin Singhal in this case in going through all the papers thoroughly, unearthing the truth is required to be made before parting with this case.

SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Hon'ble Judge(s) : S. C. AGRAWAL AND S. SAGHIR AHMAD, JJ.

Re: M.P. Dwivedi; Contempt Petition 10 Of 1996, Writ Petition (Civil) 239 Of 1993

A) Constitution of India – Handcuffing – Contempt of court by S.P. and Magistrate – The accused were handicuffed by the police – When produced before Magistrate he did not perform his duty by directing removal of handcuff – This is clear violation of supreme court's direction nisarissued by Supreme court to S.P. , concerned police and Magistrate – While filing reply S.P. did not taken stern action against erring police officials – it means that S.P. has approved the illegality committed by the police and therefore he is guilty of contempt of Supreme Court – Strong disapproval of Supreme Court is directed to be placed in personal file of S.P. and all erring police officers.

B) Contempt by Magistrate – Contemnor B.K. Nigam was J.M.F.C. – When prisoners were produced before him he did not take any action against handcuffing by police – The magistrate simply passed order calling explanation by police – Held, the Magistrate was bound to take immediate actions for removal of handcuffs – Magistrate was completely insensitive about the serious violation of the human rights – This is a serious lapse on the part of judicial officer – The Magistrate was expected to ensure that the basic human rights of the citizens are not violated – The Magistrate should also expected to take action against police officer for bringing the accused to the court in handcuffs and taking them away in the handcuffs without his authorization – Keeping in view that contemnor Magistrate is a young judicial officer Supreme court did not imposed punishment on him – However recorded strong disapproval of his conduct and directed that a note of this disapproval shall be kept in his personal file.

C) Handcuffing – Authorisation – The Police and jail authorities on their own have no authority to direct the handcuffing of any inmate from jail to court and elsewhere.

D) Handcuffing – Permission by Magistrate – The Magistrate should have concrete proof regarding proneness of the prisoner to violence, his tendency to escape- he being so dangerous/ desperate and finding that no other practical way of forbidding escape is available then only Magistrate can grant permission for handcuffing – It could not be done in a routine way but in rarest of rare case.

JUDGEMENT

(1.) These contempt proceedings have been initiated in pursuance of the order dated 4/06/1993 passed in Writ Petition No. 239 of 1993, Khedut Mazdoor Chetna Sangath v. State of Madhya Pradesh. The said order dated 4/06/1993 for issuing notices for contempt against the contemners was passed in the following circumstances.

(2.) Khedut Mazdoor Chetna Sangath (hereinafter referred to as the 'Sangath'), is a registered trade union of tribals of Alirajpur Tehsil in District Jhabua of the State of Madhya Pradesh. It started functioning in October 1985 and has been working for the upliftment of the tribals in the region. It is opposed to the construction of Sardar Sarovar Dam on river Narmada on the ground that the construction of the Dam would be prejudicial to the interest of the tribals residing in the catchment area of the Dam since their lands would be submerged in water and they would be displaced. The members of the Sangath have been agitating against the construction of the Dam. In connection with the said agitation, the members of the Sangath were arrested by the police authorities on various dates in connection with criminal cases registered against them and after their arrest, the arrested persons were handcuffed while being taken from jail to the Court and from Court to jail or from jail/Court to civil hospital and back to jail/Court. On some occasions they were paraded while handcuffed through the streets of Alirajpur. In the writ petition, mention is made of the following incidents of handcuffing of under trial prisoners:

"17-11-92--Khemla Aujanharia was handcuffed and paraded in Alirajpur.

19-11-92

2-2-93--Revji was handcuffed and paraded in Alirajpur

3-2-93--Ravi Hemadri, Amit Bhatnagar, Khajan, Tilia, Vesta, Bava Kaharia,Bamita were handcuffed and taken from the police station to hospital and back, and from Court to the police station and back.

3-2-93--Ram Singh and Vanjara were handcuffed and taken from Alirajpur Police Station to Sondwa Police Station.

5-2-93--Ram Singh and Vanjara were handcuffed and paraded on the streets of Alirajpur.

7-2-93--Rahul Ram and Ashvini Chhatre were handcuffed and paraded on the streets of Alirapur and were taken in a truck to Sondwa.

8-2-93--All the above, as well as Rahul Ram and Ashwini Chhatre were handcuffed and taken into the hospital. Handcuffs were removed during the examination. They were handcuffed again and taken to Court and then to police station, then back to Court.

8-2-93--Motla and Punja were taken through Alirajpur in handcuffs.

24-2-93--Rahul Banerjee was handcuffed and paraded in Alirajpur.

25-2-93--Rahul Banerjee produced before the Magistrate in handcuffs (Noted by JMFC, Alirajpur in his order)".

(3.) The fact about the handcuffing of these aforementioned persons on the dates referred to above was not disputed by the respondents in the said writ petition. Having regard to the decision of the Court in Prem Shankar Shukla v. Delhi Administration (1980) 3 SCR 855 : (AIR 1980 SC 1535); Sunil Gupta v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (1990) 3 SCC 119, and Baradakanta Mishra, Ex-Commr. of Endowments v. Bhimsen Dixit, (1973) 2 SCR 495 : (AIR 1972 SC 2466), this Court was satisfied that a prima facie case is made out for taking action for contempt of Court against persons responsible for the aforementioned acts of handcuffing of under trial prisoners. A direction was, therefore, given by order dated 4/06/1993 to issue notice to the contemners to show cause why they should not be punished for having committed contempt of this Court.

(4.) In response to the said notice, affidavits have been filed by the aforementioned contemners. Before we deal with the explanation offered by the contemners, it would be necessary to refer to the provisions of Regulation 465 of the M.P. Police Regulations which prescribes as follows:

"465. Hand-cuffs when Used - Hand cuffs shall be used only if they are necessary.

The following instructions regulate their use - Instructions regarding the use of Handcuffs:

1) When a prisoner has to be taken in custody from a Court to a Jail or vice-versa, the Magistrate or the Jail Officer should give a direction in writing to the Commander of the escort as to whether the prisoner should or should not be hand-cuffed and the escort Commander shall obey that direction, provided that if the direction is not to hand-cuff the prisoner and at any time thereafter the escort Commander has reason to consider it necessary to hand-cuff the prisoner, he should do so, not withstanding such directions.

(2) (i) and (ii) x x x x

(3) The escort Commander must, without fail, ask for and obtain orders in writing from the Magistrate or the Jail Officer in regard to hand-cuffing of the prisoners committed to his custody before taking over the prisoner from the Court or Jail. Any neglect of these instructions must be dealt with most severely.

(4 to 6) x x x x x

A List of prisoners who must be hand - cuffed :-

1. Every person arrested by a police Officer or remanded to custody by a Magistrate on a charge of having committed one of the following offences shall be hand-cuffed unless by reasons of age, sex or infirmity he can easily and securely be kept in custody without hand-cuff :-

a) Offences relating to coin, sections 231 to 254 Indian Penal Code.
b) Murder and culpable homicide, Sections 302 to 304 Indian Penal Code.
c) Attempt to commit murder and culpable homicide, Sections 307 and 308 Indian Penal Code.
d) Being a Thug, Section 311 Indian Penal Code.
e) Robbery, Section 311 Indian Penal code.
f) Dacoity, Section 395 Indian Penal Code and all sections relating to decoity.
g) Any other offences against property, if the offender has been previously convicted of any offence against property or has been ordered to find security for good behaviour.
h) Persons accused of an offence punishable under Section 148 Indian Penal Code".

(5.) In the present case, it is not disputed that provisions of sub-clause (3) Regulation 465 of the M.P. Police Regulations were not complied with inasmuch as no orders were obtained from the concerned Magistrate/Jail Officer by the concerned police personnel with regard to handcuffing of the prisoners while taking them to and from Court or Jail. Handcuffing of the under trial prisoners has been sought to be justified on the ground that (i) the accused persons attempted to resist the arrest and made attempts to run away; and (ii) a large number of supporters of the Sangath had reached Alirajpur on knowing about the arrest of accused persons and there was strong possibility that they would have attempted to free the accused persons from the police custody. It has also been stated that two cases involving offences under Section 307 Indian Penal Code had been registered against the accused persons.

(6.) In Prem Shankar Shukla v. Delhi Administration (1980(3) SCR 855 : AIR 1980 SC 1535) (supra) this Court has considered the matter of handcuffing of prisoners under trial as well as convicts in the context of the provisions contained in Punjab Police Rules, 1934, Krishna Iyer J., speaking for himself and Chinnappa Reddy J., has observed that "handcuffing is prima facie inhuman and, therefore, unreasonable, is over-harsh and at the first flush, arbitrary".

(7.) Examining the justification offered by the State for this mode of restraint, the learned Judge has said:

"Surely, the competing claims of securing the prisoners from fleeing and protecting his personality from barbarity have to be harmonised. To prevent the escape of an under-trial is in public interest, reasonable, just and cannot, by itself, be castigated. But to bind a man hand-and-foot, fetter his limbs with hoops of steel, shuffle him along in the streets and stand him for hours in the Courts is to torture him, defile his dignity, vulgarise society and foul the soul of our constitutional culture".

"Insurance against escape does not compulsorily require hand-cuffing. There are other measures whereby an escort can keep safe custody of a detenu without the indignity and cruelty implicit in hand-cuffs or other iron contraptions. Indeed, binding together either the hands or the feet or both has not merely a preventive impact, but also a punitive hurtfulness. Manacles are mayhem on the human person and inflict humiliation on the bearer. The Encyclopedia Britannica, states " handcuffs and fetters are instruments of securing the hands or feet of prisoners under arrest or as a means of punishment". The three components of irons forced on the human person must be distinctly understood. Firstly to handcuff is to hoop harshly. Further, to handcuff is to punish humiliatingly and to vulgarise the viewers also. Iron straps are insult and pain writ large, animalising victim and keeper. Since there are other ways of ensuring security, it can be laid down as a rule that handcuffs or other fetters shall not be forced on the person of an under trial prisoner ordinarily".

"The only circumstances which validates incapacitation by irons - an extreme measure - is that otherwise there is no other reasonable way of preventing his escape, in the given circumstances. Securing the prisoner being a necessity of judicial trial, the State must take steps in this behalf. But even here, the policeman's easy assumption or any scary apprehension or subjective satisfaction of likely escape if fetters are not fitted on the prisoners is not enough. The heavy deprivation of personal liberty must be justifiable as reasonable restriction in the circumstances. Ignominy, "inhumanity and affliction, implicit in chains and shackles are permissible, as not unreasonable, only if every other less cruel means are fraught with risks beyond availability. So it is that to be consistent with Arts. 14 and 19 handcuffs must be the last refuge, not the routine regimen. If a few more guards will suffice, then no handcuffs. If a close watch by armed policemen will do, then no handcuffs. If alternative measures may be provided, then no iron bondage. This is the legal norm. .

"The conclusion flowing from these considerations is that there must first be well-grounded basis for drawing a strong inference that the prisoner is likely to jump jail or break out of custody or play the vanishing trick. The belief in this behalf must be based on antecedents which must be recorded and proneness to violence must be authentic. Vague surmises or general averments that the undertrial is a crook or desperado, rowdy or maniac, cannot suffice. In short save in rare cases or concrete proof readily available of the dangerousness of the prisoner in transit - the onus of proof of which is on him who puts the person under irons - the police escort will be committing personal assault or may hem if he handcuffs or fetters his charge".

"Merely because the offence is serious, the inference of escape proneness or desperate character does not follow. Many other conditions mentioned in the Police Manual are totally incongruous with what we have stated above and must fall as unlawful. Tangible testimony, documentary or other, or desperate behaviour, geared to making good his escape, alone will be a valid ground for handcuffing and fettering, and even this may be avoided by increasing the strength of the escorts or taking the prisoners in well protected vans".

"The nature of the accusation is not the criterion. The clear and present danger of escape breaking out of the police control is the determinent. And for this there must be clear material, not glib assumption, record of reasons and judicial oversight and summary hearing and direction by the Court where the victim is produced".

(8.) In Sunil Gupta v. State of Madhya Pradesh (1990 (3) SCC 119) (supra) this Court, while dealing with Regulation 465 of the M.P. Police Regulations, has observed.

"This Court on several occasions has made weightly pronouncements decrying and several condemning the conduct of the escort police in handcuffing the prisoners without any justification. In spite of it, it is very unfortunate that the Courts have to repeat and re-repeat its disapproval of unjustifiable handcuffing". (p.128)

"One should not lose sight of the fact that when a person is remanded by a judicial order by a competent Court, that person comes within the judicial custody of the Court. Therefore, the taking of a person from a prison to the Court or back from Court to the prison by the escort party is only under the judicial orders of the Court. Therefore, even if extreme circumstances necessitate the escort party to bind the prisoners in fetters, the escort party should record the reasons for doing so in writing and intimate the Court so that the Court considering the circumstances either approve or disapprove the action of the escort party and issue necessary directions.

(9.) That was a case where social activists demanding the appointment of regular teaches in schools located in tribal hamlets had been arrested and were taken to the Court by handcuffing them and this Court expressed its strong disapproval of the said action.

(10.) The position in law with regard to handcuffing of prisoners - convicted or undertrial - has been reiterated in the recent decision in Citizens For Democracy v. State of Assam (1995) 3 SCC 743, wherein it has been held :

"We declare, direct and lay down as a rule that handcuffs or other fetters shall not be forced on a prisoner - convicted or undertrial - while lodged in a jail anywhere in the country or while transporting or in transit from one jail to another or from jail to Court and back. The police and the jail authorities, on their own, shall have no authority to direct the handcuffing of any inmate of a jail in the country or during transport from one jail to another or from jail to Court and back.

Where the police or the jail authorities have well-grounded basis for drawing a strong inference that a particular prisoner is likely to jump jail or break out of the custody then the said prisoner be produced before the Magistrate concerned and a prayer for permission to handcuff the prisoner be made before the said Magistrate. Save in rare cases of concrete proof regarding proneness of the prisoner to violence, his tendency to escape, he being so dangerous/desperate and the finding that no other practical way of forbidding escape is available, the Magistrate may grant permission to handcuff the prisoner.

In all the cases where a person arrested by police is produced before the Magistrate and remanded to judicial or non judicial - is given by the Magistrate the person concerned shall not be handcuffed unless special orders in that respect are obtained from the Magistrate at the time of the grant of the remand.

When the police arrest a person in execution of a warrant of arrest obtained from a Magistrate, the person so arrested shall not be handcuffed unless the police has also obtained orders from the Magistrate for the handcuffing of the person to be so arrested.

Where a person is arrested by the police without warrant the police officer concerned may if he is satisfied, on the basis of the guidelines given by us in para above, that it is necessary to handcuff such a person, he may do so till the time he is taken to the police station and thereafter his production before the Magistrate, further use of fetters thereafter can only be under the orders of the Magistrate as already indicated by us.

We direct all ranks of police and the prison authorities to meticulously obey the above-mentioned directions. Any violation of any of the directions issued by us by any rank of police in the country or member of the jail establishment shall be summarily punishable under the Contempt of Courts Act apart from other penal consequences under law".

(11.) The justification for handcuffing that has been offered about the under trial prisoners trying to escape from custody does not stand scrutiny because the accused were social activists who were agitating for the protection of the rights of the tribals and at the time of argument on the bail application of the accused persons, bail was not opposed by the prosecution on the ground of seriousness of the charges against them or the likelihood of their absconding. It is not disputed that no orders were obtained from the concerned Magistrate with regard to handcuffing of the prisoners before taking them to Court from jail and to the jail from the Court. The handcuffing of the members of the Sangath who were under trial prisoners was, therefore, not justified and was in clear dis-regard of the law laid down by this Court in the decisions referred to above. The question that arises is whether the said actions of the contemners in handcuffing the prisoners constitute contempt of this Court. We will first take up the case of the five police personnel who are contemners Nos. 1 to 5.

(12.) Contemner No.1, M.P. Dwivedi, was Superintendent of Police of District Jhabwa at the relevant time. He was not personally present in Aliraipur when the incidents of handcuffing had taken place. He is, therefore, not directly involved in the said incidents. In the order dated 4/06/1993, it is stated that notice was being issued to him for the reason that, being over all in charge of the police administration in the distinct, he was responsible to ensure strict compliance with the directions given by this Court in the matter of handcuffing of under trial prisoners by police personnel under his charge and instead of taking action against the police personnel responsible for such violation, he appears to have approved the said action. In the affidavit filed by the contemner in response to the said notice, he has stated that there was no complaint about handcuffing from any member of the public or from the affected persons and he had not come across even any press report about handcuffing and that only on 26/02/1993 Dharmendra Choudhary, SDO (Police) had informed him about the handcuffings and thereafter he visited Sondwa Police Station on 5/03/1993 and inquired into the incidents and the police case diaries in respect of the incidents of handcuffings which showed that the accused persons had attempted to resist the arrest and made attempts to run away and a large number of supporters of the Sangath had reached Aliraipur on knowing the arrest of the accused persons and there was a strong possibility that they would have attempted to free the accused persons from the police custody. The contemner has further stated that he called a meeting of all gazetted police officer and station officers on March 23, 1993 and gave strict directions to the effect that handcuffing was to be resorted to only in rare and exceptional situations and they should try to get written orders from concerned Magistrate in accordance with the provisions of M. P. Police Regulations. He has further stated that he was not aware of the decision of this Court in Prem Shankar Shukla v. Delhi Administration (AIR 1980, SC 1535) (supra), but even without knowledge of the said decision and on the basis of M.P. Police Regulations, he had indicated to his subordinate officers that handcuffing was not to be resorted to except in exceptional cases and that this happens to be in accordance with the exceptions given by the judgment of this Court in that case.

(13.) Contemner No.2, Dharmendra Choudhary, was posted as SDO (Police) at Aliraipur at the relevant time. In the affidavit filed on behalf of the petitioners in writ petition No.239 of 1993 it has been claimed that he was personally present at the time of handcuffing of the undertrial prisoners on 3/02/1993. In his affidavit filed in response to the notice issued to him, the contemner has denied this allegation and has stated that his office at Alirajpur is situate far away from Police Station Alirajpur and on 3/02/1993 he was busy with supervision of investigation in heinous offences (Crime No.6/93 of P.S. Sorwa and Crime No.8/93 of P.S. Chandpur both under Section 307 Indian Penal Code). He has also stated that he has no precise knowledge of law laid down by this Court in the matter of handcuffing and that the subordinate officers involved in the incidents had given him to understand that they had handcuffed the undertrials prisoners due to prevailing circumstances at the relevant time as recorded in the police case diary and also on the basis of Paragraph 465 of M.P. Police Regulations. According to him, the one lapse that appears on their part was that the respective officials did not take the written orders from the learned judicial Magistrate and they acted as per guidelines mentioned in Police Regulations Paragraph 465 of M.P. Police Regulations under title 'the list of prisoners who must be handcuffed.

(14.) Contemner No. 3, S.S. Ansari, was posted as Town Inspector at Police Station Alirajpur at the relevant time. He was admittedly present at the time the incidents of handcuffing took place during the period from 2/02/1993 to Febr 25/02/1993. In his affidavit filed in response to the notice, the contemner has stated that he himself did not participate in the said incidents and that it was the Investigating Officer who was responsible for the handcuffing of the accused persons. He has sought to justify the handcuffing on the basis of the entries in the police case diary by the Investigating Officer that the accused persons were likely to escape.

(15.) Contemner No.4, S.D. Bhargava, was posted as Sub-Inspector of Police/S.O. at Police Station Sondwa, at the relevant time. In his affidavit filed in response to the notice, the contemner has not disputed the incidents of handcuffing during the period from 2/02/1993 to Febr 25/02/1993. He has sought to justify the said action on the basis of Paragraph 465 of M.P. Police Regulations. He has also stated that the said incidents of handcuffings took place due to error of judgment and due to ignorance of law laid by this Court in Prem Shankar Shukla v. Delhi Administration (AIR 1980 SC 1535) (supra).

(16.) Contemner No.5 Natvar Singh, was posted as Head Constable at Police Station Sondwa at the relevant time. He has been placed under suspension in connection with the incidents of handcuffings which took place on 8/02/1993. In his affidavit filed in response to the notice, the contemner has stated that he had no knowledge of law laid down by this Court with regard to use of handcuffs prior to the institution of these proceedings in this Court and no departmental circular had been issued containing the necessary directions in that regard.

(17.) As laid down by this Court "Contempt of Court is disobedience to the Court, by acting in opposition to the authority. Justice and dignity thereof. It signifies in wilful disregard or disobedience of the Court's order; it also signifies such conduct as tends to bring the authority of the Court and the administration of law into disrepute. Wilful disregard or disobedience of the Court's order presupposes an awareness of the order that has been disregarded or disobeyed. In view of the affidavits filed by contemners Nos. 1 to 5 stating that they were not aware of law laid down by this Court in Prem Shankar Shukla

v. Delhi Administration (AIR 1980 SC 1535) (supra) and Sunil Gupta v. State of Madhya Pradesh (1990 (3) SCC 119) (supra), we refrain from taking action to punish them for contempt of this Court.

(18.) The handcuffing of the undertrial prisoners cannot, however, be justified even under the provisions of Regulation 465 of the M.P. Police Regulations inasmuch as the said regulation requires an express authorisation from the Magistrate/Jail Officer for the purpose of taking him to Court from jail and from jail to Court. Admittedly, no such authorisation was obtained in this case. As regards the role and responsibility of contemners Nos. 1 to 5 in these actions involving handcuffing of under trial prisoners, it may be stated that contemners Nos. 3 to 5 were directly involved in the said incidents of handcuffing because the handcuffing was done under their directions or in their presence. Contemners Nos. 1 and 2, even though not directly involved in the said incidents since they were not present, must be held responsible for having not taken adequate steps to prevent such actions and even after the said actions came to their knowledge, they condoned the same by not taking stern action against persons found responsible for this illegality. We, therefore, record our disapproval of the conduct of all the five contemners Nos. 1 to 5 in this regard and direct that a note regarding the disapproval of their conduct by this Court be placed in the personal file of all of them.

(19.) We are also constrained to say that though nearly 15 years have elapsed since this Court gave its decision in Prem Shankar Shukla (AIR 1980 SC 1535) (supra) no steps have been taken by the concerned authorities in the State of Madhya Pradesh to amend the M.P. Police Regulations so as to bring them in accord with the law laid down by this Court in that case. Nor has any circular been issued laying down the guidelines in the matter of handcuffing of prisoners in the light of the decision of this Court in Prem Shankar Shukla (supra). The Chief Secretary to the Government of Madhya Pradesh is, therefore, directed to ensure that suitable steps are taken to amend the M.P. Police Regulations in the light of the law laid down by this Court in Prem Shankar Shukla (AIR 1980 SC 1535) (supra) and proper guidelines are issued for the guidance of the police personnel in this regard. The Law Department and the Police Department of the Government of Madhya Pradesh shall take steps to ensure that the law laid down by this Court in the matter of protection of human rights of citizens as against actions by the police is brought to the notice of all Superintendents of Police in the District soon after the decision is given, by issuing necessary circulars in that regard and the responsibility is placed on the Superintendent of Police to ensure compliance with the said circulars by the subordinate police personnel under his charge.

(20.) Contemner No.6, Vinod Kumar, was posted as SDM at Alirajpur at the relevant time. It has been alleged on behalf of the petitioners in the Writ Petition that the incident of handcuffing on 18/02/1993 took place in his presence. In his affidavit filed in response to the notice, the contemner has, however, stated that he was on earned leave from December 31, 199 2/02/1993 and on 18/11/1992 he was on medical leave. In view of the said statement, no responsibility attaches to the contemner in respect of the incident of handcuffing on 18/11/1992 and notice issued against him is discharged.

(21.) Contemner No.7, B. K. Nigam, was posted as Judicial Magistrate First Class, Alirajpur, at the relevant time. In the order dated 4/06/1993 it is stated that the under trial prisoners were produced before him but he did take any action against handcuffing of those prisoners by the police. In the said order, reference has also been made to the rejoinder affidavit of Dr. Amita Baviskar filed on 1/06/1993 wherein it is stated that the contemner was apprised about the decisions of this Court and he is reported to have stated that".... the Supreme Court decision has no application there and that the police has the right to transport the accused as they want, with or without handcuffs". The contemner has filed two affidavits in response to the notice. In the affidavit dated 31/07/1993, he has denied having made the statement as alleged by Dr. Amita Baviskar in her affidavit dated 1/06/1993 regarding handcuffing of the undertrial prisoners and has said that on 8/02/1993, two complaints were made before him by accused Ravi and Rahul Narsimha Ram about the handcuffing of prisoners and that on these applications he had passed orders on the same day for in charge of Police Station Alirajpur to submit explanation and that besides these two complaints, no complaint whatsoever, orally or in writing, was made to him regarding handcuffing of the under trial prisoners. In support of his aforesaid submission, the contemner has also filed the affidavits of Shri Betulla Khan and Shri Girdhari Lal Vani, Advocates who were representing the accused persons before him in those cases and who had appeared in his Court on 8/02/1993. In these affidavits the deponents have stated that no decision of this was cited before the contemner on that date regarding handcuffing of undertrial prisoners and that the contemner did not say that the decision of this Court has no application and the police has the right to transport the accused as they want, with or without handcuffs. In the second affidavit dated 18/09/1993 the contemner has tendered his unconditional and unqualified apology for the lapse on his part that when under trial prisoners in Crime No.11/93, 12/93, 17/93 of Police Station Sondwa, who were agitating against the construction of Sardar Sarovar, were produced in handcuffs in his Court, immediate action was not taken by him 'for the removal of their handcuffs and against the escort party for bringing them in Court or taking them away from Court in handcuffs. The contemner has submitted that he is a young judicial officer and that the lapse was not intentional.

(22.) We have carefully considered the two affidavits of the contemner as well as the affidavits of Shri Betulla Khan and Shri Girdhari Lal Vani, Advocates We would assume that on 8/02/1993 the contemner did not make the statement about the judgments of this Court having no application there and the police having the right to transport the accused as they want, with or without handcuffs. But the contemner, being a judicial officer is expected to be aware of law laid down by this Court in Prem Shankar Shukla v. Delhi Administration (AIR 1980 SC 1535) (supra) and Sunil Gupta v.State of Madhya Pradesh (1990 (3) SCC 119) (supra). Prem Shankar Shukla v. Delhi Administration (supra) was decided in 1980, nearly 13 years earlier. In his affidavit also he does not say that he was not aware of the said decisions. Apart from that, there were provisions in Regulations 465 of the M.P. Police Regulations prescribing the conditions in which undertrial prisoners could be handcuffed and they contain the requirement regarding authorisation for the same by the Magistrate. It appears that the contemner was completely insensitive about the serious violations of the human rights of the undertrial prisoners in the matter of their handcuffing in as much as when the prisoners were produced before him in Court in handcuffs, he did not think it necessary to take any action for the removal of handcuffs or against the escort party for bringing them to the Court in handcuffs and taking them away in the handcuffs without his authorisation. This is a serious lapse on the part of the contemner in the discharge of his duties as a judicial officer who is expected to ensure that the basic human rights of the citizens are not violated. Keeping in view that the contemner is a young judicial officer, we refrain from imposing punishment on him. We, however, record our strong disapproval of his conduct and direct that a note of this disapproval by this Court shall be kept in the personal file of the contemner. We also feel that judicial officers should be made aware from time to time of the law laid down by this Court and the High Court, more especially in connection with protection of basic human rights of the people and, for that purpose, short refresher courses may be conducted at regular intervals so that judicial officers are made aware about the developments in the law in the field.

(23.) In the result, the contempt notices issued against the contemners are discharged subject to the directions regarding disapproval of the conduct of contemners Nos. 1 to 5 and 7 and directions regarding placing the note of the said disapproval in the personal files of all of them. The contempt proceedings will stand disposed of accordingly. A copy of this order be sent to the Chief Secretary to the Government of Madhya Pradesh and the Registrar, Madhya Pradesh High Court.

Order accordingly.

D] Conspiracy – I.P.C. Sec. 120 (B) – Apex court made it clear that an inference of conspiracy has to be drawn on the basis of circumstantial evidence only because it becomes difficult to get direct evidence on such issue – The offence can only be proved largely from the inference drawn from acts or illegal ommission committed by them in furtherance of a common design – Once such a conspiracy is proved, act of one conspirator becomes the act of the others – A Co-conspirator who joins subsequently and commits overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy must also be held liable – Proceeding against accused cannot be quashed.

E] Jurisdiction – Continuing offence – Held – Where complainants allegations are of stinking magnitude and the authority which ought to have redressed it have closed its eyes and not even trid to find out the real offender and the clues for illegal arrest and harassment are not enquired then he can not be let at the mercy of such law enforcing agencies who adopted an entirely indifferent attitude – Legal maxim Necessiatas sub lege Non contineture Quia Qua Quad Alias Non Est Lictum Necessitas facit Lictum, Means necessity is not restrained by laws – Since what otherwise is not lawful necessity makes it lawful – Proceeding proper cannot be quashed.

Judgement

ORDER :- The cases, deal with here, have chequered history as there have been several rounds of litigation before the Hon'ble Gujarat High Court and the Hon'ble Apex Court in different forms at different stages and also before this Court in bail matters.

2. The instant criminal miscellaneous applications have been filed for quashing the complaint (C.R.No. 403/1996) registered at the Police Station, Kotwali, Pali, as also the further investigation pertaining to offences under Sections 120-B, 195, 196, 342, 347, 357, 368, 388, 458, 482, I.P.C. and Sections 17, 58(1) (2) of the Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985 (hereinafter called the "N. D. P. S. Act").

3. The facts and circumstances giving rise to these cases are that on 17-10-96, one Mr. Sumer Singh Rajpurohit, a Practising Advocate, filed a complaint in the Court of the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Pali, alleging that shop No. 6 in Vardhaman Market, Pali, owned by Smt. Amri Bai w/o Shri Jayant Raj had been taken on rent by one Mohan Lal in partnership of Narsingh Rajpurohit, brother of the complainant, for commercial purpose in the name and style of "Deepak Textiles" and part of the same was also used by the complainant as Office for his legal practice. The marriage of one Muli Devi, daughter of Rajmal, brother of accused-Phootar Mal and uncle of applicant-Raman Lal, had been arranged with Mr. Jayant Raj but she died before marriage could take place. Mr. Jayant Raj subsequently got married with landlady Smt. Amri Bai. The family of applicant-Raman Lal maintained very good and cordial relationship with the family of Mr. Jayant Raj and started treating Amri Bai in place of Muli Devi. Applicant-Raman Lal attended the marriage of her son on 27-4-96 along with other family members. Accused No. 1 Phootar Mal, uncle of applicant-Raman Lal, had been Power of Attorney-holder in respect of the said shop and a civil suit was pending in which the plaint had been signed and verified by him. Phootar Mal realised that so long complainant was with the tenants, it would be difficult to get their eviction from the shop. Accused persons conspired to get the said shop vacated and in furtherance thereof, they filed C. R. No. 216/1996 dated 30-4-96 under the provisions of Section 17 of the N.D.P.S. Act, alleging that complainant-Sumer Singh stayed in Room No. 305 in Hotel Lajwanti, Palanpur on 29-4-96; signed the hotel register and his address was shown as resident of Vardhaman Market, Pali, and opium was recovered from the said room after receiving the phone call from an informer from Pali. However, before the recovery could be made, complainant had left the hotel leaving behind the opium. In the night intervening 2/3 May, 1996, the other accused, viz. Mr. I. B. Vyas and Mr. Yagyanik, along with other police officials, came to the complainant's house at about midnight and arrested him. He was handcuffed, manhandled, gagged, and taken away forcibly in a jeep bearing fake registration number. Mr. Goma Ram, P.S.I., Kotwali,

Police Station, Pali, who was on patrolling duty, intercepted the vehicle of Gujarat Police heading towards Palanpur and brought them to the Police Station, Kotwali, Pali, wherein Gujarat Police Officials disclosed their identity and informed that the complainant was wanted in a case under the N.D.P.S. Act. After giving arrest memo in connection with a case under the N.D.P.S. Act, they took away the complainant. By that time, family members and fellow Advocates also reached the Kotwali and some of them also went to Palanpur along with them. In Palanpur, he was produced before Mr. Sanjeev R. Bhatt, the then Distt. Superintendent of Police, Palanpur, co-accused, who enquired from the complainant about the said shop and asked him to vacate the same immediately otherwise he would be involved in a case of recovery of four kilograms of opium. The involvement of the applicant-Ram Lal, who at the relevant time, was the Additional Judge of the Gujarat High Court and is, now, Principal Judge of City Civil and Sessions Court at Ahmedabad, was also shown alleging that being interested in getting the shop vacated, he had hatched the conspiracy and was having telephonic talks with co-accused Phootar Mal and Mr. Sanjeev R. Bhatt and some of his phone-calls had also been taped. One Narain Singh Kharabara played a role of mediator and after taking all care and precautions, an agreement was signed between co-accused Phootar Mal and Mohan Lal-the original tenant-partner of the complainant's brother for vacating the shop and an understanding was given that on releasing the said shop, complainant would be released and the case against him under the N.D.P.S. Act would be dropped. Raghunath Singh, real brother of the complainant also talked to applicant-Raman Lal and the latter assured him that the complainant would be released and a report under Section 169, Cr. P.C. would be submitted after vacating the said shop. For reaching the agreement in writing, complainant's real brother Raghunath Singh purchased the stamp paper for Rs. 5/- and co-accused Phootar Mal got the agreement typed and it was got signed by Mohan Lal through Raghunath Singh on 5-5-96. The report under Section 169, Cr. P.C. was submitted on 6-5-96 itself, the same was accepted by the learned Special Judge, Palanpur on 14-5-1996 and the complainant was released. Keys of the said shop were handed over to co-accused Phootar Mal on 15-5-96. In sum and substance, according to the complainant, a conspiracy was hatched by the accused persons to get the shop vacated and in order to execute the said plan, the complainant was falsely enropped in a case under the N.D.P.S. Act, arrested, humiliated and on getting the shop vacated, report under Section 169, Cr. P.C. was filed and he was discharged.

4. Along with the complaint, a large number of documents and two audio-cassettes were also submitted. The Chief Judicial Magistrate, Pali passed order dated 16-10-1996 under Section 156 (3), Cr. P.C. for registration of a case under Police Station, Kotwali, with direction that investigation be made by the officer not below the rank of Director General of Police. In spite of said direction, the case was not registered as a revision had been filed by the State of Rajasthan on the ground that the Magistrate cannot pass an order to investigate an offence whatsoever against a Judge of the High Court unless the approval is accorded by the Hon'ble Chief Justice of India. The said revision was subsequently dismissed by the learned Sessions Judge, Pali, vide order dated 15-11-96 with the modification that investigation may be carried out by an officer below the rank of Director General of Police. The case was registered and investigation ensued.

5. District Bar Association, Pali, by way of Public Interest Litigation, filed Writ Petition No. 448 of 1997 before the Hon'ble Supreme Court seeking action against applicant-Raman Lal, pointing out his involvement. However, the said petition was dismissed as withdrawn vide order dated 11-9-1997 with the liberty to approach the Hon'ble Chief Justice of India on administrative side. The Bar Association submitted a representation to the Hon'ble Chief Justice of India on the same day, i.e. on 11-9-1997 requesting His Lordship not to confirm Mr. Raman Lal as Judge of the High Court. State of Gujarat and co-accused I. B. Vyas, Police Inspector, filed Miscellaneous Application Nos. 1302/1997 and 1309/1997 before the Gujarat High Court for quashing the order passed by the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Pali, for investigation. The said applications were rejected by the learned single Judge vide common judgment dated 4-12-1997.

6. The Superintendent of Police (C.I.D.), Jaipur, sent a questionnaire through the Registrar, Gujarat High Court, to applicant-Raman Lal for filling it up and as the applicant did not fill it up and returned the same, rather asked for extension of time, he was informed through the Registrar of the Gujarat High Court to remain present on 30-1-98 at Pali. Applicant was further informed by the Registrar that the Hon'ble Chief Justice of Gujarat High Court had granted permission to the Investigating Officer to interrogate the said applicant at the place and time convenient to the latter. The Investigating Officer further sent a letter to the said applicant through the Registrar of Gujarat High Court to remain present before the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Pali, at the time of filing the charge-sheet on 15-1-98. Instead of appearing before the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Pali, applicant-

Raman Lal and co-accused Sanjeev R. Bhatt filed Special Criminal Applications Nos. 6 and 24 of 1998 before the Gujarat High Court challenging the action of the Authorities/Courts concerned on various grounds including the competence of the Criminal Court at Pali to take cognizance, and the Hon'ble Gujarat High Court, while entertaining their applications, granted interim relief. However, the said applications were rejected by the learned single Judge, vide common judgment and order dated 9-7-98, on the ground that Gujarat High Court had no territorial jurisdiction to entertain the same. Being aggrieved and dissatisfied, applicants therein preferred L.P.A. Nos. 906 and 930/1998 against the said judgment and order. The appeals were also dismissed vide common judgment and order dated 5-10-98. The said applicants filed Special Leave Petition (Cri.) Nos. 4309 and 4375 of 1998 being aggrieved and dissatisfied of the Division Bench judgment of Gujarat High Court dated 5-10-98 and both criminal petitions stood rejected by the Hon'ble Supreme Court vide order dated 15-1-99 in limine.

7. Applicant Raman Lal filed Special Criminal Application against the judgment and order of the learned single Judge dated 4-12-1997, contending that he had not been a party in the said case, even though certain observations/remarks had been made against him, which would adversely affect him. The Division Bench passed an order to the extent that observations made against the said applicant in the judgment dated 4-12-97 should not be used against him and the case is pending before the Gujarat High Court for final decision.

8. The Rajasthan Police filed a challan for various offences including the offence under Sections 17 and 58 (1) and (2) of the N.D.P.S. Act and provisions of the Indian Penal Code against co-accused Phootar Mal before the Special Judge (N.D.P.S.), Jodhpur and the said case stood transferred to the Court of the Special Judge, (N.D.P.S.), Delhi, by virtue of the order dated 3-11-98 passed by the Hon'ble Supreme Court in T.P. (Cri.) No. 38/1998. The investigation is being carried out further in pursuance of the order passed under Section 173 (8), Cr. P.C. Applicant-Raman Lal had also filed T. P. (Cri.) No. 98/1998, along with co-accused Sanjeev R. Bhatt, before the Hon'ble Supreme Court seeking transfer of the case against them outside Rajasthan. However, the Hon'ble Supreme Court passed an order to the effect that as no charge-sheet had been submitted against them, no order could be passed. However, in case charge-sheet is filed before the Court, applicants may renew their prayer for getting the same tried along with Sessions Case No. 19/1997, i.e. the subject-matter of T. P. (Cri.) No. 38/1998.

9. Applicant-Raman Lal filed Special Criminal Application No. 1079 of 1998 on 20-11-98 before the Gujarat High Court challenging the validity of the Gujarat High Court Rules not providing Letters Patent Appeal in criminal cases being discriminatory as the same was limited in civil cases only, and therein he also prayed for transfer of investigation to the Central Bureau of Investigation. Interim relief was granted in favour of the said applicant on concession made by the counsel for the State of Rajasthan and the same is continuing till today, as the same has been extended till further orders and the matter is still pending for final disposal before the Hon'ble Gujarat High Court. The applicants preferred these applications before this Court as they could not succeed in getting any relief from any other Court.

10. It may also be pertinent to mention here that challenging the pendency of these cases, one co-accused I.B. Vyas filed Special Criminal Application No. 680 of 1999 before the Gujarat High Court for transferring the investigation to C.B.I. and vide order dated 13-8-99, an interim order staying all further proceedings in connection with C. R. 403/96 of Police Station, Kotwali, Pali, has been passed and the interim order is still in force. Co-accused Phootar Mal's bail application was rejected by this Court vide order dated 10-7-97 in connection with the same case, against which the Hon'ble Supreme Court also dismissed the S.L.P. (Cri.) No. 2601/97, in limine vide order dated 12-9-97 and he is in jail for more than two years.

11. In addition to the aforesaid legal proceedings, there have also been following petitions on behalf of the police officials involved in this case before the Gujarat High Court :-

(a) Cri. Misc. Appeal No. 5050/97, Sanjeev Bhatt v. State of Gujarat and others, disposed of on 19-9-1997.

(b) Cri. Misc. Appl. No. 6256/97, Sanjeev Bhatt v. State of Gujarat and others, disposed of on 12-11-1997.

(c) Cri. Misc. Appl. No. 7034/97, Sanjeev Bhatt v. State of Gujarat and others, disposed of on 8-12-1997.

(d) Spl. Cri. Appl. No. 926/98, Pravin Bhai v. State of Gujarat and others, dismissed as withdrawn on 21-11-1998.

(e) Spl. Cri. Appl. No. 988/98, Rajendra Yagnik v. State of Gujarat and others, dismissed as withdrawn on 21-11-1998.

(f) Spl. Cri. Appl. No. 982/98, Sanjeev Bhatt v. State of Gujarat and others, dismissed as withdrawn on 10-12-1998.

(g) L.P.A. No. 102/98, Sanjeev R. Bhatt v. State of Gujarat and others - Pending.

12. The case is required to be considered in the aforesaid background.

(A) Quashing of proceedings :-

Legal maxim "Quando Aliquid Mandatur, Mandatur Et Omne Per Quod Per Venitur Ad Illud" - means if anything is commanded, every thing by which it can be accomplished is also commanded. But the inherent power of quashing the criminal proceedings has to be exercised very sparingly and with circumspection and that too in the rarest of rare cases and the Court cannot be justified in embarking upon an enquiry as to the reliability or genuineness or otherwise of allegations made in the F.I.R. or complaint and the extraordinary and inherent powers of Court do not confer an arbitrary jurisdiction on the Court to act according to its whims or caprice. The same can be resorted to for correcting some grave errors that might be committed by the subordinate Courts or where the complainant, at the instance of somebody else wants to settle his score with other party and uses deliberately the machinery of the Court for oblique purpose and the party is likely to be subjected to unnecessary harassment for facing criminal proceedings or where the Court is satisfied that in case the proceedings are not quashed, there will be gross miscarriage of justice. However, the Court, under its inherent powers, can neither intervene at an uncalled for stage nor it can "soft-pedal the course of justice" at a crucial stage of investigation/proceedings. 13. In State of U. P. v. O. P. Sharma, (1996) 7 SCC 705 : (1996 Cri LJ 1878), the Hon'ble Supreme Court has indicated that the High Court should be loath to interfere at the threshold to thwart the prosecution exercising its inherent power under Section 482 of the Code or under Article 226 or 227 of the Constitution of India, as the case may be, and allow the law to take its own course. Similar view had been taken in Pratibha Rani v. Suraj Kumar, AIR 1985 SC 628 : (1985 Cri LJ 817) :

14. In Smt. Nagawwa v. Veeranna Shivalingappa Konjalgi, AIR 1976 SC 1947 : (1976 Cri LJ 1533), the Hon'ble Supreme Court held as under (Para 5) :-

"(1) Where the allegations made in the complaint or the statements of the witnesses recorded in support of the same taken at their face value make out absolutely no case against the accused or the complaint does not disclose the essential ingredients of an offence which is alleged against the accused;

(2) Where the allegations made in the complaint are patently absurd and inherently improbable so that no prudent person can ever reach a conclusion that there is sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused;

(3) Where the discretion exercised by the Magistrate in issuing process is capricious and arbitrary having been based either on no evidence or on materials which are wholly irrelevant or inadmissible; and

(4) Where the complaint suffers from fundamental legal defects, such as, want of sanction, or absence of a complaint by legally competent authority and the like.

The cases mentioned by us are purely illustrative and provide sufficient guidelines to indicate contingencies where the High Court can quash proceedings."

15. In L. V. Jadhav v. Shankarrao Abasaheb Pawar, AIR 1983 SC 1219 : (1983 Cri LJ 1501), the Apex Court held that Courts' power is limited only to examine that the process of law should not be misused to harass a citizen and for that purpose, the High Court has no authority or jurisdiction to go into the matter or examine the correctness of allegations unless the allegations are patently absurd and inherently improbable so that no prudent person can ever reach to such a conclusion and that there is sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused but the Court, at that stage, cannot go into the truth or falsity of the allegations.

16. Similar view has been reiterated in the Nagpur Steel and Alloys Pvt. Ltd. v. P. Radhakrishna, (1997) SCC (Cri) 1073.

17. In Trisuns Chemical Industry v. Rajesh Agarwal, (1999) 8 SCC 686 : (1999 Cri LJ 4325), the Supreme Court placed reliance upon its earlier judgment in Rajesh Bajaj v. State N.C.T. of Delhi, AIR 1999 SC 1216 : (1999 Cri LJ 1833) and observed that the inherent power of the High Court should be limited to very extreme exceptions.

18. In M/s. Medchel Chemicals and Pharma Pvt. Ltd. v. M/s. Biological E. Ltd., (2000) 2 JT (SC) 426 : (2000 Cri LJ 1487), the Apex Court placed reliance upon its earlier judgments, including Dr. Sharma's Nursing Home v. Delhi Administration, (1998) 8 SCC 745, and held that a criminal prosecution can be short-circuited in rarest of rare cases, and even in a case of breach of contract, not only civil remedy is attracted but a person can be held responsible for criminal prosecution and under no circumstance 'civic profile' can out-way the 'criminal outfit.'

19. In State of Haryana v. Ch. Bhajan Lal, AIR 1992 SC 604 : (1992 Cri LJ 527), the Hon'ble Supreme Court laid down the guidelines for exercising the inherent power as under (Para 108) :-

(1) Where the allegations made in the First Information Report or the complaint, even if they are taken at their face value and accepted in their entirety do not prima facie constitute any offence or make out a case against the accused.
(2) to (4) . . . . . .
(5) Where the allegations made in the FIR or complaint are so absurd and inherently improbable on the basis of which no prudent person can even reach a just conclusion that there is sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused.
(6) Where there is an express legal bar engrafted in any of the provisions of the Code or the concerned Act (under which a criminal proceeding is instituted) to the institution and continuance of the proceedings and/or where there is a specific provision in the Code or the concerned Act, providing efficacious redress for the grievance of the aggrieved party.
(7) Where a criminal proceeding is manifestly attended with mala fide and/or where the proceeding is maliciously instituted with an ulterior motive for wreaking vengeance on the accused and with a view to spite him due to private and personal grudge."
20. Similar points have been formulated by the Apex Court in State of West Bengal v. Mohammed Khalid, AIR 1995 SC 785.
21. In the instant case, it has been contended that Clauses 5 and 6 are relevant for our purpose, which speak about absurdity, express legal bar in the Code or the concerned Act either against the institution or continuation of proceedings or providing efficacious redressal. It has been submitted that though after the incident, there had been agitations and various representations had been made to the Constitutional/Statutory Authorities including the National Human Rights, the President of India, Hon'ble the Chief Justice of India, Hon'ble the Chief Justice of High Court of Judicature for Rajasthan, Hon'ble the Chief Minister of Rajasthan, regarding the same incident but no action had ever been taken by any of them. Had there been some truth in the allegations, at least some of those Authorities could have acted and taken note of the grievance of the complaint. On the other hand, Mr. Rathore has submitted that on the representations made to the said Authorities, certain action had been taken and applicant-Raman Lal, the then Judge of the High Court, had been transferred from Gujarat High Court and subsequently was not confirmed as a Judge of the High Court.
22. Be that as it may, this can certainly not be the test to examine the absurdity of the complaint. The Hon'ble Supreme Court has consistently observed that complaint should not be so absurd and improbable that no prudent person can think that on such charges, a person should be prosecuted. Thus, the criteria is not whether on representations the concerned Authorities had acted upon or not, it is the absurdity and improbability of the allegations which require examination. The case of absurdity may be if a complaint is filed by "A" that while he was sitting with his family members outsides his house, his neighbour, who had rivalry with him and at present residing in United States of America, had come by aeroplane, thrown bomb on them and run away. Such an instance can be termed as an absurd and improbable.
23. It has vehemently been submitted on behalf of the applicants that impugned order passed by the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Pali under Section 156 (3), Cr. P. C. is in respect of the complaint under Sections 120-B, 195, 196, 342, 347, 357, 368, 388, 458 and 482, I.P.C. read with Sections 17, 58 (1) and 58 (2) of the N.D.P.S. Act. Section 36-A of the said Act provides that notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Criminal Procedure, all offences under the N.D.P.S. Act shall be triable only by the Special Court constituted for the area in which the offence has been committed. It is only in a case where Special Court has not been constituted, the Sessions Judge shall have the power of trial. Section 58 (1) (b) and (c) provide for a redressal and protection of an innocent person for prosecuting him under the N.D.P.S. Act vexatiously to wreck vengeance and make the same punishable if an Authority concerned involves a person falsely in an offence under the provisions of the N.D.P.S. Act. Section 17 deals with punishment for contravention in relation to prepared opium. Sections 42 and 43 of the Act empowers a person above peon in Government Department and Sepoy in the Police Force to search, seize and arrest without warrant or authorisation. Such person shall be forwarded to the Magistrate, Judicial or executive, and the said Magistrate shall have power of detention for a specific period provided under the Act. The Special Court alone has been conferred competence to deal with the accused under Section 167, Cr. P.C. Clause (d) to Section 36-A empowers the Special Court to take cognizance either on police report under Section 173, Cr. P.C. or upon the complaint made by an officer of the Central Government or State Government authorised in this behalf. Therefore, there is a complete bar for lodging a complaint/information by any citizen as under Section 154, Cr. P.C. an F.I.R. can be lodged. Moreso, no Court other than the Special Court has competence to take cognizance.

24. The submission is that as the allegations against applicant-Raman Lal and police officials had been for hatching a conspiracy to falsely involve complainant-Sumer Singh in a case under the N.D.P.S. Act, the provisions of Section 58 are attracted. The complaint itself has been under the provisions of Sections, 17, 58 (1) and (2) of the N.D.P.S. Act read with other provisions of the Indian Penal Code. The complaint spells out an offence of involving the complainant falsely at Palanpur (Gujarat) in a case under the N.D.P.S. Act. Thus, the Court at Pali did not have competence to take cognizance and, therefore, the impugned order dated 16-10-96 is a nullity for want of jurisdiction. In order to fortify the submission, judgment of the Hon'ble Supreme Court in Raj Kumar Karwal v. Union of India, AIR 1991 SC 45 has been relied upon.

25. Reliance has also been placed on the judgment in Supreme Court Legal Aid Committee Representing Under-trial Prisoners v. Union of India, (1994) 6 JT (SC) 544 : (1994 AIR SCW 5115), wherein the Hon'ble Apex Court considered the scope of Section 36 and has categorically held that after commencement of the N.D.P.S. Act, the cases pending before the Court of Sessions in relation whereto it has not taken cognizance, would have to be transferred to the Special Court on its constitution and once the Special Court is constituted under Section 36, that Court alone would have jurisdiction to try the offences under the N.D.P.S. Act, save and except those in relation whereto the Sessions Court had already taken cognizance. Section 36 provides for constitution of Special Courts and Section 36-A (1) (a) provides that notwithstanding anything contained in the Code, all offences under the Act shall be triable only by the Special Court constituted for an area in which the offence has been committed. On a congest reading of these two provisions, it becomes clear beyond any manner of doubt that the Special Court alone will have jurisdiction and all other Courts exercising jurisdiction prior to constitution of the Special Courts will cease to have jurisdiction. It is clear from this provision that a Special Court may take cognizance of an offence without the accused being committed to it for trial. Section 36-C makes the provisions of the Code applicable to proceedings before the Special Court save as otherwise provided in the Act, The non obstante clause in this provision makes it clear that until a Special Court is constituted under Section 36, the Court of Sessions shall try any offence committed on or after the commencement of the amending Act and no other Court, including the Magistrate's Court will have jurisdiction to try the offences under the Act. The Court further observed as under ;-

"So, from the date of its introduction of the Statute Book, the Magistratial Courts ceased to have jurisdiction or power to try any offence committed under the Act even if the punishment prescribed is three years or less since only the Court of Session is empowered to deal with such cases . . . . . In the Act, a limited power of detention has been given to the Magistrate, maximum for a period of the fifteen days in a case of Judicial Magistrate and of the period of seven days in case of Executive Magistrate. But they have not been given any power of enlarging a detenu on bail or granting remand or extending the period of detention, as for any or all of these purposes the application of the detenu has to be referred to the Special Court. In a case like the instant, where the jurisdiction of the Magistrate's Court has been ousted subject by the statutory provisions, the Magistrarial Court cannot proceed and only the Special Judge is empowered even for ordering of investigation under Section 156, Cr. P.C. and any order passed by the Magistrate is improper."

26. Therefore, it is submitted that it is the Special Court alone which has the competence in all matters, pre-trial as well as during trial. The provisions of Section 36-A ousts the jurisdiction of the Sessions Court and the Court of the Magistrate would cease to have jurisdiction after the constitution of Special Court for the reason that sub-section (1) of Section 36-A, by virtue of non obstante clause, would override the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

27. Before proceeding further, it may be pertinent to clarify that a criminal trial commences with framing of the charges and prior to it, the proceedings can simply be termed as inquiry/investigation. (Vide Emperor v. Khwaja Nazir Ahmed (1945 (46) Cri LJ 413) (supra); Ratilal Bhanji Mithani v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1979 SC 94 : (1979 Cri LJ 41); V. C. Shukla v. State, AIR 1980 SC 962 : (1980 Cri LJ 690); Union of India v. Maj. Gen. Madan Lal Yadav, AIR 1996 SC 1340; and Common Cause, a Registered Society v. Union of India, AIR 1997 SC 1539 : (1997 Cri LJ 195).

28. In A. R. Antuley v. Ramdas Srinivas Nayak, (1984) 2 SCC 500 : (1984 Cri LJ 647), the Constitution Bench of the Hon'ble Supreme Court held that the Special Judge alone is competent to take cognizance of the offences specified in the Prevention of Corruption Act. A similar view has been reiterated after following the said judgment in A. R. Antuley's case in State of Kerala v. Navab Rajendran, 1995 AIHC 2762, by the Kerala High Court, wherein it has been observed as under (Para 6) :-

"Legal position being such, a Magistrate has no power to take cognizance of the offences which a Special Judge is specified to try under the Act. This, in turn would lead to the conclusion that a Magistrate cannot pass an order under Section 156 (3) of the Code in respect of any offence which a Special Judge alone is competent to try. Hence the order impugned cannot be sustained."

29. Similar view has been reiterated by the Allahabad High Court in Mangli Prasad v. Addl. Sessions Judge, 1996 Cri LJ 3596, while dealing with a case under Scheduled Caste and Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, 1989.

30. In Hareendran v. Sarada, (1995) 4 Crimes 399, the Kerala High Court held that a Special Court, constituted under the Special Act, can take cognizance of the offence even in a case where offences under the Penal Code are also included without committal proceedings. The Court observed as under :-

"Section 2 (g) of the Code of Criminal Procedure defines 'inquiry'. 'Inquiry' means every inquiry other than a trial, conducted under the Code by a Magistrate or Court. Merely on the basis of the definition of 'inquiry' under the Cr. P.C., it would not be possible to hold that the inquiry under the Act has to commence in the Court of Magistrate. Section 201 of the Cr. P.C. provides for procedure of Magistrate not competent to take cognizance of the case. If a complaint is made to the Magistrate who is not competent to take cognizance of the offence, he shall, if the complaint is in writing, return it for presentation to the proper Court with an endorsement to that effect. If the complaint is not in writing, direct the complainant to move to the proper Court."

31. In Devarapalli Lakshminarayana Reddy v. V. Narayana Reddy, AIR 1976 SC 1672 : (1976 Cri LJ 1361), the Hon'ble Supreme Court, after placing reliance upon its earlier judgment in Nirmaljeet Singh Hoon v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1972 SC 2639, held as under (Para 16 of 1976 Cri LJ 1361) :-

"The distinction between a police investigation ordered under Section 156 (3) and the one directed under Section 202 has already been mentioned between the new Code; but a rider has been clamped by the first proviso to Section 202 (1) that if it appears to the Magistrate that an offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session has been committed, he shall not make any direction for investigation."

32. In Union of India v. B. N. Ananthapadmanabhiah, AIR 1971 SC 1836 : (1971 Cri LJ 1287), the Hon'ble Supreme Court has held as under (Para 10) :-

"A Magistrate does not exercise jurisdiction throughout the length and breadth of India for purposes of Code of Criminal Procedure or of Prevention of Corruption Act. The Code of Criminal Procedure defines the territorial jurisdiction of Magistrates. It will not be in consonance with the jurisdiction and structure of Courts of Magistrates to allowed an order of investigation to be made by a Magistrate of Delhi for investigation of a case in the State of Assam. The reason is that a Magistrate orders investigation in a case which he has power to inquire into or try." (Emphasis added)*

*(Emphasis not found in Certified copy - Ed.)

33. The provisions of the N.D.P.S. Act inhibits the Authority other than the Special Court even to take action under Section 167, Cr. P.C. as the Act empowers the Executive Magistrate to pass order of detention for seven days and the Judicial Magistrate for 14 days. It has no other competence either to enlarge the detenu on bail or discharge him or extend the period of detention or to pass any order under Section 169, Cr. P.C.

34. By virtue of the provisions of Section 4 of the Code, all the offences under the Indian Penal Code shall be investigated, inquired into and tried and otherwise dealt with according to the provisions of the Code. However, sub-section (2) of Section 4 provides that so far as any offence under any other law is concerned, the same shall be investigated, inquired into, tried or otherwise dealt with according to the same provisions, but subject to any enactment for the time-being in force, regulating the manner or place of investigation, inquiring into, trying or otherwise dealing with such offences. It means, the offence under any other Act can be dealt with by the procedure prescribed under the Code in case there is no procedure prescribed under the said Act.

35. In Directorate of Enforcement v. Deepak Mahajan, AIR 1994 SC 1775 : (1994 Cri LJ 2269), the Hon'ble Supreme Court has held as under (Para 132) :-

"For over-mentioned reasons, we hold that the operation of Section 4 (2) of the Code is straightway attracted to the area of investigation, inquiry and trial of the offences under the Special Laws. . . . . and consequently, Section 167 of the Code can be made applicable during investigation or inquiry of an offence under the Special Acts, also inasmuch as there is no specific provision contrary to that excluding the operation of Section 167."

36. There are various Acts like the Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act, 1987; Essential Commodities Act, 1955; Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988; N.D.P.S. Act, and Scheduled Castes/Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, 1989. All these Acts fall under the category of "Special Acts" and some of the provisions contained therein provide for a Special Forum and Special Procedure. In case the special procedure or special forum is not provided, the provisions of the Cr. P.C. would be attracted. A Full Bench of this Court in Bhura Lal v. State of Rajasthan, 1999 Cri LR (Raj) 418 : (1999 Cri LJ 3552), has considered the provisions of the Scheduled Castes/Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act and observed as under (Para 16) :

"The S.C./S.T. Act does not provide for procedure to try the offences under the Act. It merely creates a special forum without prescribing a special procedure for dealing with or trying such cases. There are analogous enactments, in which not only the special forum but special procedure also has been specifically prescribed."

37. In Ram Swaroop v. State of Rajasthan, (1991) 2 Raj LW 79, a Division Bench of this Court has held that even in a case under N.D.P.S. Act, if a report under Section 173 (2), Cr. P.C. is filed before the Magistrate, he can take cognizance of the offence under Section 190 (b), Cr. P.C.

38. In Alimuddin v. State of Rajasthan, 1991 Cri LR (Raj) 57, a Division Bench of this Court has held as under :-

". . . . . two courses are open to the Investigating Officer, i.e. either to file the challan before the Magistrate who may commit the accused to the said Court for trial and it may also file a challan directly in Special Court and it can directly take cognizance. We are unable to agree with the learned counsel appearing for the petitioner that filing of challan before the Magistrate is totally prohibited because if that was the intention of the Legislature then there was no necessity to use the words 'take cognizance of that offence without the accused being committed to it for trial' in Clause (d) of sub-section (1) of Section 36 of the Act."

In Bhura Lal (1999 Cri LJ 3552) (supra), the Full Bench of this Court replied the reference as under (Para 34) :-

"(i) The cases including offences under S.C./S.T. Act are exclusively triable by a Special Court created under Section 14 of the S.C./S.T. Act.

(ii) . . . . . .

(iii) The Magistrate having jurisdiction over the area in which offences under S.C./S.T. Act are alleged to be committed, empowered to deal with the cases under Section 190 of the Code will also have the jurisdiction to deal with cases during the 'inquiry' i.e. pre-trial stages including exercise of power under Section 156(3) of the Code and thereafter he shall transmit all such cases to the Special Court situated within that jurisdiction."

39. In State of West Bengal v. S. N. Basak, AIR 1963 SC 447 : (1963 (1) Cri LJ 341), the Hon'ble Supreme Court dealt with a case wherein the High Court had held that the statutory powers of investigation given to the police under Chapter XIV of Cr. P.C. were not available in respect of offences triable under the West Bengal Criminal Law Amendment (Special Courts) Act, 1949 and hence the investigation was without jurisdiction. The Hon'ble Supreme Court reversed the said judgment observing as under (Para 3) :-

"The powers of investigation into cognizable offences are contained in Chapter XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Section 154, which is in that Chapter, deals with information in cognizable offence and Section 156 with investigation into such offences and under these sections, police has statutory right to investigate into the circumstances of any alleged cognizable offence without authority from a Magistrate and this statutory power of police to investigate cannot be interfered with by the exercise of power under Section 439 or under the inherent power of the Court under Section 561-A of Criminal Procedure Code."

40. Thus, in such a situation, the order passed by the Magistrate under Section 156 (3) of the Code becomes irrelevant. Moreso, it is settled proposition of law that "social stability and order is required to be regulated by proceeding against the offender as it is an offence against the society as a whole." (Rashmi Kumar v. Mahesh Kumar Bhada, (1997) 2 SCC 397.

41. In a recent judgment, the Hon'ble Apex Court, in Gangula Ashok v. State of Andhra Pradesh, (2000) 2 SCC 504 : (2000 Cri LJ 819), has categorically held that Section 5, Cr. P.C. does not nullify the effect of the provisions of Section 4 (2) of the Code for the reason that later provides that if another enactment contains any provision which is contrary to the provisions of the Code, such other provision will apply. But if there is no contrary provision in the other laws, then provisions of the Code will apply to the matters covered by it.

42. Much has been argued as what constitutes "cognizance." Mr. Raval has placed reliance upon the judgment of the Hon'ble Supreme Court in State of Maharashtra v. Dr. Budhi Kota Subbarao, (1993) 3 SCC 339, where a passing remark has been made that in general sense, cognizance means "taking notice of." Thus, the Court is precluded from entertaining the complaint or taking notice of it, if it is in respect of a public servant, who is accused of an offence alleged to have been committed during discharge of his official duty. In fact, "taking cognizance does not involve any formal action or indeed action of any kind but occurs as soon as a Magistrate, as such, applies his mind to the suspected commission of the offence." Every order passed by the Magistrate at pre-trial stage may not amount to cognizance. Orders passed on an application for bail or remand, are, undoubtedly, judicial orders but it cannot be said that it amounts to taking cognizance or the Court cannot pass such an order without taking cognizance. Mainly, the function of the Court begins when a charge is preferred before it and not until then. (Vide Emperor v. Khwaja Nazir Ahmad (1945 (46) Cri LJ 413) (supra).

43. In R. R. Chari v. State of U. P., AIR 1951 SC 207 : (1951 Cri LJ 775), the Apex Court considered the issue : whether Magistrate has no jurisdiction to issue any process in a complaint case without taking cognizance and the Apex Court held that issuing a warrant at such stage of investigation by the police in cognizable offence is quite different and the stage, at which warrant is asked for, may be merely of investigation and issuing warrant does not necessarily mean that the Court had taken cognizance and, therefore, issued warrant. While explaining the meaning of cognizance, the Court further held that the cognizance should have been taken for the purpose of proceeding in a particular way as indicated in the subsequent provisions of the Chapter, i.e. proceeding under Section 200 and thereafter, and when the Magistrate applies his mind, not for the purpose of proceeding under the subsequent Sections of this Chapter but for taking action of some other kind, e.g. ordering inquiry under Section 156 (3), or issuing a search warrant for the purpose of the investigation he cannot be said to have taken cognizance of the offence. This judgment was reconsidered and approved by the Apex Court in Narayandas Bhagwandas Madhavdas v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1959 SC 1118 : (1959 Cri LJ 1368).

44. In Gopal Das Sindhi v. State of Assam, AIR 1961 SC 986 : (1962 (2) Cri LJ 39), the Apex Court held that the provisions of Section 190 provide that any Magistrate, empowered under Section 190, may order such investigation as above-mentioned, does not mandatorily require that a Magistrate, entertaining a complaint, shall, at once, examine the complainant and the witnesses present, if any, upon oath and the substance of the examination is reduced to writing and the complainant and the witnesses are asked to sign it. The word 'may' in Section 190, does not mean 'must.' The reason is that a complaint disclosing cognizable offences may well justify a Magistrate in sending the complaint under Section 156(3) to the police for investigation. There is no reason why the time of the Magistrate should be wasted when primarily the duty to investigate in cases involving the cognizable offences is with the police. The test as on what stage cognizance is taken, is that it is the stage when the Court satisfies itself whether there is sufficient ground for proceeding. (Vide Chandra Deo Singh v. Prokash Chandra Bose, AIR 1963 SC 1430 : (1963 (2) Cri LJ 397).

45. In Anwar Hussain v. Ajoy Kumar Mukherjee, AIR 1965 SC 1651 : (1965 (2) Cri LJ 686), the Apex Court considered a case where a suit had been filed against a Magistrate for malicious prosecution and for issuing warrant of arrest by him. The Court held that as the Magistrate has not taken the cognizance of an offence against the plaintiff before ordering his arrest and the order had been passed in executive capacity and not in discharge of the judicial functions of the Magistrate, he was not entitled for the protection of the provisions of the Judicial Officer's Protection Act, 1850.

46. In Abhinandan Jha v. Dinesh Mishra, AIR 1968 SC 117 : (1968 Cri LJ 97), the Hon'ble Supreme Court observed that even in a case where final report is submitted by the police, the Magistrate, if agrees with the said report, may accept the same and close the proceedings. But there may be instances where the Magistrate may take a view, on the consideration of final report, that the opinion formed by the police is not based on a full and complete investigation, in which case, the Magistrate will have ample jurisdiction to give directions to the police, under Section 156 (3), to make further investigation. Thus, in case the Magistrate is satisfied, after considering the final report, that there is a scope of further investigation, it will be open to him to decline to accept the final report and direct the police to make further investigation under Section 156(3) and if ultimately the police, after such further investigation, submits a charge-sheet or again submit a final report, depending upon the further investigation made by it, and the Magistrate agrees to the conclusion that the report constituted an offence, he can take cognizance of the offence under Section 190 (1) (b), notwithstanding the contrary opinion of the police expressed in the final report.

47. In Kishun Singh v. State of Bihar, (1993) 2 SCC 16 : (1993 Cri LJ 1700), the Hon'ble Apex Court, placing reliance on its earlier judgment in Jamuna Singh v. Bhadai Sah, AIR 1964 SC 1541, held that when the Magistrate takes notice of the accusations and applies his mind to the allegations made in the complaint or police report and on being satisfied that the allegations, if proved, would constitute an offence, decides to initiate judicial proceedings against the alleged offender he is said to have taken the cognizance of the offence.

48. In Purushottam Jethanand v. State of Kutch, AIR 1954 SC 700 : (1954 Cri LJ 1751), the Hon'ble Apex Court upheld the conviction even on the basis of the cognizance taken by the Magistrate having no jurisdiction.

49. Moreso, cognizance is taken of the offence and there is nothing like taking cognizance of the offender at that stage. (Vide Hareram Satpathy v. Tikaram Agarwal, AIR 1978 SC 1568 : (1978 Cri LJ 1687); and Anil Saran v. State of Bihar, AIR 1996 SC 204 : (1996 Cri LJ 408).

50. Therefore, it is clear that the order passed by the Magistrate to the police to investigate a case under sub-section (3) of Section 156 of the Code does not amount to taking cognizance of an offence and he can take cognizance if the charge-sheet is filed after investigating the matter subsequently. If it is held that issuing a direction to investigate a case under Section 156 (3) amounts to taking cognizance, then what the proceedings when a Magistrate has to apply his mind on submission of the charge-sheet or final report later on will be called. It is settled proposition of law that order passed under Section 156 (3) of the Code by the Magistrate is an administrative order and does not amount to taking cognizance of an offence under Section 190 of the Code, as held by this Court in Kamal Kishore v. Mohan Lal, (1999) 1 WLC 713. Similar view has been reiterated in Dr. Moizuddin v. State of Bihar, (1991) 3 Crimes 769; Ghanshyam v. State of Rajasthan, (1994) 2 Crimes 37; and Madhu Bala v. Suresh Kumar, 1997 Cri LJ 3757 : (AIR 1997 SC 3104).

51. Be that as it may, the grounds taken in this application had been repeatedly taken by applicant-Raman Lal and co-accused Sanjeev R. Bhatt before the Gujarat High Court and also before the Hon'ble Supreme Court in Special Leave Petition (Cri.) Nos. 4309 and 4375 of 1999 as well as in Transfer Petition (Cri.) No. 98/1998 filed by them jointly before the Hon'ble Apex Court. The question of maintainability of these proceedings in view of the provisions of Section 36-A of the N.D.P.S. Act, had specifically been raised in the said Special Leave Petitions which stood dismissed in limine vide order dated 15-1-99. This Court cannot lose sight of the fact that the case of Phootar Mal, against whom the charge-sheet had been filed before the Special Judge (N.D.P.S.), Jodhpur, stood transferred to the Special Judge (N.D.P.S.), Delhi by virtue of the order of the Hon'ble Supreme Court in T. P. (Cri.) No. 38/1998 and this issue had also been agitated therein. There is also further order of the Hon'ble Supreme Court that in case the charge-sheet is filed against the applicants, they may renew their applications for transfer of the case and to get the trial along with Phootar Mal in Delhi Court.

52. In fact, the case as a whole can be transferred from one Court to another and when a case is transferred, it is to be transferred in respect of all the accused and as the matter of Phootar Mal has become final and he is facing trial in a competent Court at Delhi, it is not desirable for this Court to quash the proceedings in respect of the remaining persons named in the complaint. Moreso, the Hon'ble Supreme Court did not consider it proper to interfere with the matter when these issues were agitated before it repeatedly. The Hon'ble Supreme Court also rejected the S.L.P. (Cri.) No. 2607/97, against the rejection of his bail application in the same case. Attempts after attempts before various forums for the same relief amounts to forum shopping as termed by the Hon'ble Supreme Court in Rajiv Bhatia v. Govt. of N.C.T. of Delhi, (1999) 8 SCC 525 : (1999 Cri LJ 4292).

53. Realising the need of the hour, the Parliament has enacted the N.D.P.S. Act with a view to eliminate drug addiction and illegal trafficking in drugs by providing stringent punishment for the production, manufacture, possession and sale of drugs and psychotropic substances. Section 58 safeguards the innocent persons from arrest and search by providing punishment for vexatious entry, search, seizure or arrest as also for giving the false information wilfully and maliciously and so causing an arrest or a search being made under the Act.

54. Mr. Raval, learned Addl. Sol. Gen. appearing for the State of Gujarat in Application No. 108/99, has urged strenuously that cognizance could not have been taken by the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Pali, without obtaining prior sanction of the Gujarat Government as required under Section 197, Cr. P.C.; nor the complaint ought to have been filed at such a belated stage as entertaining the complaint at such a belated stage is not permissible under the provisions of Section 42 of the Police Act, 1861, in respect of Mr. Sanjeev R. Bhatt, who is a member of Indian Police Service and the said provisions provide for the limitation of three months from the date of misconduct/offence, and for other remaining police officials, of Section 161 of Bombay Police Act, 1951, (applicable in Gujarat also) which provides for the limitation of six months and for taking cognizance and for prosecution, two years from the date of offence. It has further been submitted by Mr. Raval that complaint, involving the false implication, could be filed only at Palanpur Court and not otherwise, as required under Section 195, Cr. P.C.

55. The scope of cognizance in strict legal sense has already been explained. Moreso, the issue of sanction under Section 197, Cr. P.C. has been considered by the Courts time and again. The mandate of Section 197, Cr. P.C. is only that when a public servant, not removable from his office save by or with sanction of the Government, is accused of an offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purported to act in the discharge of his official duty, no Court shall take cognizance of such offence except with the previous sanction of the competent authority. The embargo put by that section is in order to save the public servant from harassment in the discharge of official duty and to guard against vexatious proceedings and to secure well considered opinion of the superior authority before a prosecution is launched against him, but this qualified protection is limited to a class of offences. A public servant can only be said to act or purported to act in the discharge of his official duty if his act is such as to lie within the scope of his official duties. The test may well be whether the public servant, if challenged, can reasonably claim that what he does, he does in virtue of his office. Thus, it is not every offence committed by a public servant that requires sanctioned for prosecution under Section 197 (1), Cr. P.C. If the act, complained of, is directly concerned with his official duty so that, if questioned, it could be claimed to have been done by virtue of the office then sanction would be necessary and that would be so irrespective of whether it was, in fact, a proper discharge of duties because that would really be a matter of defence on the merits.

56. Mr. Raval placed reliance upon a large number of judgments of the Apex Court, particularly Virupaxappa Veerappa Kadampur v. State of Mysore, AIR 1963 SC 849 : (1963 (2) Cri LJ 814); Kamalapati Trivedi v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1979 SC 777 : (1979 Cri LJ 679); State of Bihar v. Kamla Prasad Singh, (1998) 5 SCC 690 :(1998 Cri LJ 3601); S. B. Saha v. M. S. Kochar, AIR 1979 SC 1841 : (1979 Cri LJ 1367) and Ram Kumar v. State of Haryana, AIR 1987 SC 735 : (1987 Cri LJ 703), to show that whatever had been done by the police officials was done in good faith and performing their duties. Thus, the Chief Judicial Magistrate ought not have taken cognizance of the offence, by entertaining the complaint.

57. In State of Maharashtra v. Dr. Budhikota Subbarao, (1993 (3) SC 339) (supra), the Apex Court held that use of words "no" and "shall" in Section 197 Cr. P.C. make it abundantly clear that the bar on the exercise of the power of the Court to take cognizance of any offence is absolute and complete. "Very cognizance is barred. That is the complaint cannot be taken notice of." "A Court, therefore, is precluded from entertaining a complaint or taking notice of it or exercise jurisdiction if it is in respect of a public servant who is accused of an offence alleged to have been committed during discharge of his official duty." In State through C.B.I. v. B. L. Verma, (1997) 10 SCC 772, the Hon'ble Supreme Court held that sanction under Section 197 Cr. P.C. is required in case the action alleged against a Government servant has committed it in the purported discharge of his duties and while doing so, he has abused the official position. Similar view had been reiterated by the Apex Court in Pukhraj v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1973 SC 2591 : (1973 Cri LJ 1795).

58. For the sake of argument, if the allegations made in the complaint are taken to be true, it is evident that under the garb of their official duty, the police officials have committed a crime.

59. In Matajog Dobey v. H. C. Bhari, AIR 1956 SC 44 : (1956 Cri LJ 140), the Constitution Bench of the Supreme Court held as under (Para 19) :-

"There must be a reasonable connection between the act and the discharge of official duty; the act must bear such relation to the duty that the accused could lay a reasonable, but not a pretended or fanciful, claim that he did it in the course of performance of his duty."

60. In S. B. Saha (1979 Cri LJ 1367) (supra), the Hon'ble Apex Court placed reliance upon the judgments of the Privy Council in H. B. Gill v. The King, AIR 1948 PC 128 : (49 Cri LJ 503); and Hori Ram v. Emperor, AIR 1939 FC 43 : (1939 (40) Cri LJ 468), and held that there is nothing "in the nature or quality of the act complained of which attaches to or partakes of the official character of the appellants who allegedly did it. Nor could the alleged act of misappropriation or conversion, be reasonably said to be imbued with the colour of the office held by the appellants."

61. Same view has been reiterated in Amrik Singh v. State of Pepsu, AIR 1955 SC 309 : (1955 Cri LJ 1365); Om Prakash Gupta v. State of U. P., AIR 1957 SC 458 : (1957 Cri LJ 575); Baijnath v. State of M.P., AIR 1966 SC 220 : (1966 Cri LJ 179); Prabhakar V. Sinari v. Shanker Anant Verlekar, AIR 1969 SC 686 : (1969 Cri LJ 1057); Bhagwan Prasad Srivastava v. N. P. Mishra, AIR 1970 SC 1661 : (1970 Cri LJ 1401); B. S. Sambhu v. T. S.

Krishnaswami, AIR 1983 SC 64 : (1983 Cri LJ 158) ; K. M. Mathew v. State of Kerala, (1992) 1 SCC 217 : (1992 Cri LJ 3779); State of Maharashtra v. Dr. Buddikota Subbarao, (1993) 3 SCC 71; Director of Inspection and Audit v. C. L. Subramaniam, AIR 1995 SC 866; Suresh Kumar Bhikam Chand Jain v. Pandey Ajay Bhushan, (1998) 1 SCC 205 : (1998 Cri LJ 1242); N. K. Ogle v. Sanwaldas, (1999) 3 SCC 284 : (1999 Cri LJ 2105); and A. K. Singh v. Uttarakhand Jan Morcha, (1999) 4 SCC 476 : (1999 Cri LJ 3500).

62. In Shambhoo Nath Mishra v. State of U. P., AIR 1997 SC 2102 : (1997 Cri LJ 2491), the Hon'ble Supreme Court held as under (para 4) :-

"In such a situation it postulates that the public servant's act is in furtherance of his performance or his official duties. If the act/omission is integral to performance of public duty, the public servant is entitled to the protection under Section 197 (1) Cr. P.C. . . . . .The sanction of the Appropriate Government or Competent Authority would be necessary to protect a public servant from needless harassment or prosecution. The protection of sanction is an assurance to an honest and sincere officer to perform his public duty honestly and to the best of his ability. The threat of prosecution demoralises the honest officer..... However, performance of public duty under colour of public duty cannot be camouflaged to commit crime. Public duty may provide him an opportunity to commit crime. The Court to proceed further in the trial or the inquiry, as the case may be applies its mind and records a finding that the crime and the official duty are not integrally connected..... The official capacity only enables him to fabricate the record or misappropriate the public fund etc. It does not mean that it is integrally connected or inseparably inter-linked with the crime committed in the course of same transaction. .. . ."

(Emphasis added).

63. Therefore, it is settled principle of law that in absence of ex-facie official action alleged in the complaint, the accused can be proceeded against in the criminal trial like any other accused without any requirement for sanction under Section 197 Cr. P.C. or any other analogous provision in other Statute/ Rules. And in view of the above, I am of the considered opinion that the said sanction was not required at all, as there was no connection between the official duty and the offence allegedly committed. More so, no person, in discharge of his official duty, can be permitted to use his official position to commit an offence. In the instant case, there was no inter-relationship between the official duty and the offence committed by the applicant and police officials and, therefore, even by means of imagination, no one can postulate reasonably that the offence was committed by them in performance of their official duty. Moreso, it is only the stage of investigation.

64. In Emperor v. Khawaja Nazir Ahmad, (1945 (46) Cri LJ 413) (supra), the Hon'ble Supreme Court held that the provisions of Section 197 Cr. P.C. are not attracted in a case of inquiry/investigation for the reason that "the position in a time at which a Court is required to take cognizance of a matter, has not yet been reached; ..... and there is a marked distinction in a stage of investigation and prosecution."

65. Mr. Raval has placed much reliance on the provisions of Section 69 of the N.D.P.S. Act, which provide that no such prosecution or legal proceedings shall lie against the officer of the State Government for anything done in good faith or intended to be done under this Act or any Rule or Order made thereunder. The submission has been that this provision puts an embargo on prosecution, therefore, the proceedings are liable to be quashed. The provision is attracted provided the action taken by the officer can be held to have been done in good faith. The expression "good faith" has several sets of meaning, however, in popular sense, it simply means honestly, without fraud, collusion or deceit, really, actually, without pretence and without intent to assist or act in furtherance of a fraudulent or otherwise unlawful scheme. The quality and quantity of honestly requisite for constituting good faith is conditioned by the context and object of the statute in which the term is employed. As per the provisions of Section 3 of the General Clause Act, 1897, a thing shall be deemed to have been done in good faith where it is, in fact, done honestly though might have been done negligently, Section 52 of the Indian Penal Code defines the terms "negatively" that nothing is said to be done or believed in good faith which is done or believed without due care and attention. Therefore, the question of good faith requires consideration with reference to the position of the accused and the circumstances under which he has acted. In insolvency matters, for deciding good faith, the test of honesty is more appropriate than the test of due care and attention. Good faith includes a due inquiry. A person is entitled for excuse for committing an error of judgment only if he exercised due care and attention and his conduct shows that there has been no negligence on his part.

66. Section 14 of the Limitation Act qualifies prosecuting the proceedings in the Court which ultimately is found to have no jurisdiction. The plea of good faith may be negatived on the ground of recklessness, inductive of one on due care and caution. In deed, it does not require logical inflability. In case of defamation, the matter requires care and caution and prudence in the background of the context and the circumstances. (Vide Kailas Sizing Works v. Municipality of Bhivandi and Nizampur, AIR 1969 Bombay 127; Gulabchand Bhundarbhai Soni v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1970 Gujarat 171 : (1970 Cri LJ 1100); N. Subramania Iyer v. Official Receiver, Quilon, AIR 1958 SC 1; Chaman Lal v. State of Punjab, AIR 1970 SC 1372 : (1970 Cri LJ 1266); Brijendra Singh v. State of U. P., AIR 1981 SC 636; Vijay Kumar Rampal v. Diwan Devi, AIR 1985 SC 1669; and Ghasi Ram v. Chait Ram Seni, (1998) 6 SCC 200 : (AIR 1998 SC 2476).

67. Thus, even the quality and quantity of the honesty requisite for constituting good faith has to be examined in the context and object of the statute in which the term is employed, for the reason that it is the cardinal canon of construction that an expression which has no unique, precisely fixed meaning, takes its colour, light and contents from the context. The meaning and scope of the expression "good faith" is to be considered in the light of the scheme of the statute.

68. The N.D.P.S. Act has been enacted to check the social menace of drug trafficking and provides for stringent punishment. Thus, if in the context of the statute, the conduct of the persons involved is examined, as per the allegations in the complaint and record placed by the parties, the action taken by the persons involved cannot be held to be done in good faith if the same be taken to be true on its face value. Therefore, the provisions of Section 69 have no relevancy in the case.

69. Mr. Raval, learned Addl. Sol. Gen., has vehemently submitted that the complaint against Mr. Sanjeev R. Bhatt, who is a member of Indian Police Service, is not maintainable in view of the provisions of Section 42 of the Indian Police Act, 1861, which reads as under :-

"All actions and prosecutions against any person, which may be lawfully brought for anything done or intended to be done under the provisions of this Act, or under the General police powers hereby given, shall be commenced within three months after the act complaint-of shall have been committed and not otherwise. . . . . ."

70. It has been submitted by Mr. Raval that the complaint was barred by limitation provided under the above provisions and being a Special Act, it will override the provisions providing limitation under the Code of Criminal Procedure or any other Act, therefore, the cognizance could not have been taken only on this ground, so far as accused Mr. Sanjeev R. Bhatt is concerned. Undoubtedly, there can be no quarrel with the legal proposition that special provisions will override general provisions. (Vide Secretary of the State v. Hindustan Co-operative Insurance Society Ltd., AIR 1931 PC 149; J. K. Cotton Spinning and Weaving Mills Co. Ltd. v. State of U.P., AIR 1961 SC 1170; Patna Improvement Trust v. Smt. Lakshmi Devi, AIR 1963 SC 1077; Sumer Chand v. Union of India, AIR 1993 SC 2579 : (1993 Cri LJ 3531); and State of Orissa v. Commissioner of Land Records and Settlement, Cuttack, (1998) 7 SCC 162 : (AIR 1998 SC 3067). But there is a complete fallacy in the submission made by Mr. Raval as the provisions of Section 42 are confined in their application to actions and prosecutions in respect of anything done or intended to be done under the provisions of the Police Act, 1861. They do not and cannot apply to a person being prosecuted for an offence under any other Act or an action being brought in respect of thing or anything done under the provisions of any other statute.

71. In Moulud Ahmed v. State of U.P., 1963 (Supp) 2 SCR 38 : (1964) (2) Cri LJ 71), the Hon'ble Apex Court repelled the similar contention observing as under (para 9) :-

"Section 42 does not apply to prosecution against any person for anything done under the provisions of any other Act or under Police powers conferred under any other Act. Under Section 36, nothing contained in the Police Act shall be construed to prevent any person from being prosecuted under any regulation or Act for any offence made punishable by this Act or for being liable under any other regulation or Act or anything or higher penalty or punishment than is provided for such offence by this Act. This section makes it clear that the provisions of the Act, including Section 42, do not preclude a person being prosecuted for an offence under any other Act. A combined reading of these provisions leads to the conclusion that Section 42 only applies to a prosecution against a person for an offence committed under the Police Act."

72. The said judgment was approved and followed subsequently by the Apex Court in Ajaib Singh v. Joginder Singh, AIR 1968 SC 1422 : (1969 Cri LJ 4)

73. In Pritam Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 1973 SC 1354 : (1973 Cri LJ 1152), the Apex Court considered the applicability of the provisions of Section 42 in a case where the police official had been charged under Section 29 of the Police Act itself and the Apex Court held that in such a case, Section 42 would apply.

74. In Sumer Chand, (1993 Cri LJ 3531) (supra), the Apex Court held that application of Section 42 of the Police Act is limited if the person is charged under the said Act alone. This Court has taken this view about half a century ago in Mangi Lal v. The State, 1956 Raj LW 285 : (1957 Cri LJ 158) after placing reliance on various judgments of other Courts and particularly in Mohd. Sharif v. Nasir Ali, AIR 1930 All 742 and Heeralal v. Ramdulari, AIR 1935 Nagpur 237.

75. Thus, the contention raised by Mr. Raval is devoid of any merit.

76. It has next been urged by Mr. Raval that the prosecution of other police officials is barred by limitation provided by Section 161 (1) of the Bombay Police Act, 1951, which reads as under :-

"Sec. 161 (1). - Suits or prosecutions in respect of acts done under the colour of duty, as aforesaid, not to be entertained, or to be dismissed if not instituted within the prescribed period :-

In any case of alleged offence by the . . . . . .Police Officer . . . . . or of a wrong alleged to have been done by such . . . . . .Police Officer .. . . . . .any act done under the colour or in excess of any such duty or authority, as aforesaid, or wherein it shall appear to the Court that the offence or wrong, if committed or done, was of the character aforesaid, the prosecution or suit shall not be entertained, or shall be dismissed, if instituted, more than six months after the date of the act complained of.

Provided that, any such prosecution against a police officer may be entertained by the Court if instituted with the previous sanction of the State Government within two years from the date of the offence."

77. This issue was dealt elaborately by the Division Bench of Gujarat High Court in Fateh Sinh Madhu Sinh Rathod v. N. Rama Iyer, Commissioner of Police (sic), and the Court, after considering a large number of judgments, held that the limitation shall apply even in a case where the malice has been alleged while acting under the colour of office.

78. In M. M. Rajendran v. K. Rama-krishnan, (1997) 6 SCC 85, the Hon'ble Supreme Court has held that the question of limitation for prosecution launched by the party must be necessarily considered even in the proceedings under Section 482 Cr. P.C.

79. In Virupaxappa Kadampur (1963 (1) Cri LJ 814) (supra), the Hon'ble Supreme Court observed as under (para 9) :-

"The expression 'under colour of something' or 'under colour of duty' or 'under colour of office' is not infrequently used in law as well as in common parlance. Thus, in common parlance, when a person is entrusted with the duty of collecting funds for, say, some charity and he uses that opportunity to get money for himself, we say of him that he is collecting money for himself under the colour of making collections for a charity. Whether or not when the act bears the true colour of the office or duty or right, the act may be said to be done under the colour of that right, office or duty, it is clear that when the colour is consumed is the cover or a cloak for something which cannot properly be done in performance of the duty or in exercise of the right or office, the Act is said to be done under colour of office or duty or right. It is reasonable to think that the legislature used the word 'under colour' in Section 161 (1) to include this sense."

80. In State of Andhra Pradesh v. N. Venugopal, AIR 1964 SC 33 : (1964 (1) Cri LJ 16), the Apex Court dealt with the provisions of Section 53 of the Madras District Police Act, 1859, which contains provisions analogous to those contained in Section 42 of the Bombay Police Act, 1861. The Apex Court held that to determine whether the act done could be said to be under a provision of law, one must discover the existence of a reasonable relationship between the provisions and the act. In absence of such a relation, the act cannot be said to have been done under particular provisions of law.

81. In Sumer Chand (1993 Cri LJ 3531) (supra), the Apex Court held that the provisions of Section 161 (1) of the Bombay Police Act has a very wider amplitude as the words "in any case of alleged offence" or "of a wrong alleged to have been done" and "by any act done" are contained therein and, thus, requires to be considered in wider sense. However, the Apex Court dealt with a case where the suit for malicious prosecution against two police officials, for having been registered on false, vexatious and malicious report had been filed. The Apex Court, while interpreting the provisions of Section 140 (1) of the Delhi Police Act, which is analogous to the provisions of Section 161 (1) of the Bombay Police Act, 1951, held that it was the duty of the said police officers to record the report and so also to file the challan in Court and, thus, the acts complained of were done under the colour of office of the said officers and, thus, fell within the ambit of Section 140 (1) of the Act and, therefore, the case had to be filed within limitation provided therein and the suit was found to be barred by limitation having been filed after expiry of three months.

82. The instant case is quite distinguishable for the reason that it cannot be co-related with the duty of the official to get the shop vacated at Pali and for that purpose to hatch a conspiracy and falsely involve the complainant in a case under the N.D.P.S. Act. The instant case, rather, falls within the four-corners of the judgment of the Hon'ble Supreme Court in State of Maharashtra v. Narhar Rao, AIR 1966 SC 1783 : (1966 Cri LJ 1495), where the Hon'ble Apex Court considered the provisions of Section 161(1) of the Bombay Police Act and held that accepting a bribe for weakening the prosecution case, cannot be held to have any reasonable connection between the act complained of and the powers and duties of the officers and it was not permissible to hold that the act was done by the accused-officers under the colour of office. The Court further held that "the alleged acceptance of bribe by the accused-officers was not an act which could be said to have been done under the colour of office or done in excess of his duty or authority within the meaning of Section 161 (1) of the Bombay Police Act."

83. In State of Maharashtra v. Atma Ram, AIR 1966 SC 1786 : (1966 Cri LJ 1498), the alleged act of assault and confinement of a suspect in police custody was held not to be acts done under the colour of duty or authority since the said acts had no reasonable connection or nexus to the duty or authority imposed upon the officer under the Bombay Police Act or any other enactment conferring power of the police under the colour of which this act was done and that such acts fall completely outside the duties and scope of the police officers and they were not entitled to the protection conferred by Section 161 (1) of the Bombay Police Act.

84. In Bhanuparsad Hariparsad Dave v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1968 SC 1323 : (1968 Cri LJ 1505), the Apex Court considered the provisions of Section 161 of the Bombay Police Act, 1951 and repelled the similar contention holding that accepting illegal gratification could not be brought within the ambit of the said provisions. In such case, a police officer, taking advantage of his position as a Police Officer, and availing himself of the opportunity afforded by another police officer, handed over to him a coerced accused to pay illegal gratification to him. The Apex Court held that such an act cannot be brought within the ambit of an act done under the colour of duty. In a case where the provisions of Section 197 Cr. P.C. are held to be not applicable, it is difficult to assume that provisions of Section 161 (1) of the Bombay Police Act, 1951 can be attracted.

85. In view of the above, I am of the considered opinion that neither the provisions of Section 42 of the Police Act, 1861, nor Section 161 (1) that of the Bombay Police Act, comes to the rescue of the police officers and the contention is hereby turned down.

86. Mr. Raval has further urged that the complaint could not have been entertained by the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Pali, for the same was barred by the provisions of Section 195 Cr. P.C. as the complaint could be lodged only by the Court, for which the false evidence had been fabricated and before which it has been used. In Nirmaljit Singh Hoon, (AIR 1972 SC 2639) (supra), the Hon'ble Apex Court held that fabricated evidence should be tendered in evidence and only then it would attract the provisions of Section 195 (1) Cr. P.C.

87. In Manohar M. Galani v. Ashok N. Advani, (1999) 8 SCC 737 : (2000 Cri LJ 406), the Apex Court considered the application of Section 195 Cr. P.C. and observed that in investigation on the basis of the information cannot be throttled at this stage from proceeding with the investigation when the charges are very serious and grave and the High Court, in its power under the inherent jurisdiction, should not interfere in such matters and it was premature for the High Court to come to the conclusion that the provisions of Section 195 Cr. P.C. were applicable.

88. In Sacchida Nand Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1998 SC 1121 : (1998 Cri LJ 1565), the Apex Court considered the scope of application of Section 195 (1) (b) read with Section 340 Cr. P.C. and observed as under (Paras 11, 12) :-

"The sub-section puts the condition that before the Court makes a complaint of 'any offence referred to in Clause (b) of Section 195 (1), the Court has to follow the procedure laid down in Section 340. In other words, no complaint can be made by a Court regarding any offence falling within the ambit of Section 195 (1)(b) of the Code, without adopting those procedural requirements. It has to be noted that Section 340 falls within Chapter XXVI of the Code, which contains a fascicuilus of 'provisions as to offence affecting the administration of justice' as the title of the Chapter appellates. So the offence envisaged in Section 195 (a)(b) of the Code must involve acts which would have affected the administration of justice.

The scope of preliminary enquiry envisaged in Section 340(1) of the Code is to ascertain whether any offence affecting administration of justice, has been committed in respect of a document produced in Court or given in evidence in a proceeding in that Court. In other words, the offence should have been committed during the time when the document was in custodia legis.

(Emphasis added).

89. While deciding the said case, the Hon'ble Supreme Court placed reliance upon large number of its earlier judgments, particularly, Raghunath v. State of U. P., AIR 1973 SC 1100 : (1973 Cri LJ 858); Mohan Lal v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1974 SC 299 : (1974 Cri LJ 350); Legal Remembrancer of Government of West Bengal v. Haridas Mundra, AIR 1976 SC 2225 : (1976 Cri LJ 1732); and Gopalkrishna Menon v. D. Raja Reddy, AIR 1983 SC 1053 : (1983 Cri LJ 1599), and held as under :-

"The sequietur of the above discussion is that the bar containing in Section 195 (1)(b), (2) (i) of the Code is not applicable to a case where forgery of the document was committed before the document was produced in a Court."

90. The scope of Section 195 Cr. P.C. is, in fact, very limited. (Vide Sanmukh Singh v. The King, AIR 1950 PC 31 : (1950 (51) Cri LJ 651); Budhu Ram v. State of Rajasthan, (1963) 3 SLR 376 : (1963 (2) Cri LJ 698); and Sushil Kumar v. State of Haryana, AIR 1988 SC 419 : (1988 Cri LJ 427).

91. In State of Punjab v. Brij Lal Palta, AIR 1969 SC 355 : (1969 Cri LJ 645), the Apex Court held that for want of such technical requirement, the Court at the most can quash proceedings only in respect of the offence requiring such a course, but there can be no objection to the continuance of proceedings relating to other cognizable offences under other Sections or Statute.

92. Thus, the submission is devoid of any merit and is rejected for the reason that it is nobody's case that documents had been fabricated while in the custody of the Court.

93. Mr. Rathore, learned counsel appearing for the State of Rajasthan, has urged that in the instant case, the Gujarat Police got the information from Pali that the complainant was coming to Gujarat with narcotic drugs and psychotropic substance. The complainant was arrested from Pali. The shop (the subject matter of the main controversy) was situated at Pali and the complainant had been in possession thereof whatever may be nature of his possession. The law involving the complainant in a false case was set at motion in Pali. Therefore, in view of the provisions of Sections 178 and 179, Cr. P. C., it cannot be said that the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Pali, had no jurisdiction at all.

94. It is settled law that in an offence of a continuing nature, the Court, even through whose territorial jurisdiction the vehicle has passed, would have territorial jurisdiction to try the offence. (Vide Mrs. Sujata Mukherjee v. Prashant Kumar Mukherjee, AIR 1997 SC 2465 : (1997 Cri LJ 2985); and Harbans Lal v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1999 SC 326 : (1999 Cri LJ 455)). In a case where complainant's allegations are of stinking magnitude and the authority, which ought to have redressed it has closed its eyes and not even tried to find-out the real offender and what were the circumstances under which the complainant had been arrested and harassed, whether he can be left at the mercy of such law-enforcing agencies who had, for the reasons best known to them, adopted an entirely indifferent attitude.

95. There is another aspect of the matter. Legal maxim Necessiatas Sub Lege Non Continetur Quia Qua Quod Alias Non Est Lictum Necessitas Facit Lictum, means necessity is not restrained by laws; since what otherwise is not lawful necessity makes lawful. Cognizance has not yet been taken so far as applicant Raman Lal and police officials are concerned. In view of the plea taken by the complainant in objections against the application of Gujarat Police for taking him on remand and in his bail application (Annex.

R/9 and R/10), make it crystal clear that the allegations made by him in the complaint are not afterthought. The submissions cannot be said to be preposterous and not worth consideration.

96. Thus, it is not a fit case where this Court should exercise its extraordinary jurisdiction under Section 482 of the Code. The judgments of the Apex Court, which are legion, have laid down that save in exceptional case where non-interference would result in miscarriage of justice, the Court should not interfere at the stage of investigation. (Vide Eastern Spinning Mills v. Rajiv Poddar, AIR 1985 SC 1668 : (1985 Cri LJ 1858)). There has also been inordinate delay in filing applications, which cannot be explained even by giving reference to various proceedings taken before the High Court of Gujarat as the same stood finalised long ago before filing this application.

97. Entertaining these applications would render the complainant remediless, which is not permissible in law. (Vide Rameshwar Lal v. Municipal Corporation, Tonk, (1996) 6 SCC 100). Moreso, legal maxim Ubi jus, Ibi Remedium, that is, if there is a right, there is a remedy to enforce it. Thus, in no circumstance the complainant can be refused a remedy to get his grievance redressed. Applicant Raman Lal, in his Special Criminal Case No. 1079/98, which is pending before the Gujarat High Court and the interim order is continuing, has taken various grounds challenging the validity of the Rules of Gujarat High Court for not providing Letters Patent Appeal in criminal case. However, the ground No. 1 reads as under :-

"That despite more than two years have passed yet the Palanpur Police has not carried further investigation to find out the real offender. . . . . ."

98. It clearly shows that the Gujarat Police has not considered it proper to find out the truth, if any, in the said case under the N.D.P.S. Act. No material has been produced before this Court to show any progress in the said case by the Gujarat Police after the incident. A mere statement that accused persons have filed the petitions before Gujarat High Court to transfer the case to C.B.I. for finding out the truth, is no explanation. It is strange that one police officer, who was responsible himself for finding out the truth, if any, has filed such petition. Moreso, the allegations of reaching an agreement with Mohan Lal for vacating the premises in dispute, purchasing the stamp papers for executing the agreement by Raghunath Singh, real brother of the complainant, filing applications for discharge just after reaching the agreement. Not holding identification parade by Gujarat Police till the agreement had been executed, cumulatively provide for cogent reasons and compel this Court not to interfere in the matter. Moreso, I failed to understand the appropriateness of entertaining these applications when two applications are already pending before the Gujarat High Court and the Hon'ble Gujarat High Court has stayed the further proceedings in relation to C.R. No. 403/96, Police Station, Kotwali, Pali. None of the parties before this Court considered it proper to bring it to the notice of Hon'ble the High Court of Gujarat that on the date of obtaining the interim order from Gujarat High Court, the interim order passed by this Court was in operation. Involving a person in a criminal case, in which minimum punishment is ten years and maximum twenty years imprisonment and a minimum fine of Rs. One lac or maximum Rs. Two lacs, can also be imposed, has to be taken very seriously as it violates all fundamental rights of a citizen and is abhorrent to any notion of any civilised society. Entertaining these petitions, in view of pendency of two applications before the Hon'ble High Court of Gujarat, can, by no means, be appropriate, rather insisting by the applicants to hear these matters amount to abuse of process of the Court.

99. The State of Gujarat, which has filed the instant application for protecting its officials, could not be justified in maintaining the application, as it had taken no step to redress the grievance of the complainant. Before passing the resolution dated 3-11-1997 to protect the police officials by providing them the so-called statutory protection under para 262 of the Gujarat Police Manual, 1975 (Vol. I), the State ought to have considered as how their action could be said to be bona fide.

100. In Dr. Budhi Kota Subbarao v. K. Parasaran, AIR 1996 SC 2687 : (1996 Cri LJ 3983), the Hon'ble Supreme Court has observed as under (Para 11) :-

"No litigant has a right to unlimited drought on the Court time and public money in order to get his affairs settled in the manner he wishes. However, access of justice should not be misused as a licence to file misconceived and frivolous petitions." (Emphasis added).

101. The powers conferred upon the High Court under Section 482, Cr. P. C. are applicable in limited cases of grave dereliction from duty and flagrant abuse of any fundamental principle of law or where no remedy is available. The expression "abusing the process of the Court" is that the proceeding which is wanting any bona fide and is frivolous, vexatious or oppressive and the provisions can be used to otherwise secure the ends of justice.

102. In State of West Bengal v. Rashmoy Das, (2000) 1 SCC 76 : (AIR 2000 SC 228) the Apex Court held that power of the High Court under Section 482, Cr. P. C. does not extent to quashing a prosecution which, though apprehended by the petitioner, has not yet been instituted. The High Court cannot take upon itself the burden to probe; whether the allegations in the complaint are likely to be established by evidence or not. The Court has to see as to whether the uncontroverted allegations, as made prima facie, establish an offence, the Court has to be cautioned that the inherent powers cannot be utilized for any oblique purpose.

103. In Janta Dal (1993 Cri LJ 600) (supra), the Apex Court observed that inherent powers can be used only for the ends of justice. "Such powers unrestricted and undefined, should not be capriciously and arbitrarily exercised but should be exercised in appropriate cases, ex debito justitiae, to do real and substantial justice for the administration of which alone the Courts exist. The powers possessed by the High Court under Section 482, Cr. P. C. are very wide and the very plentitude of the powers requires great caution in its exercise. The Courts must be careful to see that its decision, in exercise of this power, is based on sound proof. . . . .This inherent power conferred by Section 482 to the Court should not be exercised to stifle a legitimate prosecution. The High Court, being the highest Court of the State, should normally refrain from giving a premature decision in a case wherein the entire facts are extremely incomplete and hazy; moreso when the evidence has not been collected and produced before the Court and the issues involved, whether factual or legal, are of great magnitude and cannot be seen in their true perspective without material."

104. The facts referred to above make it crystal clear that the instant case does not present special features, which may warrant the exercise of extraordinary power of this Court under Section 482, Cr. P. C., Res Ipsa Loquitur-the things speak for itself. The Court has a duty to do justice to the parties. Fiat justitia ruat caelum-let justice be done, though the heavens may fall.

(B) REGISTRATION OF A CASE AGAINST A HIGH COURT JUDGE:-

105. This issue is limited only to the case of applicant Raman Lal. Admittedly, on the date of lodging the complaint before the Magistrate at Pali, the applicant was the Additional Judge of Gujarat High Court. Therefore, the issue has been raised: whether it was permissible in law to take cognizance on a complaint against him by the Magistrate?

106. In K. Veeraswami v. Union of India, (1991) 3 SCC 655, the Constitution Bench of the Hon'ble Supreme Court considered the issue and observed as under :-

"It is settled law that the authority entitled to grant sanction must apply its mind to the facts of the case and all the evidence collected before forming opinion whether to grant sanction or not. Secondly, the trial is by the Court which is independent of the Executive. But these safeguards must be adequate. Any complaint against Judge and its investigation by the C.B.I., if given publicity, will have far-reaching effect on the Judge and the litigant public. The need, therefore, is a judicious view of taking action under the Act. Care should be taken that honest and fearless Judges are not harassed. They should be protected. . . . .All that is required is to lay down certain guidelines, lest the Act may be misused. This Court being the ultimate guardian of the rights of people and independents of judiciary will not deny itself the opportunity to lay down such guidelines. We must never forget that this Court is not a Court of limited jurisdiction of only dispute-settling. Almost from the beginning, this Court had been a law-maker, albeit in Holmes's expression, "interstitial" law-maker. In deed, the Court's role today is much more. It is expanding beyond dispute-settling and interstitial law-making. It is a problem solver in the nebulous areas. In this case, we consider it no mere opportunity; it is a duty. It is our responsibility and duty to apply the existing law in a form more conducive to the independence of judiciary."

The Court further directed as under :-

"We, therefore, direct that no criminal case shall be registered under Section 154, Cr. P. C. against a Judge of the High Court, Chief Justice of the High Court or Judge of the Supreme Court unless the Chief Justice of India is consulted in the matter."

107. The issue of consultation, as referred to above, came for consideration before the Hon'ble Supreme Court in C. Ravichandran Iyer v. Justice A. M. Bhattacharjee, (1995) 5 SCC 457 : (1995 AIR SCW 3768) and after considering the judgments in Veeraswami (1991 (3) SCC 655) (supra) and Supreme Court Advocates on Record Association v. Union of India, (1993) 4 SCC 441 : (AIR 1994 SC 268), it was held that Sanction and Approval of the Chief Justice of India was a condition precedent to register a case and investigate into the matter and Sanction for Prosecution of the said Judge by the President of India after consultation with the Chief Justice of India.

108. In U. P. Judicial Officers' Association v. Union of India, (1994) 4 SCC 687, the Hon'ble Supreme Court held that no criminal case could be registered against a judicial officer in respect of anything allegedly done or in his capacity as holder of such judicial office, without the prior permission of the Chief Justice of the High Court concerned. Certain directions had also been issued in the similar line in Delhi Judicial Service Association v. State of Gujarat, (1991) 4 SCC 406 : (1991 Cri LJ 3086). Such directions issued by the Hon'ble Supreme Court are of binding nature for the reason that the law laid down by the Hon'ble Supreme Court is binding on all Courts in India.

109. In Nand Kishore v. State of Punjab, (1995) 6 SCC 614 : (1995 AIR SCW 4650), the Hon'ble Supreme Court has held as under (Para 17) :-

"Under Article 141, the law declared by it is of a binding character and as commandful as the law made by the legislative body or an authorised delegates of such body. . . . .for the Court is not merely the interpreter of the law as existing but much beyond that. The Court, as a wing of the State, is, by itself, a source of law. The law is what the Court says it is."

110. Similarly, a Constitution Bench of the Hon'ble Supreme Court in Supreme Court Bar Association v. Union of India, (1998) 4 SCC 409 : (AIR 1998 SC 1895) has held that the role of the Supreme Court has always been of law-maker and it has travelled beyond merely dispute-settling.

111. In Vishaka v. State of Rajasthan, (1997) 7 JT (SC) 384 : (AIR 1997 SC 3011) the Hon'ble Supreme Court issued large number of directions in order to check the menace of sexual harassment of working women at working places and further directed that the said directions would be treated as the law declared by the Hon'ble Supreme Court under Article 141 of the Constitution.

112. Ignoring the directions issued by the Hon'ble Supreme Court "amounts to judicial impropriety" and such "judicial adventurism cannot be permitted." (Vide Dwarikesh Sugar Industries Ltd. v. Prem Heavy Engg. Works (P.) Ltd., AIR 1997 SC 2477). In C. N. Rudramurthy v. K. Barkathulla Khan, (1998) 8 SCC 275; the Hon'ble Apex Court observed as under :-

"In deed, it is a matter of judicial discipline that requires that when this Court states as to what the law on the matter is, the same shall be binding on all the Courts within the territory of India. This mandate of Article 141 of the Constitution is not piece of any doctrine of precedents, but is an imprimatur to all Courts that the law declared by this Court is binding on them."

113. In K. Veeraswami (1991 (3) SCC 655) (supra), the Hon'ble Supreme Court, while dealing with a case under the Prevention of Corruption Act and the Court had dealt with various aspects of law observing as under :-

"There are various protections conferred to the Judges to preserve the independence of judiciary. They have protection from civil liability for any act done or ordered to be done by them in discharge of their judicial duty whether or not such judicial duty is performed within the limit of their jurisdiction. That has been provided under Section 1 of the Judicial Officers Protection Act, 1850. Likewise, Section 77, I.P.C. gives them protection from criminal liability for an act performed judiciously. But we know of no law providing protection for Judges for criminal prosecution. Article 361(2) confers immunity from criminal prosecution only to the President and Governors of the States and to no others. . . . . The Judges are liable to be dealt with just the same way as any other person in respect of criminal offence. It is only in taking bribes or with regard to the offence of corruption, the sanction for criminal prosecution is required

(Emphasis added).

114. Therefore, it is evident that the Court was dealing with a case under the Prevention of Corruption Act. The Constitution Bench started its judgment stating that the appeal raised the question of singular importance and consequence to the Judge of the High Courts and the Apex Court. "The central issue is; whether the Judge could be prosecuted for offence under the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 (for short, "the Act")." Therefore, the Hon'ble Apex Court had considered whether the Judge can be prosecuted under the Prevention of Corruption Act and the Court had not considered the entire aspect of criminal liability of a sitting Judge of a High Court or the Supreme Court. Moreso, while issuing the direction not to register a case under Section 154, Cr. P. C. against a sitting Judge, the Court further observed as under :-

"Due regard must be given by the Government to the opinion expressed by the Chief Justice. If the Chief Justice is of the opinion that it is not a fit case for proceeding under the Act, the case shall not be registered." (Emphasis added).

115. The reference to the Act, while issuing the direction, makes it explicit clear that the Hon'ble Supreme Court was putting such an embargo only in relation to the cases under the Prevention of Corruption Act.

116. In C. Ravichandran Iyer (1995 AIR SCW 3768) (supra) also, the charges had been of corruption and not of other criminal nature. Moreso, in U. P. Judicial Officer's (1994 (4) SCC 687) (supra), the Court distinguished the act done in official capacity and outside of the same. Thus, it is evident that the directions issued by the Hon'ble Supreme Court in the said cases are, by no means, applicable in the instant case and on that count, the applicant cannot succeed.

117. Mr. Barot has valiantly but unsuccessfully tried to bring the allegations against applicant Raman Lal under the provisions of Section 13(1)(a) of the Prevention of Corruption Act. Submission on this aspect is preposterous. An identical submission was repelled by the Hon'ble Supreme Court in Om Prakash v. State of U. P., AIR 1957 SC 458 : (1957 Cri LJ 575) and State of Madhya Pradesh v. Veereshwar Rao Agnihotri, AIR 1957 SC 592 : (1957 Cri LJ 892) observing that offence under the Prevention of Corruption Act may not be identical in essence to the offence under Indian Penal Code, otherwise it would tantamount to repealing the identical provision in I.P.C. by implication. Similar view has been expressed in State of Bombay v. S. L. Apte, AIR 1961 SC 578 : (1961 (1) Cri LJ 725).

118. More so, it is also settled legal proposition that though Code of Criminal Procedure enables a Court to try all offences together, the same is not mandatory and, thus, the Court may or may not try all offences together in one trial. (Vide Mohinder Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1999 SC 211 : (1999 Cri LJ 263). Submissions on this count also are not worth accepting and the same are repelled.

(C) REFERENCE TO/AND CONSIDERATION OF EVIDENCE AT THIS STAGE:-

119. Mr. Barot has vehemently argued on absurdity of the complaint and tried to convince the Court that in view of the depositions of the complainant himself before the Special Court in Delhi in respect of the same subject-matter, the complaint filed by him before the learned Magistrate at Pali cannot be sustained and, therefore, the applicant has a right to refer to and rely upon the said deposition to prove his submission regarding absurdity of the complaint.

120. Mr. Rathore, learned Special Counsel for the State of Rajasthan, has vehemently opposed the submission contending that such an issue cannot be agitated at this stage as it tantamounts to examining the case on merit.

121. In State Anti-Corruption Bureau, Hyderabad v. P. Suryaprakasam, (1999) SCC (Cri) 373, the Hon'ble Apex Court has held that in view of the provisions of Sections 239 and 240, Cr. P. C., at the time of framing of a charge, the trial Court is required to, and can consider, only the police report referred to under Section 173, Cr. P. C. and the documents sent with it. However, in Satish Mehra v. Delhi Administration, (1996) 9 SCC 766, the Hon'ble Supreme Court observed as under:-

"Similar situation arises under Section 239 of the Code (which deals with trial of warrant cases on police report). In that situation the Magistrate has to afford the prosecution and the accused an opportunity of being heard besides considering the police report and the documents sent therewith. At these two stages the Code enjoins on the Court to give audience to the accused for deciding whether it is necessary to proceed to the next stage. It is a matter of exercise to judicial mind. There is nothing in the Code which shrinks the scope of such audience to oral arguments. If the accused succeeds in producing any reliable material at that stage which might fatally affect even the very sustainability of the case, it is unjust to suggest that no such material shall be looked into by the Court at that stage. Here the "grounds" may be any valid ground including insufficiency of evidence to prove charge. . . . . The object of providing such an opportunity as is envisaged in Section 227 of the Code is to enable the Court to decide whether it is necessary to proceed to conduct the trial. If the case ends there it gains a lot of time of the Court and saves much human efforts and cost. If the materials produced by the accused even at that early stage would clinch the issue, why should the Court shut it out saying that such documents need be produced only after wasting a lot more time in the name of trial-proceedings. Hence, we are of the view that Sessions Judge would be within his powers to consider even materials which the accused may produce at the stage contemplated in Section 227 of the Code."

122. Both these judgments have expressed the conflicting views on the same legal issue. Therefore, it is to be examined: which of the said judgments is binding as a precedent under Article 141 of the Constitution. The judgment in State Anti-Corruption Bureau (1999 SCC (Cri) 373) (supra) was delivered on 2-5-96 and the case of Satish Mehra

(1996 (9) SCC 766) (supra) was decided by equal number of Hon'ble Judges on 31-7-96. There is no dispute that the judgment of a Larger Bench, if is in conflict of the judgment of the Smaller Bench, is to be followed. (Vide Union of India v. K. S. Subramanian, C.A. No. 212/1975, decided on 30-7-1997; State of U. P. v. Ram Chandra Trivedi, AIR 1976 SC 2547; General Manager, Telecom v. A. Srinivasa Rao, (1997) 8 SCC 767 : (AIR 1998 SC 656) and N. S. Giri v. Corporation of City of Mangalore, (1999) 4 SCC 697 : (AIR 1999 SC 1958). But in the instant case, both the judgments have been delivered by equal number of Hon'ble Judges of the Supreme Court.

123. A Constitution Bench of Karnataka High Court in Govindanaik v. Kalaghatigi West Patent Press Co. Ltd., AIR 1980 Kant 92 (FB) has held that in case there is a conflict in two judgments of the Hon'ble Supreme Court consisting of equal number of Hon'ble Judges, the later of the two decisions should be followed by the High Courts and other Courts. Similar view has been reiterated by the Division Bench of Bombay High Court in Vasant Totaba Hargude v. Dikkaya Muttaiya Rajan, AIR 1980 Bom 341. In Baker v. White, (1877) 5 Ch D 183; and Miles v. Jarvish, (1883) 24 Ch D 633, it was held that a Court may have an option to follow the judgment which is "better in point of law."

124. But there is another aspect of the matter. The subsequent judgments may also be held to be per incurium and, therefore, the earlier judgment can be held to be binding. The concept "per incurium" has been explained by the Courts from time to time and "per incurium" are those decisions given in ignorance or forgetfulness of some inconsistent statutory provisions or of some authority binding on the Court concerned. (Vide M/s. Tourist Guide Service v. B. D. Harsha, (1989) 2 Raj LR 1; Mamleswar Prasad v. Kanahaiya Lal, AIR 1975 SC 907; A. R. Antuley v. R. S. Nayak, (1988) 2 SCC 602 : (AIR 1988 SC 1531); State of Uttar Pradesh v. Synthetics and Chemicals Ltd., (1991) 4 SCC 139; B. Shyama Rao v. Union Territory of Pondichery, AIR 1967 SC 1480; Municipal Corporation of Delhi v. Gurnam Kaur, (1989) 1 SCC 101 : (AIR 1989 SC 38); Ram Gopal Baheti v. Girdhari Lal Soni, (1999) 3 SCC 112 : (1999 AIR SCW 4721); Sarnam Singh v. Deputy Director of Consolidation, (1999) 5 SCC 638 : (1999 AIR SCW 4749) and N. S. Giri (AIR 1999 SC 1958) (supra).

125. This aspect requires a serious consideration, particularly in view of the judgment in Union of India v. Godfrey Philips India Ltd., AIR 1986 SC 806, wherein the Hon'ble Apex Court observed as under :-

"We find it difficult to understand how a Bench of two Judge in Jit Ram's case, AIR 1980 SC 1285, could possibly overturn or disagree with what was said by another Bench of two Judges in Motilal Sugar Mills' case, (1979) 2 SCC 409 : (AIR 1979 SC 621), they could have referred Jit Ram's case (supra) to a Larger Bench, but we do not think it was right on their part to express their disagreement with the enunciation of the law by a coordinate Bench of the same Court."

126. Moreso, in Union of India v. B. R. Bajaj, AIR 1994 SC 1256 : (1994 Cri LJ 2086), the Hon'ble Supreme Court in held as under (Para 8):-

"In the instant case the High Court while interfering at the stage of F.I.R. holding that the F.I.R. did not disclose any offence, as a matter of fact, took into consideration several other records produced by respondents Nos. 1 and 2 and also relied on the affidavit filed by Shri Banerjee and also on a letter written by the Director, State Lotteries. This approach of the High Court say the least, to some extent amounts to investigation by the Court whether the offences alleged in the F.I.R. are made out or not. . . . . That being the case, the High Court has grossly erred in quashing the F.I.R. itself when several aspects of the allegations in the F.I.R. had still to be investigated. The learned Judge of the High Court while coming to the conclusion that the allegations in the F.I.R. do not disclose any offence, has taken into consideration several aspects including the guidelines, normal duty of Shri B. R. Bajaj, etc. and when further and investigated whether the offences under Section 120-B read with Ss. 418, 468, I.P.C. and Section 5(2) read with Section 5(1)(d) of the Prevention of Corruption Act have been made out. Suffice it to say that the learned Judge has treated the whole matter as though it was an appeal against the order of conviction and that should never be the approach in exercising the inherent power under Section 482, Cr. P. C. particularly at the stage of F.I.R. when the same discloses commission of a cognizable offence which had still to be investigated thoroughly by police." (Emphasis added).

127. In the said case the High Court had quashed the F.I.R. against Mr. Bajaj on the basis of record produced by the applicant therein after referring to Ch. Bhajan Lal (1992 Cri LJ 527) (supra). The Hon'ble Supreme Court held that as the matter was under investigation, High Court should not have quashed the same and especially on the material produced by the petitioner/applicant.

128. In State of Bihar v. P. P. Sharma, I.A.S., 1992 Suppl (1) SCC 222 : (1991 Cri LJ 1438), the Hon'ble Supreme Court has held as under (Para 20) :-

"We do not wish to express any opinion on the rival contentions of the parties based on their respective appreciation of material on the record. We have quoted 'the annexures', the inferences drawn by the High Court and the factual assessment of Mr. Sibal, only to show that the High Court fell into grave error in appreciating the documents produced by the respondents along with the writ petitions and further delving into disputed questions of facts in its jurisdiction under Articles 226/227 of the Constitution of India." (Emphasis added).

129. There is another aspect of the matter. In Satish Mehra (1996 (9) SCC 766) (supra), the facts involved had itself been of absurd nature as the dispute had been between husband and wife regarding the custody of the children and husband had obtained the degree of custody of the children from the competent Court in United States but the wife landed in India to the children to award the execution of the said order. The husband filed habeas corpus in Indian Court and as counterblast, the wife filed an F.I.R. making allegations that the husband had sexually assaulted their three years daughter and outraged her modesty and tried to commit rape on her. It was in the special facts and circumstances of the case that such an observation had been made by the Hon'ble Supreme Court.

130. In State of Madhya Pradesh v. S. B. Johari, (2000) 2 SCC 57 : (2000 Cri LJ 944), the Apex Court held that the High Court has committed grave error by appreciating and weighing the material on record for coming to the conclusion whether charge against the accused could have been framed as it runs contrary to the settled legal proposition that at such a stage, the Court has to prima facie consider whether there is sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused and the Court is not permitted to appreciate the evidence and arrive at the conclusion that the materials produced are sufficient or not for convicting the accused.

131. Similar view had been reiterated in Niranjan Singh Karam Singh Punjabi v. Jitendra Bhimraj Bijjaya, (1990) 4 SCC 76 : (1990 Cri LJ 1869).

132. In Supdt. and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, West Bengal v. Anil Kumar Bhunja, AIR 1980 SC 52 : (1979 Cri LJ 1390) the Apex Court held that if an inference of strong suspicion about the commission of an offence can be drawn from material on record, it is enough for the Court to frame the charges and Court may, for this limited purpose, shift the evidence as it cannot be expected even at the initial stage to accept "all that the prosecution states as a gospel truth even if it is opposed to common sense or the broad probabilities of the case." The Court concern is limited to the extent to examine "whether the facts emerging therefrom, taken at their face value, disclose the existence of all the ingredients constituting the alleged offence."

133. In S. B. Johari (2000 Cri LJ 944) (supra), the Apex Court held that so far as the charge of conspiracy under Section 120-B is concerned, in most of the cases it is only from the available circumstantial evidence that an inference of conspiracy has to be drawn for the reason that it becomes difficult to get direct evidence on such an issue.

134. Similarly, in Shivnarayan Laxminarayan Joshi v. State of Maharashtra, (1980) 2 SCC 465 : (1980 Cri LJ 388) the Apex Court held that since it is impossible to adduce direct evidence of conspiracy, the offence can only be proved largely from the inference drawn from acts or illegal omissions committed by the conspirators in furtherance of a common design. Once such a conspiracy is proved, act of one conspirator becomes the act of the others. A co-conspirator, who joins subsequently and commits overt-acts in furtherance of the conspiracy, must also be held liable.

135. Therefore, in view of the above, I am of the considered opinion that as the judgment in Satish Mehra (1996 (9) SCC 766) (supra) is not applicable, and, therefore, contentions raised by Mr. Barot lack merit. This Court cannot assume the jurisdiction either of the trial Court or appellate Court and appreciate the evidence, the exclusive role assigned to the said Courts, in the inherent jurisdiction of this Court.

Conclusion :-

136. In view of the above, I do not find any force in the submissions made on behalf of the applicants. After investigating the matter further, the Rajasthan Police has preferred the charge-sheet before the Special Judge (N.D.P.S. Cases), Jodhpur, and the matter is pending before the Competent Court and the said Court has to decide as; whether further action is required or not, and if yes, in what manner. The applications are devoid of any merit and are hereby dismissed.

137. It is hereby clarified that any observation made hereinabove shall not adversely affect either of the parties and the same should be treated to have been made, if any, for deciding these applications and they do not have reflection on the merit of the case.

Applications dismissed.

SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Hon'ble Judge(s) : Markandey Katju and A.K. Patnaik, JJ.

Criminal Appeal No. 959 of 2010 Decided on, May 03,2010

Rabindra Nath Singh .. Vs.. Rajesh Ranjan Alias Pappu Yadav

==========

Contempt of Supreme Court by High Court- High Court passed order in breach of Supreme Court directions- It is contempt of order of Supreme Court by the High Court

==========

(1.) Heard learned counsel for the parties.

(2.) Leave granted in both the petitions.

(3.) These appeals have been filed against the impugned judgment and order dated 18.02.2009 of the High Court of Judicature at Patna whereby the respondent Rajesh Ranjan @ Pappu Yadav has been granted bail in Sessions Trial No. 976 of 1999.

(4.) Learned counsel for respondent-accused handed over to us a letter dated 1.5.2010 written by the respondent-accused to his counsel wherein it is stated that the present case should be heard by a Bench of which one of us (Markandey Katju, J.) is not a member. The said letter is taken on record.

(5.) Having perused the letter, we were inclined to issue notice for contempt of Court against respondent-accused for sending such a letter but we have restrained ourselves although it is clear that the conduct of the respondent- accused is contemptuous. We make it clear that this Court will not tolerate the tactics of Bench hopping by an accused or any other person.

(6.) We have considered the entire facts and circumstances of the case and also noted the fact that earlier two bail applications of the respondent-accused have been rejected. Apart from that, in the case of this very accused reported as Rajesh Ranjan Yadav Alias Pappu Yadav v. CBI Through Its Director [2007 (1) SCC 70], this Court has observed in para 24 as under.

"24. On the facts and circumstances of the case, we find no merit in this appeal. The appeal is accordingly dismissed. We, however, make it clear that no further application for bail will be considered in this case by any court, as already a large number of bail applications have been rejected earlier, both by the High Court and this Court."

(7.) We are surprised that despite the aforesaid clear direction of this Court, the High Court has granted bail to the respondent-accused. In fact, such an order of the High Court amounts to contempt of order of this Court since this Court has observed that no further bail application of the accused shall be entertained.

(8.) Learned counsel for the respondent submitted that the aforesaid decision was given rejecting bail pending the trial, whereas now bail was applied in appeal after conviction by the Trial Court. In our opinion, when it was not found a fit case for bail before conviction, it is even less a fit case for bail after conviction.

(9.) There are very serious allegations against the respondent, but we are not going into the same here because we do not wish to prejudice the appellate court. However, we do wish to express our regret that bail was granted by the High Court for no good reason except by saying that the appeal is not likely to be heard in six months. If bail is granted on such a ground then bail will have to be granted in almost every case, even when the offence is heinous. We cannot approve of such a view.
(10.) For the reasons given, we set aside the impugned judgment and order dated 18.02.2009 and allow these appeals. It is directed that the respondent-accused Rajesh Ranjan alias Pappu Yadav shall be taken into custody forthwith. Appeals allowed.

A) FRAUD ON POWER – MISUSE OF POWER BY THE MAGISTRATE - magistrate issud process and baillable warrents on a fraud complaint - the complaint in question is a product of fraud and a total abuse of the process of court. there is also serious doubt whether the procedure required under the code of criminal procedure was really followed by the magistrate at all while taking cognizance of the offence alleged. - the same is liable to be quashed based on the legal principle that an act in fraud is ab initio void.- this principle applies to judicial acts also.

B) FRAUD ON POWER VOIDS THE ORDER if it is not exercised bona fide for the end design. - there is a distinction between exercise of power in good faith and misuse in bad faith. - when an authority misuses its power in breach of law, say, by taking into account, some extraneous matters or by ignoring relevant matters. that would render the impugned act or order ultra vires. it would be a case of fraud on powers. the misuse in bad faith arises when the power is exercised for an improper motive, say, to satisfy a private or personal grudge or for wreaking vengeance of a party - a power is exercised maliciously if its repository is motivated by personal animosity towards those who are directly affected by its exercise.- use of a power for an 'alien' purpose other than the one for which the power is conferred is mala fide use of that power. same is the position when an order is made for a purpose other than that which finds place in the order. - and any action proved to be committed in bad faith or from corrupt motives, would certainly be held to be inoperative." - "no judgment of a court, no order of minister, can be allowed to stand if it has been obtained by fraud. fraud unravels everything." (emphasis supplied) see also, in lazarus case at p. 722 per lord parker, c.j. : "'fraud' vitiates all transactions known to the law of however high a degree of solemnity."

C) "FRAUD AS IS WELL KNOWN VITIATES EVERY SOLEMN ACT. - fraud and justice never dwell together. fraud is a conduct either by letter or words, which induces the other person or authority to take a definite determinative stand as a response to the conduct of the former either by word or letter. it is also well settled that misrepresentation itself amounts to fraud. indeed, innocent misrepresentation may also give reason to claim relief against fraud. a fraudulent misrepresentation is called deceit and consists in leading a man into damage by wilfully or recklessly causing him to believe and act on falsehood. it is a fraud in law if a party makes representations which he knows to be false, and injury ensues therefrom although the motive from which the representations proceeded may not have been bad. an act of fraud on court is always viewed seriously. a collusion or conspiracy with a view to deprive the rights of others in relation to a property would render the transaction void ab initio. fraud and deception are synonymous. although in a given case a deception may not amount to fraud, fraud is anathema to all equitable principles and any affair tainted with fraud cannot be perpetuated or saved by the application of any equitable doctrine including res judicata."

(1.) This is a writ petition filed inter alia seeking a writ of mandamus calling upon the respondents to immediately seize the records pertaining to criminal case no.118 of 2004 titled Suresh Kumar Jethalal Sanghvi v. Rajendra Kumar Jain and Ors. pending in the court of metropolitan magistrate, court no.10, Meghani Nagar, Ahmedabad, on the ground that the proceedings in the said case was an example of the extent to which the 525 criminal justice system in subordinate courts in Gujarat is corrupted.

(2.) This writ petition raises important issues of legal and public importance; one amongst them being the validity of the complaint filed in the court of metropolitan magistrate, court no. 10, Ahmedabad in a complaint filed by the said Suresh Kumar Jethalal Sanghvi under sections 406, 420, 504, 506(1) and 114 IPC against 4 persons named therein and consequential bailable warrants issued against the said persons by the said court.

(3.) Many of the issues involved in the writ petition require further consideration, hence it is agreed by all the parties to this petition that those issues can be separately dealt with. The parties are also at ad idem on the issue of the validity of the complaint being decided at this stage itself. Hence in this order of ours we will consider and decide the validity of the complaint referred to hereinabove.

(4.) Though all the parties to this petition are in one voice have agreed to quash the said proceedings. We do not think we should do so on the basis of the concession shown by the parties. In public interest we think it appropriate to consider the merit of the case and decide the legality of the case on the basis of the law applicable and material available in the records.

(5.) It is stated in the writ petition that the writ petitioner with a view to expose the malpractices in the judicial administration in the subordinate courts in Ahmedabad had approached one of the lawyers named in the writ petition to procure a non-bailable warrants against the persons named in the complaint for proving his case of corruption for which the petitioner was ready and willing to pay such money as was demanded by the lawyers concerned.

(6.) Learned counsel appearing for the writ petitioner has in specific terms contended that the contents of the complaint based on which cognizance was taken and bailable warrants were issued are not true and the same is drafted by the lawyers concerned knowing full well that they are untrue and only with a view to obtain a warrant for a monetary consideration.

(7.) From the affidavit filed on behalf of the said lawyers and from the arguments addressed today on their behalf, it is clear that at least as on today they are also in agreement with the writ petitioner that the contents of the complaint are not genuine though they categorically state that the said statement was recorded at the instance of one Suresh Kumar Jethalal Sanghvi who had approached them to file a complaint and on the basis of the facts narrated by him the said complaint was drafted and filed.

(8.) Be that as it may from the above pleadings and the arguments addressed on behalf of the respective parties before us today, it is clear that the complaint in question is a product of fraud and a total abuse of the process of court. There is also serious doubt whether the procedure 526 required under the Code of Criminal Procedure was really followed by the magistrate at all while taking cognizance of the offence alleged. In this background of inherent falsehood that could be ex facie noticed from the contents of the complaint and coupled with the fact admitted by the parties to this petition, it is evident that the said complaint is a fraudulent one, hence, the same is liable to be quashed based on the legal principle that an act in fraud is ab initio void. This principle in our opinion applies to judicial acts also.

(9.) This Court in Express Newspapers Pvt. Ltd. and Ors. v. Union of India and Ors.1 at has held thus :

"Fraud on power voids the order if it is not exercised bona fide for the end design. There is a distinction between exercise of power in good faith and misuse in bad faith. The former arises when an authority misuses its power in breach of law, say, by taking into account bona fide, and with best of intentions, some extraneous matters or by ignoring relevant matters. That would render the impugned act or order ultra vires. It would be a case of fraud on powers. The misuse in bad faith arises when the power is exercised for an improper motive, say, to satisfy a private or personal grudge or for wreaking vengeance of a Minister as in S. Pratap Singh v. State of Punjab, (1964) 4 SCR 733 A power is exercised maliciously if its repository is motivated by personal animosity towards those who are directly affected by its exercise. Use of a power for an 'alien' purpose other than the one for which the power is conferred is mala fide use of that power. Same is the position when an order is made for a purpose other than that which finds place in the order. The ulterior or alien purpose clearly speaks of the misuse of the power and it was observed as early as in 1904 by Lord Lindley in General Assembly of Free Church of Scotland v. Overtown, 1904 AC 515, 'that there is a condition implied in this as well as in other instruments which create powers, namely, that the power shall be used bona fide for the purpose for which they are conferred'. It was said by Warrngton, C.J. in Short v. Poole Corporation, (1926) 1 Ch 66 that: "No public body can be regarded as having statutory authority to act in bad faith or from corrupt motives, and any action purporting to be of that body, but proved to be committed in bad faith or from corrupt motives, would certainly be held to be inoperative." In Lazarus Estates Ltd. V. Beasley, (1956) 2 QB 702 at Pp. 712-13 Lord Denning, LJ. said : "No judgment of a court, no order of minister, can be allowed to stand if it has been obtained by fraud. Fraud unravels everything." (emphasis supplied) See also, in Lazarus case at p. 722 per Lord Parker, C.J. : "'Fraud' vitiates all transactions known to the law of however high a degree of 527 solemnity." All these three English decisions have been cited with approval by this Court in Pratap Singh's case."

(10.) Similar is the view taken by this Court in the case of Ram Chandra Singh v. Savitri Devi and Ors.1 wherein this Court speaking through one of us (Sinha, J.) held thus :
"Fraud as is well known vitiates every solemn act. Fraud and justice never dwell together. Fraud is a conduct either by letter or words, which induces the other person or authority to take a definite determinative stand as a response to the conduct of the former either by word or letter. It is also well settled that misrepresentation itself amounts to fraud. Indeed, innocent misrepresentation may also give reason to claim relief against fraud. A fraudulent misrepresentation is called deceit and consists in leading a man into damage by wilfully or recklessly causing him to believe and act on falsehood. It is a fraud in law if a party makes representations which he knows to be false, and injury ensues therefrom although the motive from which the representations proceeded may not have been bad. An act of fraud on court is always viewed seriously. A collusion or conspiracy with a view to deprive the rights of others in relation to a property would render the transaction void ab initio. Fraud and deception are synonymous. Although in a given case a deception may not amount to fraud, fraud is anathema to all equitable principles and any affair tainted with fraud cannot be perpetuated or saved by the application of any equitable doctrine including res judicata."

(11.) Thus, it is clear a fraudulent act even in judicial proceedings cannot be allowed to stand.
(12.) In view of our finding that the complaint filed before the court of metropolitan magistrate, court no.10 at Ahmedabad in criminal case no.118 of 2004 dated 15.1.2004 is ex facie an act of fraud by a fictitious person, and an abuse of the process court, every and any action taken pursuant to the said complaint gets vitiated. Therefore, we think the complaint registered before the metropolitan magistrate, court no, 10 at Ahmedabad in criminal case no.118 of 2004 dated 15.1.2004 and all actions taken thereon including the issuance of bailable warrants is liable to be declared ab initio void, hence, liable to be set aside.

(13.) We, however, make it clear that the quashing of the abovesaid proceedings before the metropolitan magistrate, court no. 10, Ahmedabad would not in any way exonerate any of the parties to the above writ petition of charges levelled against them and the same will be considered independently and de hors the quashing this criminal proceedings.
(14.) We also make it clear that any observations made in the course of this order in regard to the role played by the respective parties in this episode are only tentative and are made for the limited purpose of deciding the validity of the criminal case pending before the magistrate and the same will not be treated as a conclusive finding in any future proceedings.
(15.) For the reasons stated above, the complaint as well as the entire proceedings culminating in issuance of bailable warrants in criminal case no. 118 of 2004 filed before the metropolitan magistrate, court no. 10, Ahmedabad, are quashed.
(16.) The other issues involved in this case will be separately dealt with.

BARADAKANTA MISHRA COMMISSIONER OF ENDOWMENTS ... Vs... BHIMSEN DIXIT
==========

A) CONTEMPT OF COURT - refuse to follow a High Court decision on count that petition for leave to appeal to supreme court against that High Court decision was pending is wrong and illegitimate – it amounts to deliberate and willful disregard of High Court and is contempt of court

B) PUNISHMENT - senior Judicial Officer with experience of 23 serving as commissioner refused to bound by decision –held – his conduct was clearly malafide, amounts to disobedience and disregard of court- by acting in opposition to authority ,justice and dignity thereof and bringing law in to disrepute – judicial officer rightly held guilty by High court – punishment of Rs 300 as cost confirmed.

C) CONTEMPT BY SUBORDINATE COURTS- the conduct of appellant judicial official is calculated to create confusion in the administration of law – it will undermine respect for law laid down by the High court and impair the constitutional authority of the High court – it is calculated not only to undermine the constitutional authority and respect of the High court but also likely to subvert the rule of law and engenderer harassing uncertainty and confusion in the administration of law .

(1.) The appellant is a member of the Superior Judicial Service of the State of Orissa, He was at 1972 B. Mishra v. B. Dixit on time officiating as District Judge. At the relevant time he was functioning as Commissioner of Hindu Religious Endowments, Orissa. The office of the Commissioner is created by the Orissa Hindu Religious Endowments Act.

(2.) In village Sanabagalpur there are two deities. The Additional assistant Commissioner of Hindu Religious Endowments took action under S. 27 of the said act for appointing an interim trustee of the deities. The person incharge of the deities made an objection under S. 41 of the said Act that the Act did not apply as the deities were consecrated under a private endowment made by him. The Additional Assistant Commissioner rejected the objection by his order dated 26/07/1967. Without making any inquiry under S. 41, he held that prima facie there was a public endowment. He did not appoint the objector as a trustee of the deities. The objector filed a revision under S. 9 of the said Act before the appellant.

(3.) During the period intervening between the rejection of the objection by the Addl. Assistant Commissioner and the filing of the revision by the objector, the identical issue was raised before the Orissa High Court in Bhramarbar Santra v. State of Orissa, ILR 1970 Cut 54 . In that case the High Court held that the Asstt. Commissioner cannot appoint an interim trustee under S. 27 of the said Act until he has held an inquiry under S. 41 and has found that there was no hereditary trustee of the religious institution.

(4.) At the hearing of the revision, the aforesaid decision was cited before the appellant by the applicant. After hearing the parties, the appellant made the following order:

"1... .It is said on behalf of the petitioner that he has filed a petition under Section 41 of the Act. But no evidence is produced to that effect, thereby disclosing that their plea is humbug. The next argument is that the learned Assistant Commissioner should have first decided that the institution has not hereditary trustee. The Assistant Commissioner has impliedly done so.

2. The next argument that without a final declaration as to the nature of the institution, no appointment under Section 27 can be made, does not seem to be correct. The decision in the High Court on Bantala case would not be applicable to this instance. Further against the order, we have moved the Supreme Court and as such, the matter can be safely deemed to be sub judice.

3. In order to establish that the petitioner is the hereditary trustee, he has to file an application under S. 41 of the Act. No doubt the court can initiate such a proceeding, but we should not do it where the institution appears to be safely a public one, in this instance, a Siva temple."

(5.) The applicant filed a writ petition in the High Court against this order. The Division Bench, on hearing the applicant, issued notice for contempt of the High Court to the appellant. The High Court took exception to the following sentence occurring at the end of paragraph 2 in his order: "Further, against the order we have moved the Supreme Court, and as such, the matter can be safely deemed to be sub judice."(6.) The appellant appeared before the High Court in response to the notice. According to him the apparently objectionable sentence in his order "was not at all the basis for (his) decision." He said that the revision was dismissed by him after distinguishing the case before him from the facts of Bharamabar Santra, ILR (1970) Cut 54. He further pleaded "that under the Constitution the decisions of the Supreme Court are law of the land. So, I bona fide, was of the opinion that when a matter is under appeal, or otherwise before the Supreme Court, the point of law, becomes sub judice and only a decision of the Supreme Court in the matter, would be binding on the Subordinate Court". It was also pleaded that the proceeding before him was a administrative proceeding and that the act of not following the decision of the High Court in such a proceeding "may not amount to contempt of court."

(7.) The High Court did not accept his pleas in justification. It was held that the appellant "refused to follow" the decision in Bharamarbar Santra, ILR (1970) Cut 54 . The High Court further held that, "We do not find any trace of bona fides of the contemner in the order dated 19-1-1970... ....The contemner is a senior judicial officer who has already put in 23 years of service; having been recruited as a Munsif he has now risen to the rank of District Judge. We regret to find that though he has functioned as a judicial officer for about 23 years he has not been able to pick up the approach and attitude of a judicial officer and has actuated by the bias so often manifested in actions of the executive today while disposing of a judicial proceeding and when found fault with has come up with the stand that he was acting administratively."

(8.) After examining the matter further, the High Court said:

"The conduct of the contemner far from being bona fide is clearly a mala fide one and he intentionally avoided to follow the decision of this Court by advancing grounds which were most inappropriate." On that view of the matter the High Court found him guilty of contempt of Court and admonished him in open Court and directed him to pay Rs. 300.00 as costs of the proceedings. (9.) Shri Daphtari, counsel for the appellant, rightly did not seek to support the justificatory pleas. His argument now is that the appellant is not guilty of contempt of Court, for the sentence in the appellants' order, found objectionable by the High Court, neither interferes with the administration of justice nor scandalises the High Court.

(10.) Shri Dephtary as well as the Solicitor-General appearing for the State have stated before us that there is no decided case either in support of or against the argument. But the absence of a precedent should not preclude an act being held to be contempt merely because it is novel or unusual provided it is comprehended by the principles underlying the law of contempt to Court. The absence of precedent should however put the court on guard that the area of contempt is not being unduly expanded . The present case then is to be decided on principles and analogy.

(11.) Contempt of Court is disobedience to the court, by acting in opposition to the authority, justice and dignity thereof. It signifies a wilful disregard or disobedience of the court's order; it also signifies such conduct as tends to bring the authority of the court and the administration of law into disrepute.

(12.) It is a commonplace that where the superior courts' order staying proceedings is disobeyed by the inferior court to whom it is addressed, the latter court commits contempt of court, for it acts in disobedience to the authority of the former court. The act of disobedience is calculated to undermine public respect for the superior court and jeopardise the preservation of law and order. The appellant's case is to be examined in the light of the foregoing principles and analogy. (13.) The remark in the appellant's order found objectionable by the High Court is this: "Further, against the order we have moved the Supreme Court, and as such the matter can be safely deemed to be sub judice." It may be observed that on the date of the order nothing was pending in the Supreme Court only a petition was pending in the High Court for a certificate to appeal to the Supreme Court from the decision in Bhramarbar Santra, ILR 1970 Cut 54 . The appellant has thus made wrong statement of fact. Secondly, the use of the personal pronoun "We" is also significant. It indicates that the appellant identified himself as a litigant in the case and did not observe due detachment and decorum as a quasi-judicial authority. Lastly, we agree with the High Court that it is not possible to believe that the appellant could have entertained the view that as soon as a petition for certificate to appeal to the Supreme Court was filed in the High Court against its decision, the binding character of the decision disappeared. He has had 23 years' judicial experience and he could scarcely entertain that belief. We agree with the High Court that the appellant deliberately avoided to follow its decision by giving wrong and illegitimate reasons and that his conduct was "clearly mala fide".

(14.) Under Art. 227 of the Constitution, the High Court is vested with the power of superintendence over the courts and tribunals in the State, Acting as a quasi judicial authority under the Orissa Hindu Religious Endowments Act, the appellant was subject to the superintendence of the High Court.

Accordingly the decision of the High Court were binding on him. He could not get away from them by adducing factually wrong and illegitimate reasons. In East India Commercial Co. Ltd. Calcutta v. The Collector of Customs, Calcutta, (1963) 3 SCR 338 , Subba Rao J. observed: "The Division Bench of the High Court held that a contravention of a condition imposed by a licence issued under the Act is not an offence under S. 5 of the Act. This raises the question whether an administrative tribunal can ignore the law declared by the highest Court in the State and initiate proceedings in direct violation of the law so declared. Under Art. 215, every High Court shall be a court of record and shall have all the powers of such a court including the power to punish for contempt of itself. Under Art. 226, it has a plenary power to issue orders or writs for the enforcement of the fundamental rights and for any other purpose to any person or authority including in appropriate cases any Government, within its territorial jurisdiction. Under Art. 227 it has jurisdiction over all courts and tribunals throughout the territories in relation to which it exercises jurisdiction. It would be anomalous to suggest that a tribunal over which the High Court has superintendence can ignore the law declared by that court and start proceedings in direct violation of it. If a tribunal can do so, all the subordinate courts can equally do so, for there is no specific provision, just like in the case of Supreme Court, making the law declared by the High Court binding on subordinate courts. It is implicit in the power of supervision conferred on a superior tribunal that all the tribunals subject to its supervision should conform to the law laid down by it. Such obedience would also be conducive to their smooth working; otherwise there would be confusion in the administration of law and respect for law would irretrievably suffer."

(15.) . The conduct of the appellant in following the previous decision of the High Court is calculated to create confusion in the administration of law. It will undermine respect for law laid down by the High Court and impair the constitutional authority of the High Court. His conduct is therefore comprehended by the principles underlying the law of contempt. The analogy of the inferior court's disobedience to the specific order of a superior court also suggests that his conduct falls within the purview of the law of contempt. Just as the disobedience to a specific order of the Court undermines the authority and dignity of the court in a particular case, similarly any deliberate and mala fide conduct of not following the law laid down in the previous decision undermines the constitutional authority and respect of the High Court. Indeed, while the former conduct has repercussions on an individual case and on a limited number of persons, the latter conduct has a much wider and more disastrous impact.

(16.) It is calculated not only to undermine the constitutional authority and respect of the High Court generally, but is also likely to subvert the Rule of law and engender harassing uncertainty and confusion in the administration of law. (17.) Our view that a deliberate and mala fide conduct of not following the binding precedent of the High Court is contumacious does not unduly enlarge the domain of contempt. It would not stifle a bona fide act of distinguishing the binding precedent, even though it may turn out to be mistaken.

(18.) As a result of the foregoing discussion, we think that the High Court has rightly found the appellant guilty of contempt. So we dismiss the appeal. Appeal dismissed.

A] Action against Judicial Officer causing illegal arrest– Magistrate acting illegally and without jurisdiction in the matter of arrest is not protected – Magistrate has no absolute protection regard to his act of illegal arrest.

B] First class Magistrate issued letter to appear and directed to show cause against prosecution on the petition filed by another person – When petitioner appeared he was detained to custody – The bail bond furnished by the petitioner were rejected by the Magistrate deliberately – Petitioner claimed that due to such illegal, unauthorized and malafide conduct of the Magistrate in arresting him, he has lowered in the estimation of the public and claimed for the damage – The action of the Magistrate by putting the petitioner under arrest for realinsing the certificate dues by adopting questionable and unlawful method is highly deplorable – It was unbecoming of a Magistrate – It is relevant to investigate to find out the motive, the propriety and the legality of the action of the Magistrate in arresting the petitioner – It is not a judicial act although exercised during the Judicial proceedings – The Magistrate exercised its power with the ulterior object of coercing the petitioner.

C] At page 178 of the 14th Edition of Salmond on Torts it is said -
"The wrong of false imprisonment consists in the act of arresting or imprisoning any person without lawful justification, or otherwise preventing him without lawful justification from exercising his right of leaving the place in which he is."
In my opinion, defendant No. 1 has committed the wrong of false imprisonment in this case.

D] But - "Wherever protection of the exercise of judicial powers applies, it is so absolute that no allegation that the acts or words complained of were done or spoken mala fide, maliciously, corruptly, or without reasonable or probable cause suffices to found an action." Further it has been pointed out under the title "Liability of Magistrates" at page 160 of Volume 25 of Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd Edition, that -

> "Protection is afforded by common law and by statute to justices in respect of acts done in the execution of their duty as such; but this protection does not extend to cases where they have acted either maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause, or without or in excess of their jurisdiction, and in such cases they are liable to an action for damages at the suit of the party "aggrieved,"
>
> A similar passage occurs at page 768 of Volume 38 of the Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd Edition -
>
> A Magistrate or other person acting In a judicial capacity is not liable for acts done within his jurisdiction, but he is liable to an action for false imprisonment If he unlawfully commits a person to prison in a matter in which he has no jurisdiction, provided that he has knowledge, or the means of knowledge of the facts which show that he has no jurisdiction."

Untwalia, J.

(1.) This appeal by the plaintiff arises out of a suit filed by him for a decree for damages for a sum of Rs. 25,000 against the two defendants said to be liable jointly and severally. The plaintiff's case is that he is a colliery proprietor living at village Khanudih, pergana Nawagarh, in the district of Dhanbad. He has got extensive cultivation and is an income-tax paver. He belongs to a respectable Brahmin family of the District of Dhanbad, has got his relations in other districts around and is held in high esteem amongst his caste men and also by his relatives, neighbours and various important persons within the district of Dhanbad. Shri Suresh Chandra Gupta, defendant No. 1 was a Magistrate exercising first Class powers, within the Baghmara Sub-Division and was posted at Dhanbad. Daya Sagar Sharan, defendant No. 2, was an Upper Division Clerk attached to the office of the Deputy Commissioner, Dhanbad. The plaintiff's case is that defendant No. 1, as Sub Divisional Magistrate, Baghmara, at Dhanbad, by memo No. 3818 dated 5-12-60 issued a letter to him asking Mm to appear on 13-12-60 at 10.30 a. m. and directed him to show cause against prosecution on the petition filed by one Mohri Majhi and others. The letter purports to bear the signature of defendant No. 1 with date 3/12. According to the plaintiff, defendant No. 1 was not a Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Baghmara, on 5-12-60 or 13-12-60, he had no authority to issue any memo to the plaintiff directing him to appear, no cognizane of any offence had been taken against the plaintiff and defendant No. 1 exercised his functions arbitrarily in issuing the aforesaid memo. On 13-12-60 the plaintiff came to Dhanbad in connection with some civil work He was standing near the Dhanbad Bar Library. At about 4.15 p. m. defendant No. 2 accompanied by a Court constable came to the Bar Library and told the plaintiff that he was directed by defendant No. 1 to appear in his chamber. The plaintiff accordingly went to his court although he was not holding any court at that time, and he brought the record of C. M. A. No. 24 of 1960, State v. S. N.

Pandey and put the plaintiff to hazat In the said case, no summons was served upon the plaintiff nor was any warrant of arrest for disobedience of the summons issued. There was no occasion for the issue of warrant of arrest and the action of the defendant was wrongful In the 11th paragraph of the plaint the case is that -

"The defendant No. I. Shree S. C. Gupta, a Certificate Officer, Baghmara with inordinate and unbecoming zeal of realising the certificate dues asked the defendant No. 2 to bring the record The plaintiff furnished sureties in the aforesaid Criminal case but the defendant no, 1 in order to coerce and put undue pressure upon the plaintiff for paying up the certificate dues sent the plaintiff to Hazat"

Plaintiffs case further is that he furnished bail bonds but defendant No. 1, on some pretext or other, did not accept the bail bond from 13-12-60 to 16-12-60 Plaintiff's men applied for bail with sureties, who were local men and income-tax payers, but defendant No. 1 illegally on some pretext or other did not pass any order and deferred the matter. On 27-12-60, the plaintiff states, he along with his son Shvama Kanta Pandev who was also a co-accused in a mining case appeared before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Baghmara. at Dhanbad. in that case. Defendant no 1 was doing the work as Sub-Divisional Magistrate and in open court, in presence of litigant public respectable persons and the lawyers be declared that he would put the plaintiff to Hazat if the certificate dues of his son were not paid. No warranf was issued either in C. M. A. 24 of 1960 or in the certificate case pending against the plaintiff, and there was no order that the warrant was to be executed at Dhanbad. Defendants 1 and 2 or the court constable were not armed with any authority to call the plaintiff and put him to Hazat. The first defendant acted mala fide and he had no jurisdiction to act in the manner stated above. Even when the plaintiff furnished proper surety for his appearance, defendant No. 1 raised frivolous objections and intentionally kept the plaintiff in Dhanbad Jail from 13-12-60 to 16-12-60 and coerced the plaintiff to pay the doubtful certificate dues. The plaintiff claims that he is an old managed about 70, he has been lowered in the estimation of the public, his caste men and relations by the illegal, unauthorised and mala fide conduct of the defendants in arresting the plaintiff and they are jointly and severally liable to pay damages at least to the extent of Rs. 25,000/-. Defendant No. 1, even after the said incident of the 13th and 16th December, 1960 in order to vindicate the wrong done to the plaintiff, openly dishonoured the plaintiff on 27-12-60.

(2.) A joint written statement was filed by both the defendants. Their defence, inter alia, is that defendant No. 1 was a Magistrate having first class powers within the territorial jurisdiction and was also vested with powers under Section 190 (1)(a), (b) and (c) of the Code of Criminal Procedure (hereinafter called the Code). He also held power under Sections 260 and 110 of the Code. He was posted in Baghmara Sub-Division at Dhanbad, In the absence of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, he worked as such, defendant No. 2 was an Upper Division Assistant posted in Baghmara Sub-Division, and he worked as Law Clerk there.

(3.) It may be stated here that the local limits of Babghmara Sub-Division are quite distinct and apart from the local limits of the Sadar Sub-Division of Dhanbad. Due to non-availability of the Court buildings at Baghmara, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and other Magistrates are allowed to hold their court in some of the Court buildings at Dhanbad although the court buildings are exclusively within the local limits of the Sadar Sub-Division.

(4.) The defendants' case further is that a petition was filed by Mohri Ma.lM and others on 8-11-60 alleging therein that the petitioners being poor Harijan Adi-vasis were being deprived of their sown paddy as Shri Sailajanand Pande, plaintiff, forcibly cut away the same. Defendant No. 1. While doing the work of the general file of the Sub-Divisional Officer, on 8-11-60 passed orders on the said petition to the effect - "Issue registered notice at once fixing 21-11-60 to show cause against prosecution." Though defendant No. 1 was holding powers under Section 190 of the Code and was in a position also to take cognizance straightway, he refrained from doing so and wanted to give an opportunity to the plaintiff to show cause against prosecution. Even on the adjourned date 13-12-60 as the order sheet shows, he did not appear and file any hazri. Defendant No. 1 worked as Sub-Divisional Officer in absence of the permanent Sub-Divisional Officer, Baghmara, on 3-12-60 and 13-12-60. The plaintiff's case that no summons had been served on him and no warrant was issued against him in C. M. A. 24 of 1960 was denied. It is further pleaded that in C. M. P, case 49 of 1958 the plaintiff was not appearing since cognizance of offence was taken against him on 11-6-58. On 25-6-59 when he appeared in that case, it was transferred to the Court of defendant No. 1. On 21-8-60 and also later the plaintiff chose to remain absent. On 21-11-60 orders were passed to issue fresh warrant of arrest with processes under Section 87 of the Code and the warrant of arrest and the processes were directed to be sent to the Officer in charge of Baghmara Police Station. The next date fixed was 12-12-60. On 12-12-60 the plaintiff who was accused in the case did not turn up. The bail bond furnished earlier was forfeited and show cause notice was issued to the bailor and request was directed to be made to the Deputy Commissioner to depute a section of armed force with a Magistrate to execute the processes and the case was directed to be put on 23-12-60. On 13-12-60 an order was recorded at 4.15 p. m. directing the plaintiff (accused) to be remanded to custody in default of bail of Rs. 1,000 with two sureties of the like amount. Similar order was passed on C. M, A. case 24 of 1960.

(5.) Replying to the allegations contained in paragraph 11 of the plaint, it is stated in the 14th paragraph of the written statement - "That the allegations contained in paragraph 11 of the plaint are not true. The fact is that defendant No. 1 is also the Certificate Officer of Baghmara Sub-Division and when he took over the charge of the department, there were huge amounts pending against a large number cf certificate Debtors and he took a firm attitude and succeeded in rpalising a good amount. There was no question of his showing inordinate and unbecoming zeal against the plaintiff. He took the same attitude and same efforts against the plaintiff as he took against other Certificate Debtors. It is not true that the plaintiff furnished bail and the defendant No. 1 put him into Hazat to coerce and to put undue pressure upon the plaintiff to pay up the Certificate dues." The further plea in the written statement is that no bail was offered by the plaintiff on 13-12-60 when he was directed to furnish a bail and defendant No. 1 had no alternative than to remand him to custody. The bail bond signed by the plaintiff's lawyer on 14-12-60 was filed at 4.15 p. m. Orders were passed to file affidavits of the sureties in accordance with Section 499(3) of the Code. Court was closed on 15-12-60 due to sad demise of the then Jail Minister and the affidavit was filed on 16-12-60 when it was accepted and orders for release of the plaintiff were passed. Defendant No. 1 did not act mala fide. All the allegations of the plaintiff to the contrary are false. The facts as to the incident said to have taken place on 27-12-60 are false. Several criminal cases were pending against the plaintiff in the court of defendant no, 1 and in the circumstances defendant No. 1 was legally justified in sending for the plaintiff and to put him under arrest in accordance with the provisions contained in Section 65 of the Code, It is false to say that the plaintiff was kept in hazat from 13th to 16th December, 1960 to coerce him to pay certificate dues. The plaintiff is not entitled to any amount of damages. All actions of defendant No. 1 were taken bona fide and without any malice and in exercise of his judicial powers. Defendant No. 2 simply carried out the orders of defendant No. 1 which he was bound to do.

(6.) The learned Subordinate Judge who tried the suit has dismissed it holding that -

(i) The issuing of memo No. 3818 dated 3-12-60 by defendant No. 1 calling upon the plaintiff to show cause against prosecution on the petition filed by Mohri Majhi and others was not in any way in contravention of any law.

(ii) The said defendant was legally justified in sending for the plaintiff and in putting him under arrest as the plaintiff did not furnish bail bond. The allegation regarding detention of the plaintiff in prison from 13-12-60 to 16-12-60 in order to coerce him to pay up the certificate dues is not correct.

(iii) The officers who were entrusted with the service of the different processes in the criminal cases did not perform their duties properly and incorrect reports were made in relation to them.

(iv) The arrest of the plaintiff in the Court room of defendant No. 1 must be deemed to be within his territorial jurisdiction and it cannot be said to be illegal on that account.

(v) "Although defendant No. 1 has denied that he put any pressure on the plaintiff for payment of the dues in those cases yet the circumstances go to show that he did put pressure on the plaintiff for how is It that the dues in the different cases amounting to over Rs. 4000 were all on a sudden paid off on one day on 16-12-60 when the plaintiff was in jail and that too by a third person who as appears from the evidence was then on good terms with the plaintiff."

(vi) ".....that the arrest of the plaintiff on 13-12-60 was neither illegal nor without jurisdiction nor was his detention in jail from 13-12-60 to 16-12-60 unlawful."

(vii) Defendant No. 1 was within his rights to arrest him for compelling his attendance (vide order sheets of C. M. A. Case No. 24 of 1960 and C. M. P. case No. 49 of 1958).

(viii) Defendant No. I is protected under Section 1 of the Judicial Officers' Protection Act, 1850 (Central Act XVIII of 1850).

(ix) The evidence is not sufficient to establish the allegations regarding the incident said to have taken place on 27-12-60. The learned Subordinate Judge has assessed a sum of Rs. 4,000 as damages to be awarded to the plaintiff if he would have otherwise been found entitled to it. The plaintiff has come up in appeal from the decree of dismissal of his suit.

(7) At the outset, I may state that although I do not approve of all that has been said by the learned Subordinate Judge in connection with the action tsken by defendant No. 1 on the petition filed by Mohri Majhi and others, I do not consider it necessary to examine the evidence or discuss any point with reference to it. No action was taken against the plaintiff nor was he arrested and remanded to custody on 13-12-60 in connection with the petition filed by Mohri Majhi and others, upon which a mere show cause notice had been issued against him (plaintiff). The claim of damages either on account of the allegedly false imprisonment or defamation could obviously be not related to, and substantiated upon, the action of defendant No. 1 in issuing a show cause notice against prosecution on the petition filed by Mohri! Majhi and others. This was conceded to by Mr. S. C. Ghosh, learned Counsel for the plaintiff appellant. No argument of any substance could be advanced by him to press the appeal in relation to the story of the alleged defamation on 27-12-60 in the court of defendant No. 1. No claim of any amount of damages could be substantiated with reference to the alleged incident of the 27th December, 1960. I shall, therefore, not refer to the evidence in this regard either.

(8) What remains, however, to be considered is the facts and the consequences in relation to the arrest of the plaintiff on 13-12-60 and his detention la prison from that date to 16th or 17th December, 1960.

(9) The plaintiff's case is that defendant No. 1 who was a certificate Officer of Baghmara put the plaintiff in Hazat in order to coerce him and put undue pressure on him for paying up the certificate dues. This fact Is not disputed in the written statement rather tacitly it is admitted when it is said in its 14th paragraph that when defendant No. 1 took charge as a Certificate Officer of Bagh-mara, huge amounts were due against a large number of certificate debtors and he took a firm attitude and succeeded in realising a good amount, and he took the same attitude and made the same efforts against the plaintiff as he did against others. The evidence of P. W. 7, Rabindra Kumar Chatterjee, who was the plaintiff's Mukhtear, is that on 14-12-60 when he filed the bail bond, Gupta Saheb (defendant No. 1) said to Daya Sagar Sharan (defendant No. 21 that he should bring the list of the amount due from the plaintiff and his relations, in respect of which there were certificate cases. Defendant No. 2 submitted the list which was eventually marked Ext. 2, Gupta Saheb said that bail would not be allowed until the money in respect of the certificate cases was realised. In the last hour on that very date two cheques of the amounts of Rs. 1,400 and Rs. 3,400 were produced in the court of Gupta Saheb by one Kaluram ARarwala on behalf of the plaintiff. Gupta Saheb ordered that so long the cheques would not be encashed, he would not accept the same. On 16-12-60 affidavits were asked to be sworn by the bailors. Kaluram Agarwala had to execute indemnity bond in respect of the two cheques which he had issued; the indemnity bond is Ex. 10. Bail was accepted at about 4 or 4.30 P. M. on 16-12-60 after the filing of the indemnity bond. More or less, to the same effect is the evidence of P. Ws. 8, 9 and 10. the last being the plaintiff. Their evidence finds support from the documents and seems to have been accepted by the court below also.

(10) Although some order sheets Jn connection with other mining cases were also produced and exhibited on behalf of the defendants, to wit. Exts. 8/e -- order sheet of C. M. A. 26/60, 8/f -- order sheet of C. M. P. -- 58/58 and 8/g -- order sheet of C. M. A. 16/60, nothing turns upon these order sheets as no special facts are mentioned in them nor was any pleaded or deposed to with reference to them. The two main order sheets relating to two mining cases which deserve discussion are Ext. O -- order sheet of C. M. P. ('Cr. A. Suit') No. 24 of 1960 and O/1 -- order sheet of C. M P. No. 49 of 1958. Their relative complaint petitions are Exts. J/1 and J respectively. Ext. O shows that cognizance of this case was taken on 24-2-60. The case was in respect of a minor offence and is triable as a summons case. The finding of the learned Subordinate Judge is that summons was not served. The order sheet shows that an order was recorded on 22-9-60 that service report of summons against all the accused persons was received back after service anywhere, but the accused were absent and, there-fore, bailable warrant of arrest was directed to be issued. Warrant of arrest, however, was actually issued on 28- 10-60/29-10-60, and since the execution report was not received, warrant of arrest was re-issued on 21- 11-60 fixing 13-12-60 as the date of return. On 28-11-60 one accused surrendered and was enlarged on bail of Rs, 500. On 13-12-60 the following order was recorded. "Accused Pashupati Pandey files hazri E. R. of W/A against S. N. Pandey received unexecuted with a report that Arms force and a Magistrate may kindly be deputed for execution of W/A and process under Ss 87 and 88, Cr. P. C. I have separately written to S. D. O. in certificate matter for deputing armed forces with a Magistrate long ago. Bench clerk will send a copy of this to Deputy Commissioner for the deputation. Put up on 23-12-60." The finding of the learned Subordinate Judge -- (and his finding either on the question of service of summons or in this regard was not challenged) -- is that no attempt was made to serve the warrant of arrest on the plaintiff. I, however, do not attach much importance to this fact as at best it can lead to the conclusion that strong steps were unjustifiably directed to be taken against the plaintiff by recording the order dated 13-12-60. Nonetheless the steps taken were during the course of a judicial proceeding. The Magistrate gets absolute protection in this regard, under the Judicial Officers' Protection Act, 1850 (Central Act XVIII of 1850) But what happened after 4 p. m. on 13-12-60 is a matter of serious comment and consequence. There is no gainsaying the fact that the plaintiff was called by defendant No. 1 through the agency of defendant No. 2 and a court constable from a place near the Bar Library to his court room or to a part of it which was being used as his chamber. No fresh warrant of arrest was issued by defendant No. 1 directing any proper person to execute it. His stand is that in exercise of his powers under Section 65 of the Code he arrested the plaintiff and on his failure to file the bail of Rs. 1.000 and two sureties of the like amount, he remanded him to custody. The order which was recorded at 4.15 p. m. on 13-12-60 runs as follows--

"Sri Daya Sagar Sharan a U. D. assistant informed this Court that the accused who is also certificate debtor in many certificate cases is loitering and going away to Bar Library side. This Court deputed court constable to send for the accused who came. The accused is remanded to custody in default of bail of Rs. 1,000 with 2 sureties of the like amount Put up on the date fixed i. e. 23-12-60."

No reason is recorded In this order as to why this extraordinary and over zealous step was taken by the Magistrate to put the accused (plaintiff) under arrest in exercise of his powers under Section 65 of the Code. Even the fact of his arrest is not noted in the order sheet, merely the fact of the accused being remanded to custody for default of bail was recorded. The reference to the fact of the plaintiff being a certificate debtor in many ceitificate cases clearly shows the domi-nent object of the arrest, which was to coerce the plaintiff to pay up the certificate dues, as is so obvious from the undisputed facts relating to the payment of the certificate dues and the release of the plaintiff on bail. The action of the Magistrate, to say the least, is highly deplorable. To achieve the object of realising the certificate dues by adopting questionable and unlawful method of putting the plaintiff under arrest was unbecoming of a Magistrate who claimed to be acting as the Sub-Divisional Officer and Sub-Divisional Magistrate on 13-12-60 in absence of the permanent Sub-Divisional Officer. It will not be necessary for me in this case to lay stress upon the fact of not releasing the plaintiff on bail for 3 days as it seems to me. this part of the action of the Magistrate is in exercise of his judicial power which is absolutely protected under Central Act XVIII of 1850. No investigation can be made to find out the motive of the Magistrate in not releasing the plaintiff on bail. No facts can be entertained and no enquiry can be made in this suit to show that the learned Magistrate acted mala fide in not directing the release of the plaintiff on bail. But the very same facts become relevant for investigation to find out the motive, the propriety and the legality of the action of the Magistrate in arresting the plaintiff in exercise of his powers under Section 65 of the Code, as it appears to me that the power aforesaid or the exercise of it is administrative or executive and is not a judicial power although it may have been exercised during the pendency of a judicial proceeding.

(11) Similar is the position with reference to Ext. O/1, the order sheet of C. M. P. 49/58, In that case the accused was present on several dates. The case lingered on for quite a good number of days. Thereafter he wasabsenton 21-11-60. The order dated 21-11-60 shows that execution report of the warrant of arrest was received back intimating that the accused was evading arrest and. therefore, fresh warrant was directed to be issued with processes under Sections 87 and 83 of the Code fixing 12-12-60 as the date for return. On 12-12-60 an order of the kind which was recorded in the other case on 13-12-60 to execute the warrant with the help of an armed force was recorded in this case also. Whatever I have said above in connection with Ext O applies on all fours to the facts of Ext O/1. It is true that one may say that the Magistrate could arrest and arrested the plaintiff in the criminal cases pending against him for violation of certain provisions of the Mines Act or the Rules. The arrest by the Magistrate, however, under Section 65 of the Code would still be an executive action. On the facts and in the circumstances of this case. I am not prepared to hold that the Magistrate took an extraordinary step by sending for the plaintiff to his court and putting him under arrest in order to bring to conclusion the mining cases against him. I have: no doubt in mv mind that the only object or in any event the dominant object of putting the plaintiff under arrest in exercise of the powers under Section 65 of the Code was to coerce him to pay the certificate dues.

(12.) Exts. 8/i. 8/j. 8/q, 8/r and 8/h are the order sheets of the various certificate cases. The main order recorded in Ext 8/q on 16-12-60 runs thus:

"Received cheque No. 31078635 dated 14-12-60 of Jharia Industrial Bank Private Ltd. for Rs. 1435.41 (Rupees one thousand four hundred thirty five and Np. forty one only) against D. M. B. H. case No. 54/58-59. 21/59-60. 147/53-54, 46/58-59. 48/57-58. 107/56-57, 97/54-55. 227/50-51. 226'50-5I. Misc. No. 18 of 1960-61. 250/53-54. Misc. 42/56-57. 66/57-58, 19 59-60 send It to the Bank for encashment and put with challan."

Ext. 2 is the list of all the amounts said to be due from the plaintiff in the various certificate cases. This was in the handwriting of defendant No. 2. as is the unchallenged evidence of the nephew of the plaintiff. P. W. 8. In the first part of the list, the total amount shown due is Rs. 1,435.41 Np. and thereafter there is an endorsement on this list to this effect: -- "Paid by Ch, No. 078635 dated 14-12-60 Rs. 1,435.41 Np. on 14-12-60." In the second part of the list, after mentioning the details and the total dues of Rs. 3,248.22 Np. it is noted - "Paid Che. No. 078636 dated 14-12-60 Rs. 3,248.22 Np," The indemnity bond (Ext. 10) executed by Kaluram Heliwal who had paid the entire amount of the certificate dues by the two cheques is dated 16-12-60 and it runs as follows :--

"I, Sri Kaluram Heliwal son of Bhairo Ram Heliwal of Baghmara P. S. do hereby stand surety for the cheque No. JI 078635 dated 14-11-60 for Rs. 1,435.41 Np. and cheque No. JI 078636 dated 14-11-60 for Rs. 3,248.22 Np. presented to the Certificate Officer, Baghmara at Dhanbad in Certificate cases against Sri S. N. Pandey son of Late Shamlal Pandey of village Khenudih P. S. Baghmara and promise to pay in cash in the event of the cheque being dishonoured within a day and hence Sri S. N. Pandey will not be responsible or liable for the dues in which payment have been made by the above cheques." It is, therefore, manifest that the entire amount for which numerous certificate proceedings were said to be pending against the plaintiff and/or others were realised in the high-handed and unlawful manner by illegally arresting the plaintiff and detaining him in prison. It is here that a court of law comes under a duty for the enforcement of the rule of law. No executive action, whatever may be its object -- good or bad, can be allowed to exceed the limits of law. The Certificate Officer had no power like the one engrafted in Section 65 of the Code to arrest the plaintiff. No such provision exists in relation to the exercise of the various powers of directing arrest under the Code of Civil Procedure. I am constrained to say that defendant No. 1 in the garb of exercising his power ostensibly in the criminal cases for the alleged violation of the mining law by the plaintiff exercised it mala fide with the ulterior object of coercing the plaintiff to pay the amounts said to be due from him in the various certificate cases. The evidence of the plaintiff who has examined himself as P. W. 10 is that on his release from jail he took copies of certain papers of the certificate cases from which he came to know that he was not liable to pay the amounts which were realised from him. This evidence dees not seem to be quite correct. Yet it finds some support from the evidence of defendant No. 1 who has examined himself as D, W. 2. In cross-examination he had to admit that from the record it did not, appear that Sailaja Nanda Pandey meaning thereby the plaintiff had any liability in the two cases which in the narration of his deposition were the first two ones. The evidence of D. W. 2 that when the plaintiff came on being called by him through the constable, he asked him to furnish bail of Rs. 1,000 with two sureties and then he said that he would not furnish the bail, the Magistrate may do whatever he liked is obviously not correct. There is no such case in the written statement. In evidence the Magistrate fights shy of admitting that he arrested the plaintiff first and then asked him to furnish bail. But obviously he could not ask him. to furnish bail without arresting him. The circumstances as they appear from the records are so overwhelming that I am not prepared to believe the evidence of D. W. 2 when he says that he sent for him on 13-12-60 on the basis of the orders recorded in C. M. A. case No. 24/60 and C. M. P. case No. 49/58 because from those orders it appeared that the accused was evading arrest. It will be remarkable to accept the evidence that a Magistrate who merely worked as Sub-Divisional Magistrate on a few days when the regular Sub-Divisional Magistrate was not able to attend to his duties would be able to remember about a particular accused, call him and put him under arrest in connection with minor summons cases which would have been pending against him. Clearly, as is his case also, defendant was over zealous in realising the certificate dues somehow or the other by hook or by crook. In this case also he did succeed in realising the dues as eventually the orders recorded in the order sheets of the certificate cases show. But at what cost? A court of law cannot allow to go unnoticed the unlawful, illegal and overzealous action of the executive for the realisation of the certificate dues.

(12.) Exts. 8/i. 8/j. 8/q, 8/r and 8/h are the order sheets of the various certificate cases. The main order recorded in Ext 8/q on 16-12-60 runs thus:

Ext. 2 is the list of all the amounts said to be due from the plaintiff in the various certificate cases. (13.) The learned Subordinate Judge has mixed up the exercise of the power of arrest under Section 65 of the Code with the fact of not enlarging the plaintiff on bail for 3 days resulting in his detention in prison. His view that neither the arrest of the plaintiff on 13-12-60 was illegal and without jurisdiction nor was his detention in jail from 13-12-60 to 16-12-60 unlawful is not correct. I, however, do not find it necessary to examine the correctness of his views in regard to the detention of the plaintiff in jail from 13-12-60 to 16-12-60. But having held that the arrest of the plaintiff by defendant No. 1 on 13-12-60 was made illegally and mala fide, I now proceed to examine as to whether it was with or without jurisdiction.

(14.) As stated above, the local limits of the jurisdiction of defendant No. 1 were the entire Baghmara Sub-Division and no part of the court precincts at Dhanbad was within the local limits of his jurisdiction. The learned Subordinate Judge has said that it would appear to be an anomalous position that the Magistrate can order the arrest of the plaintiff sitting in the court room at Dhanbad but could not take any action against him in that court room. On this apparent anomaly he has taken the view that arrest of the plaintiff in the court room of defendant No. 1 must be deemed to be within his territorial jurisdiction, I do not accept this view as correct. We asked the learned Additional Government Pleader to show us the notification prescribing the limits of the jurisdiction of defendant No. 1 when he was posted at Dhanbad as Magistrate, 1st Class, Bagh-mara Sub-Division. He could not do so, Nothing could be shown to us that the jurisdiction of defendant No. 1 extended beyond the local limits of Baghmara Sub-Division. I find no principle like the one of International Law applicable to ships on high seas, to enable me to uphold the view of the learned Subordinate Judge that the Court precinct of defendant No. 1 at Dhanbad can be treated as part of the area of Baghmara Sub-Division. That being so, it is obvious that defendant No. 1 exercised his power under Section 65 of the Code not only with an ulterior motive as held above but also beyond the local limits of his jurisdiction. It amounted to false imprisonment making defendant No. 1 liable to pay damages in tort. Defendant No. 2, however, cannot be fastened with any liability in the matter. He committed no wrong in merely calling the plaintiff from the Bar Library to the court room of defendant No. 1 in pursuance of his order. He took no part in putting the plaintiff under arrest.

(15.) At page 178 of the 14th Edition of Salmond on Torts it is said -

"The wrong of false imprisonment consists in the act of arresting or imprisoning any person without lawful justification, or otherwise preventing him without lawful justification from exercising his right of leaving the place in which he is."

In my opinion, defendant No. 1 has committed the wrong of false imprisonment in this case.

(16.) The judgment of the Assam High Court in Anowar Hussain v. Ajoy Kumar Mukherjee, AIR 1959 Assam 28 has been upheld by the Supreme Court in Anowar Hussain v. Ajoy Kumar Mukherjee, AIR 1965 SC 1651. It has been pointed out by the Supreme Court that the Act of 1850 "protects a Judicial Officer only when he is acting in his judicial capacity and not in any other capacity." It has been observed further -

"But within the limits of its operation it grants large protection to Judges and Magistrates acting in the discharge of their judicial duties. If the act done or ordered to be done in the discharge of judicial duties is within his jurisdiction, the protection is absolute and no enquiry will be entertained whether the act done or ordered was erroneously, irregularly or even illegally, or was done or ordered without believing in good faith, that he had jurisdiction to do or order the act complained of. If the act done or ordered is not within the limits of his jurisdiction, the Judicial Officer acting in the discharge of his judicial duties is still protected, if at the time of doing or ordering the act complained of, he in good faith believed himself to have jurisdiction to do or order the act. The expression 'jurisdiction' does not mean the power to do or order the act impugned, but generally the authority of the Judicial Officer to act in the matter: Tayen v. Ram Lal, ILR 12 All 115."

It will be useful to note here the reasons for such protection from Article 1352 at page 707 of Volume 30 of Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd Edition. The passage reads thus :--

"The object of judicial privilege is not to protect malicious or corrupt judges, but to protect the public from the danger to which the administration of justice would be exposed if the persons concerned therein were subject to inquiry as to malice, or to litigation with those whom their decisions might offend. It is necessary that such persons should be permitted to administer the law not only independently and freely and without favour, but also without fear." In the same volume at page 709 Article 1354 describes as to what proceedings are protected and Article 1355 states about the extent of protection. It is said at page 709 - "The protection of judicial privilege applies only to judicial proceedings as contrasted with administrative or ministerial proceedings; and, where a judge acts both judicially and ministerial or administratively, the protection is not afforded to acts done in the latter capacity ..... Duties, however, which are partly judicial and partly ministerial, such as the duty of admittng to bail, are not sever-able so as to admit of liability for any part of the acts done in fulfilment thereof,"

But - "Wherever protection of the exercise of judicial powers applies, it is so absolute that no allegation that the acts or words complained of were done or spoken mala fide, maliciously, corruptly, or without reasonable or probable cause suffices to found an action." Further it has been pointed out under the title "Liability of Magistrates" at page 160 of Volume 25 of Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd Edition, that -

"Protection is afforded by common law and by statute to justices in respect of acts done in the execution of their duty as such; but this protection does not extend to cases where they have acted either maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause, or without or in excess of their jurisdiction, and in such cases they are liable to an action for damages at the suit of the party "aggrieved,"

A similar passage occurs at page 768 of Volume 38 of the Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd Edition -

"A Magistrate or other person acting In a judicial capacity is not liable for acts done within his jurisdiction, but he is liable to an action for false imprisonment If he unlawfully commits a person to prison in a matter in which he has no jurisdiction, provided that he has knowledge, or the means of knowledge of the facts which show that he has no jurisdiction."

(17.) The relevant part of Section 1 of the Judicial Officers' Protection Act, 1850 runs thus -

"No Judge. Magistrate. Justice of the Peace, Collector or other person acting judicially shall be liable to be sued in anv Civil Court for any act done or ordered to be done by him in the discharge of his judicial duty, whether or not within the limits of his jurisdiction: Provided that he at the time, in good faith, believed himself to have jurisdiction to do or order the act complained of ....."

(18.) In the first Instance, I am of the view that the act of arrest of the plaintiff done by defendant No. 1 was not such that the Magistrate can be said to be acting judicially within the meaning of the law engrafted in the Act of 1850; it was an administrative or executive act The act of refusing to enlarge the plaintiff on bail was a judicial act Sitting in the court room at Dhanbad and exercising powers as the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Baghmara Sub-Division, defendant No. 1, was acting judicially within the limits of his jurisdiction in not ac-cepting the bail offered on behalf of the plaintiff for 2 or 3 days. In that regard defendant No. 1 has got the absolute protection. In the second place assuming, however, for the sake of argument that even while making the arrest under Sec-tion 65 of the Code defendant No. 1 was acting judicially, he was not so acting within the limits of his jurisdiction. Section 65 did not in terms authorise the Magistrate to arrest, the plaintiff within the court precincts situated within the Sadar Sub-Division of Dhanbad. It is neither the case of defendant No. 1 nor are there any materials to indicate that at the time he so acted, in good faith he believed himself to have jurisdiction to do the act complained of. With due care and caution, he must have been aware that his court was not at a place which was within the local limits of his jurisdiction. Even on interpreting the provision of law contained in Act XVIII of 1850 in the light of what has been said in the different passages extracted above from Halsbury's Laws of England, I have arrived at the conclusion that the Magistrate has no absolute protection in regard to his act of arrest of the plaintiff. It Is a qualified protection, and on my finding that he acted illegally, mala fide and without jurisdiction in the matter of arrest of the plaintiff, defendant No. 1 Is still liable in tort to pay damages to the plaintiff. The view I have just expressed can be lent support to by the decision of Diplock, J., as he then was, in O'Connor v. Isaacs, (1956) 1 All ER 513. While holding on the facts of that case that the plaintiff has established 8 right of action at common law for false imprisonment against some of the defendants , the learned Judge was of the opinion that the action was barred by law of limitation. The decision was upheld by the Court of Appeal in O'Connor V. Isaacs, (1956) 2 All EH 417.

(19.) The learned Additional Government Pleader on the authority of the decision of the Supreme Court in Nana-lal Zaber v. Bombay Life Assurance Co. Ltd., 1950 SCR 391 = (AIR 1950 SC 172) submitted that even if one of the motives of defendant no, 1 was to arrest the plaintiff for realization of the certificate dues, the act of arrest being also with the object of compelling his attendance in the mining cases cannot be said to be tantamount to false imprisonment. I am unable to accept this argument. In the first place. I have held that the only object or, in any event, the dominant object was to arrest the plaintiff to force him to pay the certificate dues. In the second place even assuming that one of the motives for arrest was to bring to conclusion the mining cases, still the arrest was beyond the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Magistrate. The principle enunciated by the Supreme Court with reference to the exercise of the powers of the Directors of a company in a meeting cannot apply to the facts of the instant case.

(20.) For determining as to what should be the proper amount of damages to be awarded in this case, it will be useful to quote a passage from paragraph 850 at page 721 of the 12th Edition of Mayne and McGregor on Damages -

"The details of how the damages are worked out in false imprisonment are few: generally it is not a pecuniary loss but a loss of dignity and the like, and Is left much to the jury and their discretion. The principal heads of damage would appear to be the injury to liberty, i. e., the loss of time considered primarily from a non-pecuniary viewpoint, and the injury to feelings. i. e., the indignity, mental suffering, disgrace, and humiliation with any attendant loss of social status. This will all be Included in the general damages which are usually awarded in these cases ....."

No claim for special damages has been made or proved in this case. Taking into consideration all that has been said by the learned Subordinate Judge in connection with the quantum of damages Which he fixed at Rs. 4,000 and the facts in relation to which could not be challenged before us, I think the plaintiffs Stand will be vindicated and justice would be met by awarding a sum of Rs. 1,000 only as damages to him against defendant No. 1.

(21.) In the result I allow the appeal, set aside the Judgment and decree of the court below and award a decree for Rs. 1.000 only to the plaintiff against defendant No. 1 with proportion.

Equality before law and equal protection of law – constitution of India Article 14 – criminal trial – Held- article 14 assures to the citizen equality not only in respect substantive law but also procedural law- the procedure is still available where these substantive right of relief and defence secured- when two persons are equally situated (para4)

(1.) THE four petitioners before us were put up before the Presidency Magistrate. 9th Court, under Section 302 read with Section 34, Penal Code. The learned Presidency Magistrate after following the procedure laid down in Section 207a, Criminal P. C. came to the conclusion that the accused should be committed for trial and thereupon he passed an order of commitment. Before the order was passed the accused applied to the learned Magistrate that they should be permitted to lead evidence to disprove the allegations made against them by the prosecution. This application was rejected by the learned Magistrate on the ground that there was no provision in law for defence evidence. The petitioners have now come before us under Article 227 praying that we should quash the Order of commitment on the ground that the new procedure followed by the learned Magistrate under Section 207a was contrary to the Constitution inasmuch as it offended against Article 14 and also on the ground that on merits the commitment order was bad.

(2.) NOW, the Constitutional aspect of this petition raises a rather interesting question. The amendment of the Criminal Procedure Code which was effected recently by Act 26 of 1955 has made a rather redical change in the procedure to be followed in inquiries into cases triable by the Court of Session, and broadly speaking the amendment is this. Whereas under the Old Code the same procedure had to be followed in these inquiries, whether the accused was put up on a private complaint or as a result of a police report, the amendment makes a distinction in the procedure to be followed in these inquiries according as to whether the accused is put up on a private complaint or as a result of a police report. As we shall presently point out, whereas the procedure to be adopted in proceedings instituted on a police report is intended for the purpose of bringing about an expeditious end to the inquiry so that the accused should be able to stand his trial in the Court of Session as soon as possible in case he is committed, in the case of procedure to be followed in inquiries where the accused is put up as a result of a private complaint the procedure is much more elaborate and what is urged before us is that there is a discrimination as between one accused and another although they may be charged with the same offence and in the procedure that has got to be followed in the case of an accused where proceedings are instituted against him on a police report he is deprived of important rights which arc vouchsafed to the accused in the other case, and what is urged is that the most important right that the accused is deprived of in cases falling under Section 207a where the procedure has to be followed in proceedings instituted on a police report is that he is prevented from calling evidence in his defence, and the other right which is suggested he is deprived of is a right to go to the High Court under Section 215 in order to have the order of commitment quashed.

(3.) NOW, Sub-section (4) of the new Section 207a provides :

"the Magistrate shall then proceed to take the evidence of such persons, if any, as may be produced by the prosecution as witnesses to the actual commission of the offence alleged; and if the Magistrate is of opinion that it is necessary in the interests of justice to take the evidence of any one or more of the other witnesses for the prosecution, he may take such evidence also. "

Then Sub-section (5) gives the accused the liberty to cross-examine the witnesses examined under Sub-section (4) and the right of the prosecutor to re-examine them. Sub-section (6) provides that after the evidence referred to in Sub-section (4) has been taken and the Magistrate has considered all the documents referred to in Section 173 and has if necessary, examined the accused for the purpose of enabling him to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him and given the prosecution and the accused an opportunity of being heard, such Magistrate shall, if he is of the opinion that such evidence and documents disclose no grounds for committing the accused person for trial, record his reasons and discharge him, unless it appears to the Magistrate that such person should be tried before himself or some other Magistrate, in which case he shall proceed accordingly. Then Sub-section (7) deals with the order of commitment and it provides:

"when, upon such evidence being taken, such documents being considered, such examination (if any) being made and the prosecution and the accused being given an opportunity of being heard, the Magistrate is of opinion that the accused should be committed for trial, he shall frame a charge under his hand, declaring with what offence the accused is charged. "

What is pointed out is that under Sub-section (4) the only right that the Magistrate has is to take the evidence of the witnesses produced by the prosecution and further in the interests of justice to take the evidence of any one or more of the other witnesses for the prosecution. It is pointed out that this sub-section clearly prevents the Magistrate from taking the evidence on behalf of the defence, even though such evidence may be in the interests of justice. It is said that the accused may be in a position to call a witness who would conclusively prove that the accused was not guilty of the offence with which he was charged, the witness may be in the nature of an alibi witness and he may establish that at the material date the accused was not at the scene of the offence but was somewhere else, and yet it is said that the amended Code does not permit the Magistrate to take such evidence. It is further said that the accused has a right at this stage to an order of discharge if by leading evidence he can secure it and he cannot be deprived of that right. In contrast to this it is pointed out that under Section 208 and the following sections which provide for procedure to be followed in proceedings instituted otherwise than on a police report, that is, on a private complaint, the accused has been fully safeguarded by vouchsafing to him the right to call evidence in defence. Section 208 (1) casts an obligation upon the Magistrate to hear the complainant and take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution or on behalf of the accused or as may be called for by the Magistrate. It is further pointed out that under Section 212 discretion is given to the Magistrate to examine any witness named in any list which is to be furnished after the Magistrate has framed the charge. Therefore it is pointed out that the accused under the old procedure is permitted to lead evidence at two stages; before the framing of the charge and after the framing of the charge. The Magistrate may not frame the charge at all after hearing the evidence called by the accused and even after he has framed the charge if after hearing further evidence led by the accused he is satisfied that the accused should not be committed to the Court of Session, he can cancel the charge and discharge the accused.

(4.) IT is therefore strenuously urged by Mr. Kavelkar that the amendment of the Code deprives the accused, who has been proceeded against on a police report, of a substantive right of relief and defence, and in so depriving him Section 207a offends against Article 14 of the Constitution because this important right of defence and relief has been secured to the accused who is being proceeded against on a private complaint. Mr. Kavelkar is right when he urges that Article 14 assures to the citizen equality not only in respect of a substantive law but also procedural law, and if any procedure is set up which deprives a citizen of substantive rights of relief and defence the citizen is entitled to complain of this procedure if to persons equally situated the older procedure is still available where these substantive rights of relief and defence were secured. In the first place, it must, be borne in mind that Chap. XVIII of the Code deals with inquiries and not with trials. The object of this inquiry is to enable the Magistrate to determine whether there is a prima facie case for the committal of the accused. The Magistrate in a sense is not deciding anything at all. He is not passing any order which substantially affects the accused. He holds an inquiry and decides whether the materials placed before him are such as to make it necessary that the accused should stand his trial before the Court of Session. Therefore, when the petitioners say that they have been deprived of their right of defence and of leading evidence, in one sense it is not a justifiable complaint because whatever evidence they have to lead they can lead before the Court of Session. It is that Court in which they would be tried and it is in relation to that Court that the question has got to be asked whether in their trial in that Court they have been deprived of any substantive right of defence or relief. In the Supreme Court case on which Mr. Kavelkar relies and which had to consider cases of procedure, it will be noticed that in all those cases the accused were deprived of certain important rights in the trial of the cases against them. In the matter before us we are not dealing with trial, but we are dealing with an inquiry which is antecedent to the trial. It should also be borne in mind that the amendment of the Code has been brought about with the express purpose of ensuring a speedy trial and to prevent harassment to the accused. All cases to which Chap. XVIII applies are in their very nature serious cases and serious cases normally are investigated into by the police and proceedings are instituted on a police report. There are cases where a complainant may put a complaint on the file of the criminal Court even with regard to a case which should normally be investigated by the police. Even so the Magistrate has the power to refer the complaint for investigation to the police and if on that investgation the police makes a report then again the case would fall under the provisions of Section 207a. But Mr. Kavlekar is right that even so some cases may remain where the police mayrefuse to take up the matter and the case may proceed on a private complaint. Ordinarily such cases must be those about which the police feel that either they are frivolous or they are actuated by private vendetta and there are not sufficient materials to justify a police investigation. It is in these very cases that the accused re-quire proper protection and the policy of the law is not concerned if there is delay in disposal of such private complaints. It is because of this that the old procedure is retained with regard to an inquiry instituted as a result of private complaints. That procedure makes possible a very elaborate inquiry, formal evidence is called by the accused and a consideration by the Magistrate both of the evidence led by the prosecution and the evidence led by the accused. But with regard to the right of the accused, to call evidence, although there is no specific provision in Section 207a itself, we refuse to countenance the suggestion made by Mr. Kavlekar that in the interest of justice even if the Magistrate wanted to hear evidence called by the accused he is precluded from doing so. Indeed that is the view taken by the learned Magistrate in the matter before us. In the first place, it must be borne in mind that when Sub-section (4) of Section 207 A speaks of "other witnesses for the prosecution," it assumes that all material witnesses are and must be witnesses for the prosecution. The law is well settled that it is not open to the prosecution or to the police investigating an offence only to place before the Court, witnesses who support the prosecution story. If there are other material witnesses who support the defence of the accused, it is equally the duty of the prosecution to call them. Undoubtedly there may be witnesses supporting the accused whom the prosecution may consider untrustworthy, in which case there would be no obligation on the prosecution to treat them as prosecution witnesses. Therefore the situation would rarely arise where a material witness who would support the defence would not be called by the prosecution under the provisions of Section 207a itself. But we must contemplate a case where for some reason or other the prosecution does not choose to call a witness who is material and who supports the accused. Is it suggested that there is no power in the Magistrate to call such a witness? In our opinion, the clear answer to this conundrum placed before us by Mr. Kavlekar is Section 540. That is a very wide section and confers power upon every Criminal Court at any stage of inquiry, trial or other proceeding under the Code to summon any person as a witness, or examine any person in attendance, though not summoned as a witness, or recall and re-examine any person already examined; and the Court shall summon and examine or recall and re-examine any such person if his evidence appears to it essential to the just decision of the case. Therefore, it is obligatory upon the Court to summon a person if his evidence is necessary for the just decision of the case, and if the accused makes an application to call a particular witness and if that witness is a material witness and it would help the Magistrate to come to a just decision then undoubtedly under Section 540 not only the Magistrate would have the discretion to call him, but there would be a duty upon him to summon that witness and examine him. Therefore, in our opinion, the learned Magistrate was wrong when he rejected the application of the petitioners to call evidence on the ground that there was no provision in law for a defence witness. He should have considered the nature of the evidence and should have exercised his discretion under Section 540 and if he had come to the conclusion that any of the witnesses was essential to the just decision of the case then it was his duty to summon such witness. (5.) IT is then said that the accused in this case has been deprived of the right to approach the High Court under Section 215. Under that section it is provided:

"a commitment once made under Section 213 by a competent Magistrate or by a civil or Revenue Court under Section 478, can be quashed by the High Court only, and only on a point of law. "

Therefore, this section provided a certain limitation upon the power of the High Court in the case of commitment orders passed under Section 213. If an order of commitment was passed under Section 213 then it could be quashed only by the High Court and only on a point of law. The result of enacting Section 207a is that an order of commitment passed under this section does not fall under Section 215 and the argument put forward by Mr. Kavlekar is that however erroneous in law the order of commitment might be under Section 207a, the accused would have no right to approach the High Court under Section 215. Now, if Section 215 is a limitation upon the power of the High Court then that limitation only applies to orders made under Section 213. They do not apply to an order made under Section 207a. Therefore, the ordinary power of the High Court to revise any order passed by a criminal Court subordinate to it or the power of the High Court under Section 531a remains unaffected as far as the orders of commitment made under Section 207a are concerned. Apart from these two sections the accused has always the right to approach the High Court "under Article 227 of the Constitution. It may perhaps be difficult to understand why this distinction was made in the case of an order of commitment passed under Section 213 and one passed under Section 207a. But it may be that it confers a wider power upon the High Court with regard to orders of commitment passed under Section 207a and the reason for conferring this wider power may. be that as orders of commitment under Section 213 are passed after elaborate inquiry and they would be passed rather rarely by the Magistrate who would realise that he is dealing with a serious case which has not been taken by the Police but is being proceeded with on a private complaint, that in such cases ordinarily the order of commitment should not be set aside except on a point of law and the power should be confined to the High Court. Therefore, as far as the present accused are concerned they should have no grievance with regard to their right to approach the High Court being affected by the amendment to the Code. If their rights are affected at all they are affected not to their prejudice but to their advantage, and it is impossible to contend that by reason of Section 215 he has no right to approach the High Court at all, however erroneous the order of commitment the Magistrate may pass. (6.) MR. Kavlekar has made an appeal to us that arguments of expediency and despatch should not influence us in deciding against the petitioners if their substantial rights are affected by the amendment introduced to the Criminal Procedure Code. We entirely agree that the Legislature in the interest of quick decision of cases and in order to see that arrears do not mount up in criminal Courts cannot institute a procedure which although it gives an expeditions trial to the accused deprives him of any substantial rights. But it is certainly open to the Legislature to devise a procedure which in certain important class of cases brings about the desirable result of doing away with unnecessary elaborate inquiry and brings the accused to trial as expeditiously as possible. But the procedure devised by the Legislature must always conform to this principle that he should have the same important rights of defence and relief as any other accused who would be entitled to a more elaborate procedure. In our opinion, on both the grounds urged by Mr. Kavlekar, viz. , the right of calling defence evidence and the right to approach the High Court, which are both important and substantive rights, no prejudice whatever is caused to the accused before us in contradistinction to an accused person who though charged with the same offence is being proceeded against at the instance of a private complaint and not on a police report. (7.) IT is then urged by Mr. Kavlekar that there Is a clear inconsistency between the provisions of Section 207a, Sub-section (6) and Section 162. As already pointed out Sub-section (6) of Section 207a requires the Magistrate to consider all the documents referred to in Section 173 and after examining the accused and after giving the prosecution and the accused an opportunity of being heard he may pass an order of discharge if he comes to the conclusion that the evidence and documents do not disclose any ground for commitment of the accused. When we turn to Section 173, among the documents referred to in that section, are the documents referred to in Sub-section (4) and those documents are a copy of the report forwarded under Sub-section (1) of Section 173 and of the first information report recorded under Section 154 and of all other documents of relevant extracts thereof, on which the prosecution proposes to rely, including the statements and confessions, if any, recorded under Section 164 and the statements recorded under Sub-section (3) of Section 161 of all the persons whom the prosecution proposes to examine as its witnesses. It is said by Mr. Kavlekar that the documents which the Magistrate has to consider under Section 207a are not documents referred to in Sub-section (4) of Section 173, but they are those documents which are referred to in other parts of Section 173 which the police have to forward to the Magistrate. Sub-section (4) is a new sub-section and that confers upon the accused a very important right. That right is that he is entitled to receive copies from the police of all the documents mentioned in this sub-section and therefore Mr. Kavlekar contends that as this sub-section deals with documents, to be sent to the accused they are not the documents which the Magistrate has got to consider under Section 207a (6). In our opinion, that contention is entirely untenable because Section 207a (6) requires the Magistrate to consider all the documents referred to in Section 173 and among the documents referred to in Section 173 are undoubtedly documents mentioned in Sub-section (4) of Section 173. This argument is pressed by reason of the contention put forward with regard to the true construction of Section 162. It is urged that the policy of the law always has been that the statements made of witnesses to the police and recorded under Section 161 (3) should not be used for any purpose except the limited purpose mentioned in the proviso to Section 162 (1) and that limited purpose is the purpose of contradicting the witness in the manner provided by Section 145, Evidence Act. It is said that if the Magistrate were to be sent statements recorded by the police under Section 161 (3) and if he were given the right to consider these statements under Section 207a (6), then the policy of the law would be defeated and the Magistrate will be making use of statements which the law has always been anxious not to have treated as evidence in the case. (8.) NOW, there are various answers to this difficulty raised by Mr. Kavlekar. In the first place, under Section 207a (3) the statements of witnesses recorded by the police under Section 161 (3) do not become evidence. The Magistrate only considers them for the purpose of either discharging the accused or passing the order of committal. It is further quite obvious that the reason why the Magistrate has got to consider the statements is in the interests of the accused himself. The Legislature did not want the Magistrate to commit the accused merely on the oral testimony of witnesses produced by the prosecution. The Legislature wanted the Magistrate to test that evidence in the light of what these very witnesses had stated to the police earlier and nearer the point of time when the offence was committed, and if the Magistrate on considering these statements felt that the oral evidence given by the witnesses was untrustworthy and unreliable it would be open to the Magistrate to discard or disregard the oral evidence and to discharge the accused. Therefore, in our, opinion, the policy of the law with regard to these statements is in no way being defeated by the Magistrate being asked to consider these statements. But apart from the question of policy, when we look at the strict language of Section 162 itself, the prohibition with regard to these statements is qualified by the language used by the Legislature "save as hereinafter provided" and the rather curious contention put forward by Mr. Kavlekar is that that exception is only to be found in proviso to Section 162 (1) and not to any of the provisions of the Code. It is impossible to accept that contention. "hereinafter" may be either in the latter part of the section or anywhere else in the Code. The Legislature has not seated that the exception must be hereinafter in the section itself, and if there is an exception provided in Section 207a that is an exception which is hereinafter provided in relation to Section 162. We do not understand why the exception provided in Section 207a (6) should be disregarded or overlooked. In any case, our duty is to reconcile Section 162 (1) with Section 207-A (6) and there cannot be the slightest doubt that whatever the Legislature might have provided in Section 162 (1) it was the clear intention of the Legislature that the Magistrate must look at these statements, and consider them for the purpose of passing his commitment order under Section 207a. If that was the clear intention of the Legislature, it could not be said that the Legislature did not wish to constitute that as an exception to Section 162 (1). (9.) TURNING to the merits of the case, there is very little that can be said in favour of the petitioners. We would have set aside the order of commitment passed by the learned Magistrate if we have, felt that he had erroneously refused to permit the accused to lead evidence in their defence. The position with regard to this evidence is that the accused were called upon to make a statement under Section 207a (6) and the answer they gave was that they would make their statement in the Court of Session. They were asked to give a list of persons whom they wished to summon to give evidence in their trial in the Court of Session, and their answer was that they would call their witnesses, if necessary, in the Court of Session. Therefore, in their written statements the accused never foreshadowed any defence, nor did they suggest that they would want to call any evidence nor substantiate that defence. They reserved their defence for the Court of Session and apparently they also reserved their right to call evidence in the Court of Session. This application which was subsequently put in seems to us to have been put in solely for the purpose of getting this important constitutional point decided by the High Court. (10.) AS regards the order of commitment passed by the learned Magistrate, Mr. Kavlekar has offered certain criticisms. Now, in all the orders of commitment one must always bear in mind the general principles applying to these orders. The Magistrate is not supposed to weigh evidence and to decide as to whether the accused is innocent or guilty. That is the function of the Jury when the case goes to the sessions. It is not even his duty to consider whether a conviction is probable. Even that is the function of the jury and the Magistrate is trespassing upon the province of the jury if he were to debate in his mind whether a conviction is probable. All that he has to consider is whether on the evidence led a conviction is possible; whether reasonable persons like the persons who constitute the jury are likely to take the view on the evidence led that the accused was guilty. It is true that we have laid down that the Magistrate should not waste the time of the jury if the evidence in his opinion is so worthless that no reasonable men would accept it as true. But subject to that the Magistrate is only concerned with deciding whether there is -- to use a well-known English legal expression -- sufficient evidence to go to the jury. If there is sufficient evidence to go to the jury then whether that evidence should be believed or not is a matter for the jury and not for the Magistrate. From this point of view it is difficult to say why the order passed by the Magistrate cannot be supported. The Magistrate, in the first place, has dealt with the evidence of one Pachiammal who was standing in front of her room and who saw all the four accused coming there and asking for Dorraj the deceased, and she says that they were all armed with weapons and she describes the weapons which the accused had. She told the accused that Dorraj was not at home and then they all searched for him. Dorraj was in the room of one Peermal. He came out of the room and started running and all the accused chased him with the weapons in their hands, and very soon after this the dead body of Dorraj was found lying at a distance of 100 yards from the cliawl of Pachiammal. It is true that she is not an eye-witness to the murder, but she is an extremely important witness and she is a witness whose evidence if accepted would go a long way to establish the guilt of the accused. Then accused 1 and 2 were arrested on 9-2-1956 and the shirt of accused 1 and the shirt of accused 2 and the underwear he was wearing had blood stains. Then accused 2 made a statement and took the police to an open place behind a certain place in Dharavi and dug out a sword and a chopper from under a heap of refuse which the police took charge of and both these were bloodstained. Mr. Kavlekar has drawn our attention to a discussion by the Magistrate of the evidence of certain witnesses who although they did not identify the accused in the inquiry before him had identified him at an identification parade, and Mr. Kavlakar says that this evidence is irrelevant and the learned Magistrate has relied on this evidence in the order to commit the accused to the Sessions. We express no opinion as to whether this evidence is relevant or not. The proper time for considering this would be when the evidence is led before the Sessions Court. At this stage all that we are concerned with is to consider whether on the evidence led by the Magistrate it could be said that there was no case to go to the jury. In our opinion, it is impossible to put forward that contention. Therefore, even on the merit, the commitment order must be upheld.

(11.) THE result is that the petition fails and must be dismissed.
(12.) PETITION dismissed.....

On appeal to Supreme Court —

> Held, the Magistrate was aware that P's revision petition against his interim orderwas then pending in the High Court. In such a situation, the prudent course for him was to postpone the making of any final order in regard to the subject matter till the final disposal of the revision petition by the High Court. It would also have been proper for him to issue notice to 'P' and give an opportunity of being heard before making any order-the Magistrate had at the most committed only a technical contempt Wrong order or even an act of usurpation of jurisdiction committed by a judicial officer, owing to an error of judgement or to a misapprehension of the correct legal position, does not fall within the mischief of "criminal contempt". So long as a judicial Officer in the discharge of his official duties, acts in good faith and without any motive to defeat, obstruct or interfere with the due course of justice, the courts will not, as a rule, punish him for a "criminal contempt". 3. A.P. Parukutty Mooppilamma and A.P. Achuthankutty Nair, appellants in Cr. Appeal No. 196 of 1971 were respondents 1 and 2 in the original petition before the High Court, and will be hereafter be called R-1 and R-2. The appellant K.P. Ramaswami in Criminal Appeal No. 195 of 1971 was Respondent 4 before the High Court. He will, for short, be called R-4.

4. M.K. Prakash, Respondent No. 1 in all these appeals before us, was the petitioner in the contempt petition before the High Court. He will hereafter be called as 'P'.

5. The facts are these :

R-1 is the owner of the Olathooki Ariyalakkan Malavaram in Kayanna Amsom which is managed for and on her behalf by her son, R-2. On March 28, 1969 R-1 presented a petition through R-2, to the Superintendent of Police, Kozhikode alleging that the accused persons (P and his men) were likely to trespass into the Olathukki Arialakkam Malavaram to remove her timber. It was alleged that 'P' had collected a large number of persons and equipped them with dangerous weapons, unlicensed guns, swords etc; that the sheds constructed by the petitioner and occupied by his workers and watchmen were being attacked and there was an apprehension that P and his men would demolish the sheds. The Superintendent of Police appears to have forwarded this petition to the Police Station Kayana where, on its basis, a case under Sections 143, 447 and 506, Penal Code was registered against 'P' and others.

6. The Sub-Inspector in-charge of the Police Station, went to the spot and took into possession the disputed timber comprising of 587 logs and entrusted the same on a kychet to two strangers. On April 22, 1969, R-1 made an application, Ex. P-3, before the Magistrate (R-3) praying that the seized logs be handed over to him. Thereafter, 'P' also made an application to the Magistrate claiming the timber to be his property and prayed for delivery of its possession to him. The Magistrate thereupon issued notice to the Police who made a report. After hearing the Counsel of the rival claimants and perusing the police report (Ex. P-17) and other material, the Magistrate on April 28, 1969, passed an order, directing the Forest Range Officer to keep the logs in his custody pending further investigation by the Police. Against this order, 'P' filed Cr. Revision Petition No. 176 of 1969 in the High Court. No interim order directing the Magistrate to stay further proceedings or defer further action regarding the delivery of the disputed timber was issued by the High Court.

7. While P's Revision application was pending in the High Court, the Police Officer, R-4, after completing the investigation, obtained the opinion of the Assistant Public Prosecutor on September 20, 1969 and submitted a Final Report on September 24, 1969 to the Magistrate (R-3). The material part of this Final Report runs as under :

"On 16-7-69 a petition from the complainant was received alleging that the investigation conducted by my predecessor was one-sided and biased against him and he had produced certain documents to support his contention that the property belongs to him and which were not considered by my predecessor. Based on this petition I continued the investigation and in the course of my investigation. I questioned the Divisional Forest Officer, Calicut and the Forest Range Officer, Kuttiady. They stated that the permit issued to M.K. Prakash in Kalpaidiyan Thirumudiyan Malavaram was stayed by the Government and hence not operated upon till now. They also stated that the 587 logs of timber seized by my predecessor were from Olathukku Arialakkan Malavaram in the possession and ownership of the mother of the complainant and those logs were cut by Smt. A.R. Parukutty Amma's workmen and for which proceedings have been taken against them under the M. P. P. F. Act. To the same effect the Range Officer Kuttiady had filed an affidavit before the High Court in O. P. 2045/69 filed by the accused in this case. In the said O. P. the accused had questioned the validity of the Government Order allowing Smt. Parukutty Amma to remove timber cut from the permitted and non-permitted area of Olakhukki Ariakakkan Malavaram and the High Court had upheld the order of the Government and the complainant's mother was allowed to transport all timber cut from the Malavaram, both from the permitted and non-permitted area. According to the Divisional Forest Officer there is no Malavaram known as Kalpaidiyan Thirumudiyan Malavaram in Pilliperuvanna Amsom as per the Registration Manual. I also questioned the complainant and his workmen and they stated that there was no trespass as such by the accused or his henchmen. They did not enter the Malavaram, nor have they intimidated any of them and as such no offence has been made out under Section 447 or 506(1) I.P.C.

Under the above circumstances, it is clear that Shri M.K. Prakash accused in this case was not allowed to operate his permit and the 587 logs of timber seized by my predecessor were cut by the complainant's mother and the same belong to her. These logs are now in the custody of the Range Officer, Kuttiady as per the order of the Munsiff Magistrate Perambra and the same may be ordered to be released to the mother of the complainant and the case is referred as mistake of fact."

8. Upon this report the Magistrate (R.3) passed this order :

"Notice given. Case referred as mistake of fact. Further action dropped. Return timber logs to complainant."

SD/- M. M. 26-9-1969."

9. In pursuance of this order, the Magistrate issued a letter (Ex. P-10) dated September 26, 1969, to the Forest Range Officer Kuttiady, directing him that 587 logs seized by the Inspector of Police, Quilandy, then in his custody, be urgently released to R-1 (the mother of the complainant).

10. In compliance with the order of the Magistrate, the Range Officer symbolically handed over the charge of the timber to R.1.
11. On the preceding facts, 'P' on November 26, 1969, made a petition in the High Court complaining that R-1, R-2, R-3, R-4 and R-5 (Sri P.K. Appa Nair, Advocate) had committed contempt of the High Court within the meaning of Section 3 of the Contempt of Courts Act, 1952 and prayed that the respondents be punished for committing that contempt. The High Court issued notice to R-1 to R-5 who filed affidavits in reply.
12. The Magistrate (R-3) stated that he had passed the order directing delivery of possession of the disputed timber to R-1 in the bona fide discharge of his official duty, after accepting in good faith, the final report made by the police in which it was indicated that its notice had been given to the complainant, and a copy of such notice was also enclosed. He further averred :
"The purchase of the petitioner's rights by the 1st Respondent referred to in the F.I.R. and Ex. P-3 petition was not denied by the petitioner. On the other hand, his counsel during the hearing of Exts. P-3 and P-4 petitions had admitted the same even though he had a case that the petitioner was duped to sign the same and receive part of the consideration. Under the circumstances, I had no reason to reject P-6 report, it was accepted in its entirety and final orders were passed bona fide directing return of the logs to the complainant. The criminal revision 176 of 1969 itself is only against Ext. R order directing entrustment of the logs to the Forest Range Officer pending further investigation. The order in revision that may be ultimately passed by the Hon'ble Court can have reference only to what should be done with the logs pending investigation. The order in revision would not and cannot relate to the disposal of the logs after the completion of the investigation. It is therefore wrong to suggest that the final order is calculated to overreach the possible orders in the pending Cr. Revision Petition."
13. In his affidavit, the Magistrate emphasised that in Cr. Revision 176 of 1969, the High Court had not issued any interim order staying further proceedings.
14. R-1, R-2, R-4 and R-5, also, in their reply affidavits denied the allegations made against them by 'P' in the contempt petition.
15. The Advocate-General assisted the High Court and filed a statement of facts on February 16, 1970.
16. After considering the replies, a memoranda of charges was drawn up against R-1 to R-5 on February 10, 1970. The material part of the charges served on R-3 ran as under :
"That you, on receipt of the final report, even without giving notice to the petitioner, not only passed an order on 26-9-69 on the final report directing the return of the timber logs to the complainant but also wrote a letter (copy of which is Ext. P-10) to the Forest Range Officer, Kuttiadi, directing him urgently to release the timber logs to the 1st respondent - thereby effectively defeating whatever order the Honourable High Court may finally pass in Criminal Revision Petition 176 of 1969 and Criminal Miscellaneous Petition 309/69, and that in consequences of your order the timber logs were actually handed over to the 1st respondent;
That in so doing :
(a) you have acted unjustly, oppressively and irregularly in the execution of your duties, under colour of judicial proceedings, wholly unwarranted by law and procedure;
(b) you have also permitted the process of your court to be abused by the other respondents and thereby diverted the due course of justice and
(c) you have also impeded the course of justice by defeating the final orders that are liable to be passed by the High Court in Criminal Revision Petition 176/69 and Cr. Misc. Petition

309/69; thereby committing gross contempt of the Honourable High Court, to which you are subordinate."
17. The Magistrate (R-3) submitted a further counter-affidavit denying the charges.
18. The High Court rejected the Magistrate's explanation and found him guilty of contempt on grounds which may be summarised as below :
(1) "The case between the petitioner and the 1st and the second respondent had gained certain amount of notoriety not only in the area but also in the State". Allegations were being made "that even the then Minister of Forests was unjustly favouring R-1 and R-2". The case before the Munsiff-Magistrate would naturally have attracted quite a good deal of public attention.
(2) R-3 permitted R-1 and R-2 to approach and influence him. This inference was available from the circumstance that in his affidavit, R-3 has said that an order dated May 2, 1969, passed by the High Court in C.M.P. 5869/69 in O.P. 2405/69 was shown to him and the certified copy of this order was obtained from the High Court only by R-1. The copy must therefore have been shown to the Magistrate by R-1 or her Advocate or by R-2 or his agents. "This could not have been in the open court. There was no posting of the case to 26-4-1969."
(3) (a) R-3 was aware that Criminal Revision 176/69 and Cr. M. P. 309/69 against his earlier order, was pending in the High Court which was "seized of the matter of determining the question of custody of the timber. His explanation that he felt that he was free to pass an order because only the question of interim custody was involved in Cr. Rev. Petition No. 176 of 1969…… was puerile".
(3) (b) R-3 passed the order on the Final Report, directing the release of the logs, without caring to issue notice to the petitioner (P).
(4) In the letter Ex. P-10, dated 26-9-1969, the Magistrate wrote to the Range Officer that the logs should be released to R-1, urgently. "This is a very strange procedure, unheard of, and reveals an anxiety on the part of the Munsiff-Magistrate to help R-1 and R-2. The urgency can only be to circumvent any possible orders of stay that may be passed by (the High) Court".
19. We have heard R-1 and the Counsel for the other appellants. R-1 has argued his case in person because, according to him, he has no funds to engage a Counsel. His submissions are straight and simple. He has reiterated what he had stated in his further affidavit filed in reply to the memorandum of charges in the High Court.
20. In sum, his defence is that in all the proceedings relating to the disposal of the disputed timber, including the making of the order dated September 26, 1969, the issuing of the letter, Ex. 10, of the same date, and in failing to issue notice to 'P', he acted in the bona fide discharge of his duties; that even if what he did or omitted, was wrong, it was no more than an honest error of judgement on his part. In particular, it is submitted that ground No. 1(1) is not based on any cogent or legal evidence but on mere rumours and hearsay and it is too vague and general; that even so, it was not incorporated in the charges against him. It is further maintained that the inferences of ulterior motives on the part of the appellant vide grounds (2) and (4) drawn by the High Court were wholly unjustified. It is contended that the approach of the High Court, is not in consonance with the law laid down by this Court in Debabrata Bandopadhyay v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1969 SC 189.
21. Before dealing with the contentions canvassed by the appellant, it will be useful to recall the law on the point.
22. Clause (c) of Sec. 2 of the Contempt of Courts Act, 1971 merely codifies the definition of "criminal contempt" which had previously been crystallised by judicial decisions. It defines 'criminal contempt' to mean publication of any matter, or the doing of any other act which

"(i) scandalises or tends to scandalise, or lowers or tends to lower the authority of any court; or

(ii) prejudices, or interferes or tends to interfere with, the due course of any judicial proceedings;

(iii) interferes or tends to interfere, or obstructs or tends to obstruct, the administration of justice in any other manner."

23. The broad test to be applied in such cases is, whether the act complained of was calculated to obstruct or had an intrinsic tendency to interfere with the course of justice and the due administration of law. The standard of proof required to establish a charge of 'criminal contempt' is the same as in any other criminal proceeding. It is all the more necessary to insist upon strict proof of such charge when the act or omission complained of is committed by the respondent under colour of his office as a judicial officer. Wrong order or even an act of usurpation of jurisdiction committed by a judicial Officer, owing to an error of judgement or to a misapprehension of the correct legal position, does not fall within the mischief of "criminal contempt". Human judgement is fallible and a judicial Officer is no exception. Consequently, so long as a judicial Officer in the discharge of his official duties, acts in good faith and without any motive to defeat, obstruct or interfere with the due course of justice, the courts will not, as a rule, punish him for a "criminal contempt". Even if it could be urged that mens rea, as such, is not an indispensable ingredient of the offence of contempt, the courts are loath to punish a contemner, if the act or omission complained of, was not wilful.

24. In Debabrata Bandopadhyaya's case AIR 1969 SC 189 (supra), Hidayatullah C.J. speaking for the Court elucidated the position, thus :

"A question whether there is contempt of court or not is a serious one. The court is both the accuser as well as the judge of the accusation. It behoves the court to act with as great circumspection as possible making all allowances for errors of judgement and difficulties arising from inveterate practices in courts and tribunals. It is only when a clear case of contumacious conduct not explainable otherwise, arises that the contemner must be punished. It must be realised that our system of courts often results in delay of one kind or another. The remedy for it is reform and punishment departmentally. Punishment under the law of contempt is called for when the lapse is deliberate and is in disregard of one's duty and in defiance of authority. To take action in an unclear case is to make the law of contempt do duty for other measures and is not to be encouraged."

25. The judgement of the High Court is to be tested in the light of the above enunciation.

26. The main ground, as already noticed, which greatly influenced the decision of the High Court was that this case between the parties had gained a certain amount of notoriety and allegations were being openly made that the then Minister for Forests was out to favour R-1 and R-2 against 'P'. This was a very vague, indefinite and nebulous circumstance which had no better status than any other general rumour, gossip or talk in the town. Courts have to guard against cognisance of such rumours and general allegations as they prejudice an objective treatment and a fair determination of the problems before them. In the instant case the prejudice generated by this creeping circumstance has unmistakably vitiated the approach of the High Court. It has hindered a correct appreciation of the submissions made by R-3 in reply to the charges. In his counter-affidavit R-3 stated :

"In the final report filed by the 4th respondent which is marked in these proceedings as P-6, there is reference to an order passed by this Honourable Court allowing the 1st respondent to remove the cut timber. The order aforesaid is the order dated 2-5-1969 in C. M. P. 5869/1969 in O. P. 2405/1969, wherein it is said that it is necessary that the timber should be removed from the place as early as possible. A certified copy of this order was also shown to me and that was the reason why I wrote Ext. P-10 letter to release the cut logs without delay. The reason that prompted me to pass the final orders are therefore (1) there was no stay of further proceedings pending Crl. R. P. 176/1969; (2) the Crl. R. P. itself related only to Ex. R. order for custody pending further investigation, and can have no reference to the ultimate result of investigation; (3) it was admitted before me that the 1st respondent had purchased the alleged rights of the petitioner and part of the consideration was already paid, even though he had the case that the assignment is not valid, and (4) this Honourable Court had in C. M. P. 5869/1969 aforesaid directed the speedy removal of the timber from the place by the 1st respondent."

27. In our opinion, the above reply given by the Magistrate was at least sufficient to dispel the suspicion that in making the order, dated September 26, 1969 in regard to the delivery of the timber to R-1 he was actuated by a motive to impede or obstruct or defeat the course of justice. The notoriety of the case looming large in their minds, the learned Judges of the High Court without due consideration rather hastily rejected the explanation of the Magistrate that he had directed (vide his letter Ex. P-10), urgent delivery of the timber to R-1 because on seeing the copy of the High Court's order, dated May 2, 1969, which was shown to him, he was of the opinion that such a course was indicated therein. The point of substance was, whether such an order was made by the High Court and had been shown to the Magistrate before he made the order for urgent delivery of the timber. It was immaterial if certified copy of that order was shown to the Magistrate by R-1 or her Counsel or her agent.

28. Ex. R-1 is a certified copy of that order dated May 2, 1969 which was passed by the High Court in C. M. P. No. 5869 of 1969 in O. P. 2405 of 1969, M.K. Prakash v. R-1 to R-4. C. M. P. 5869/69 was a petition made by 'P' before the High Court praying that the operation of the order of the then Respondent 1 be stayed and the other respondents, including the Magistrate, be directed not to cause the removal of the felled trees pending disposal of the original petition.

29. After hearing arguments of the Counsel for the parties, the High Court made an order, the material part of which reads as under :

"As the rainy season is fast approaching it is necessary that the timber should be removed from the place as early as possible. Otherwise, the same would be lost to all concerned. It is seen from the counter-affidavit of the 4th respondent that she had already given an undertaking to the Government to pay the compounding fee, if any that may be fixed by the Forest Authorities. In the circumstances it appears to be only just to vacate the order of interim injunction passed on this petition. Accordingly the order of interim injunction passed on this petition is vacated and this petition is dismissed but in the circumstances without costs."

30. On reading a copy of this order, and hearing the persuasive arguments of the party or her Counsel, the Magistrate might have honestly, albeit wrongly, formed the opinion that there was no need to give notice to the other party ('P') and that it was necessary to direct the Forest Officer to deliver the timber in question urgently to R-1. We are therefore unable to agree with the High Court that by his letter Ex. P-10, the Magistrate directed urgent delivery of the logs to R-1 because "there was an anxiety on his part to help R-1 and R-2 and to circumvent any possible orders of stay that may be passed by the High Court". If the Magistrate had read the High Court's order, dated May 2, 1969, before making this order of urgent delivery and this fact has not been disputed then his explanation cannot be dubbed as wholly "puerile. "

31. Rather, the order dated May 2, 1969, whereby P's request for ad interim stay or injunction with regard to these logs was declined by the High Court, could have induced the Magistrate to go ahead with the making of the ex parte final order in regard to the delivery of the logs to R-1.

32. It is true that the Magistrate was aware that P's criminal revision petition against his interim order, dated April 28, 1969, was then pending in the High Court. In such a situation, the prudent course for him was to postpone the making of any final order in regard to the delivery of this timber till the final disposal of the revision petition by the High Court. It would also have been proper for him to issue notice to 'P' and give an opportunity of being heard before making any order. That would have been the ideal. But the point for consideration is whether the Magistrate deliberately did not follow this prudent course or whether he misdirected himself owing to an error of judgement. The stark circumstances viz. - that the High Court had declined to issue any interim injunction or stay order in favour of 'P' in the criminal revision pending before it; that there was an observation in the High Court's order, dated May 2, 1969, stressing the need for speedy removal of the cut timber and the possibility of its being damaged by the incoming rainy season; that he was labouring under the impression, though wrongly, that the order, dated April 28, 1969, was merely an interim order which had exhausted itself on the completion of the police investigation and the presentation of the Final Report by the police in which there was a positive finding that the timber belonged to R-1 and R-2 and they were entitled to its restoration - taken in their totality, go to show that in making the wrong order regarding delivery of the timber, the Magistrate was not actuated by any improper motive or deliberate design to thwart, impede, obstruct or interfere with the course of justice or to circumvent or defeat the proceedings in revision pending before the High Court.

33. In the absence of any mens rea, the Magistrate had at the most committed only a technical contempt of the High Court. In such a case, as was pointed out by this Court in Debabrata Bandopadhyay's case AIR 1969 SC 189 (supra), penal action was not called for.

34. We therefore allow R-3's appeal and set aside his conviction and sentence.

35. No conviction for contempt of court has been recorded against the appellants in the companion appeals by the High Court. All that we would say in their (R-1 and R-2) cases is that the High Court has made rather sweeping observations with regard to their civil rights which might prejudice them in establishing their claims by a regular suit. They shall therefore not be taken into account by any court before which the dispute with regard to this timber may come up for adjudication in due course. Similarly, any adverse remarks made against the Police Officer (R-4) will not by themselves be taken conclusive as to his conduct in handling this case. Subject to these observations we dismiss Criminal Appeals Nos. 195 and 196 of 1971.

Order accordingly.

HIGH COURT OF BOMBAY

Hon'ble Judge : B. R. Gavai, J.

Kishor Bhikansingh Rajput ..Vs..Preeti Kishor Rajput
Writ Petition 7502 of 2006 Of Feb 07,2007

==========

JUDICIAL PROPRIETY – Whenever petition relating to the subject matter is pending before Higher Courts and even if no stay is granted in the case then also it is matter of propriety that the Judges of lower courts should stay their hands away and wait till further orders to be passed by High Court – The order passed by family court during pendency of petition before High Court is illegal and therefore quashed.

(1.) RULE made returnable forthwith. Heard by consent.
(2.) BY way of present petition, the petitioner challenges the order dated 15th September, 2006 passed by the learned Judge of the Family Court, Aurangabad, below exhibit 44 in Petition No. B-2 of 2005 by which the application of the present petitioner for framing additional issues has not only been rejected but the amendment which has been granted earlier is disallowed and the order dated 25th, September 2006 below exhibit 45 by which the application for adjournment came to be rejected.
(3.) THE petitioner / husband has filed a petition for dissolution of marriage. After filing of the petition, since according to the petitioner, he came to know about the fact of earlier surviving marriage of the respondent with somebody else, he filed an application for amendment. The same was allowed by the learned Judge of the Family court vide order dated 3rd March, 2006. Thereafter, the respondent / wife has also amended the written statement so as to incorporate the amended pleadings.
(4.) THEREAFTER, the present petitioner filed an application for framing additional issues in view of the amended pleadings. The same came to be rejected by order dated 15th September, 2006. By the said order, the amendment which has been granted earlier, has also been disallowed. Thereafter, when the matter was fixed on 25th September, 2006, the petitioner filed an application for adjournment on the ground that the petitioner had filed a petition challenging the order dated 15th September, 2006. However, the learned trial court rejected the said application on the ground that already last chance was granted to the petitioner. Vide order of the same date, the petition of the present petitioner has been dismissed in default. Being aggrieved thereby, the present petition.
(5.) MR. B. L. Sagar Killarikar, learned counsel appearing on behalf of the petitioner, submits that the procedure adopted by the learned Family Court is totally perverse. He submits that the amendment which was earlier granted and incorporated, cannot be disallowed. He further submits that the issue sought to be framed was necessary for adjudication the dispute between the parties.

(6.) MR. S. S. Kazi, learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the respondent, submits that the petitioner is trying to protract the proceedings by taking adjournments after adjournments. He submits that the respondent is a poor lady and therefore, she has to suffer the prejudice due to the delay in the proceedings.

(7.) PERUSAL of the record would reveal that the procedure adopted by the learned family Court is totally unknown to law. Once amendment was allowed, it is difficult to understand under what provision the learned Family Court has disallowed the said amendment by a subsequent order while considering the application of the present petitioner for framing additional issue. The approach adopted is totally perverse. From the perusal of the pleadings, it can also be seen that the additional issue which was sought to be framed was necessary in view of the amended pleadings.

(8.) NORMALLY, when this Court is ceased of the matter, it is expected of the subordinate courts to stay their hands away. It is difficult to understand as to what was an alarming urgency to proceed further and dismiss the petition when the learned judge of the Family Court was very well aware that the order dated 15th September 2006 was challenged before this Court by the present petitioner. No doubt, that the learned Family Court is right in observing that there was no stay by this Court. But as a matter of propriety and when the learned Judge was very much aware about pendency of the petition before this Court, the learned Judge ought to have stayed his hands away and waited till further orders to be passed by this Court. In that view of the matter, I am inclined to allow the petition.

(9.) IN the result, the Writ Petition is allowed. The impugned orders dated 15th September, 2006 and 25th September, 2006 passed by the learned Judge of the Family court, Aurangabad, below Exhibits 44 and 45, in Petition No. B-2 of 2005, rejecting application for framing additional issue and dismissing the petition in default, respectively, are quashed and set aside. It is needless to state that the amendment which was granted earlier shall stand restored. The application of the present petitioner for framing additional issue stands allowed. The order of dismissal of petition in default stands quashed and set aside. The Petition No. . B-2 of 2005 is restored to the file of the Family Court, aurangabad. However, it is made clear that hereafter, the parties shall not seek adjournments on unnecessary counts and shall, cooperate with the learned Family Court in expeditious disposal of the petition. The parties are directed to present themselves before the learned Family Court on 15th February, 2007 and thereafter the learned Family court shall proceed with the petition.

(10.) RULE is made absolute in the above terms with no order as to costs.

Petition allowed.

HIGH COURT OF BOMBAY

Coram :- A.B.Palkar J.
Decided on March 06, 2002
Criminal Writ Petition 1582 of 1998
Vaidya Kuldip Laj Kohil …. Vs ….State of Maharashtra

Code Of Criminal Procedure. 1973:- S.190 – Illegal cognizance by Magistrate – The complaint disclosed no offence but the Magistrate going out of the way and for extraneous consideration issued process against the accused – The order of Magistrate does not show that how he come to the conclusion that how and what offence disclosed - observation by Magistrate that it is a case for full fledged trial is illegal - it appears that for some reasons not on record the learned Magistrate took cognizance of offence without having been himself satisfied that any offence was in fact committed. The order of learned Magistrate if read in its entirety, clearly shows that the Magistrate was aware that complaint discloses no offence and in spite of having become aware, he issued the process for reasons which can only be extraneous – proceeding quashed – Accused granted compensation of Rs. 10,000/-

What was expected of the learned Magistrate was to find out whether any offence is made out in the complaint. The entire order of learned Magistrate does not even remotely indicate how he came to the conclusion that offence is disclosed. He has observed that at this stage main allegation is that documents produced before the selection committee of the M. P. S. C were false and the matter can be decided only after a trial. This reasoning of the learned Magistrate shows that he was not at all convinced that any offence is made out. The learned Magistrate in his order simply stated that it is a fit case for full fledged trial which reasoning is incomprehensible and it appears that for some reasons not on record the learned Magistrate took cognizance of offence without having been himself satisfied that any offence was in fact committed. The order of learned Magistrate if read in its entirety, clearly shows that the Magistrate was aware that complaint discloses no offence and in spite of having become aware, he issued the process for reasons which can only be extraneous.

The order not only suffers from non-application of mind but clearly shows that it is passed for some extraneous considerations. As a Senior Additional Chief Metropolitan Magistrate he is expected to know what is the effect of summoning a person as accused to Criminal Court. The learned Magistrate did not give any reason for differing from the Police Report.

The Court lend necessary assistance to the complainant to abuse the process of law by passing a vague order consciously. It is not a case of some order passed hurriedly due to pressure of work. The learned Magistrate has passed an order running in seven pages which does not speak of a single sentence as to how and what offence is committed. I am convinced that the learned Magistrate also found that no offence is disclosed even thereafter going out of way he wanted to help the complainant. The process of law was misused not only by the complainant but also by the learned Magistrate. It is a clear case of misuse of judicial power by the Court.

So far as complainant is concerned, he has intentionally resorted Criminal Court and used the process of law to take revenge by filing false and frivolous complaint. He must be saddled with costs, which I quantify to Rs. 10,000/- to be paid to the petitioner by the 2nd respondent.

JUDGEMENT

1. PETITIONER is professor and head of the department in the department of Kaya Chikitsa in R. A. Podar Ayurvedic College, Mumbai while respondent No. 2 is Reader in the same department. Respondent No. 2 had challenged the appointment of petitioner as Reader in Kaya Chikitsa before Maharashtra Administrative Tribunal (MAT) in Original Application No. 843 of 1996 which came to be dismissed on 12-9-1996. Thereafter respondent No. 2 filed writ petition being Writ Petition No. 1602 of 1998 through Maharashtra Under Privileged Teachers Association of which respondent No. 2 is member, before the High Court for the same reliefs. The said writ petition was disposed of as withdrawn vide order dated 20-8-1998 and thereafter respondent No. 2 filed another application being Application No. 555 of 1998 before MAT challenging selection and appointment of petitioner. During the pendency of that matter respondent No. 2 filed present complaint suppressing the above stated material facts.

2. PETITIONER applied for the post of Reader in Kaya Chikitsa in 1988 as he possessed the required qualification. The prescribed qualification being 3 years teaching experience in recognized institute. Since petitioner possessed the qualification, he applied through the M. P. S. C. for the aforesaid post and in due course after following the procedure prescribed, he was selected for that post and appointed as Reader in Kaya Chikitsa in R. A. Podar Ayurvedic Medical College, Worli, Mumbai in February, 1990.

According to the petitioner he has the required medical qualification and a good academic career. Respondent No. 2 was senior in service to petitioner as a Reader in the department of Kaya Chikitsa. However, petitioner came to be selected for the post of Professor and joined in 1997. Respondent No. 2 having failed in the selection process approached before the Maharashtra Administrative Tribunal (MAT) after lapse of six years by filing Original Application No. 843 of 1996 and thereafter one original application was summarily dismissed. In the complaint respondent No. 2 has made out a case that he was initially appointed as Demonstrator and thereafter selected as a lecturer in Kaya Chikitsa by M. P. S. C. and was appointed accordingly and in the year 1988 he has promoted by the Department to the post of Reader in Kaya Chikitsa. Petitioner accused was previously working as a Medical Officer in Mahatma Gandhi Institute of Medical Sciences (Allopathie) at Sevagram, Wardha and was appointed as "reader" in R. A. Podar College in Kaya Chikitsa by the Government of Maharashtra by its order dated 16-10-1989 in pursuance of his selection through M. P. S. C. According to the respondent, petitioner was working in the employment as Medical Officer at Mahatma Gandhi Institute of Medical Science (Allopathie) and was not qualified for the post of Reader in R. A. Podar Ayurvedic College, Mumbai. However, he was selected as Lecturer on that basis and at that time he had not produced any certificate showing that he was working as a Lecturer in the specific subject Kaya Chikitsa for three years which was an essential qualification and a condition precedent for appointment as Reader. Thus according to the respondent in the absence of required certificate from the recognized Ayurvedic Institute, petitioner came to be appointed in Ayurvedic College as a Reader in the subject of Kaya Chikitsa. The certificate of Mahatma Gandhi Institute of Medical Science is not a proper certificate as it is not a recognized Ayurvedic Institute under section 27 of the Maharashtra Medical Practitioners Act, 1961, and on the basis of such a certificate, the petitioner could not have been selected. Thus the petitioner was appointed as a Reader on the basis of a false and fraudulent information and documents. Despite the illegal selection, petitioner continues in service as he has approaches in the department. It is significant to note that in the complaint, it is stated by the respondent that he did not take any action in the matter for the period of about 9 to 10 years or so as he was expecting the Government to act.
In the year 1996, two posts for Professor were advertised and the respondent applied along with the petitioner. Petitioner came to be selected whereas respondent was not selected for that post when in fact respondent was senior having 19 years experience and petitioners experience was only of 6 years and therefore he filed complaint alleging offence under sections 420, 463 and 471 of Indian Penal Code against the petitioner. Learned Magistrate without recording even the verification statement of the complainant forwarded the complaint for investigation under section 156 (3) of Civil Procedure Code. After investigation into the complaint, the Police gave report to the learned Magistrate that no offence whatsoever was disclosed. The certificate produced by the petitioner was found genuine and there was no forged document produced by the petitioner before the M. P. S. C. However, thereafter learned Magistrate directed further investigation which was also conducted and again report was submitted to the same effect to the learned Magistrate. Learned Magistrate rejected the report and passed impugned order issuing process for offence under aforesaid sections.
3. IN reply one Shri Rameshchandra R. Padmavar, Director of Ayurved, Worli, Mumbai filed affidavit wherein, it is clearly stated that the selection of petitioner was proper. The investigation conducted by the police was also to the said effect that there was no offence and investigation was conducted in proper manner. The certificates produced by the petitioner was verified from M. P. S. C. as found to be genuine.

One Shri Shankar B. Surve, Assistant Inspector has also filed an affidavit that a report was already submitted to the Magistrate that no offence was disclosed. All the documents produced before the M. P. S. C. by petitioner were found genuine. Petitioner had therefore not cheated anybody and had not committed any offence.
4. MR. Mundergi, the learned Counsel for the petitioner seriously contended that in this case, the learned Magistrate should not have issued process under any of the provisions of Indian Penal Code as complaint discloses no offence. The investigation was conducted by the police as per the directions of the learned Magistrate. Report submitted was that no offence whatsoever is disclosed. In spite of the adverse police report without giving any independent reasons as to how offence was disclosed, the learned Magistrate issued the process. The learned Magistrate has not given any reason as to why he has come to the conclusion that offence is disclosed either from the complaint or from the investigation papers submitted by the police. After narrating facts stated in the complaint and the concerned provisions of law, the learned Magistrate proceeded to observe in para 6, it appears that the main allegation is that the accused got himself selected through M. P. S. C. for the post of Reader in Kaya Chikitsa when he did not have the requisite qualification. The main allegation is that he managed and obtained some certificate showing as if he has full fledged experience in Ayurvedic subject in Kaya Chikitsa and got himself selected through M. P. S. C. by misleading the selection committee and misleading the Government of Maharashtra. It is noteworthy to mention that the M. P. S. C. does not claim to have been mislead by any certificate and it is also not found after investigation that any certificate produced by the petitioner was false. Even presuming for sake of argument that the petitioner was having certificate from the institution which according to respondent was not a proper institution to issue certificate, it was matter for the M. P. S. C. Even the Maharashtra Administrative Tribunal has upheld the selection of petitioner for the post. It was challenged after a lapse of more than 6 years. Petitioner and respondents were working in the same institution. What was expected of the learned Magistrate was to find out whether any offence is made out in the complaint. The entire order of learned Magistrate does not even remotely indicate how he came to the conclusion that offence is disclosed. He has observed that at this stage main allegation is that documents produced before the selection committee of the M. P. S. C were false and the matter can be decided only after a trial. This reasoning of the learned Magistrate shows that he was not at all convinced that any offence is made out. The learned Magistrate in his order simply stated that it is a fit case for full fledged trial which reasoning is incomprehensible and it appears that for some reasons not on record the learned Magistrate took cognizance of offence without having been himself satisfied that any offence was in fact committed. The order of learned Magistrate if read in its entirety, clearly shows that the Magistrate was aware that complaint discloses no offence and in spite of having become aware, he issued the process for reasons which can only be extraneous.
The order not only suffers from non-application of mind but clearly shows that it is passed for some extraneous considerations. As a Senior Additional Chief Metropolitan Magistrate he is expected to know what is the effect of summoning a person as accused to Criminal Court. The learned Magistrate did not give any reason for differing from the Police Report. There was no allegation of forgery. The allegation was that petitioner did not possess the required qualification as he was not having experience of working in any Ayurvedic Institution. The certificate issued by Sevagram Hospital was not even suspected. Whether such certificate can be accepted was for the M. P. S. C. to decide. Their decision was challenged before MAT after an abnormally long period of time and the challenge met with summary dismissal. A writ petition on same lines filed in High Court was also dismissed. Thereafter to cause harassment to the petitioners recourse was taken to Criminal Court. The Court lend necessary assistance to the complainant to abuse the process of law by passing a vague order consciously. It is not a case of some order passed hurriedly due to pressure of work. The learned Magistrate has passed an order running in seven pages which does not speak of a single sentence as to how and what offence is committed. I am convinced that the learned Magistrate also found that no offence is disclosed even thereafter going out of way he wanted to help the complainant. The process of law was misused not only by the complainant but also by the learned Magistrate. It is a clear case of misuse of judicial power by the Court.

So far as complainant is concerned, he has intentionally resorted Criminal Court and used the process of law to take revenge by filing false and frivolous complaint. He must be saddled with costs, which I quantify to Rs. 10,000/- to be paid to the petitioner by the 2nd respondent.

5. PETITION is allowed. Order of learned Magistrate dated 29-10-1998 passed in Misc. Application No. 18/misc. /1997 (C. C. 2158/s/1998) is quashed and set aside. The complaint filed by respondent No. 2 is dismissed. Respondent No. 2 shall pay Rs. 10,000/- as costs to the petitioner for filing such total false and frivolous complaint causing mental agony and torture to the petitioner.

Petition allowed.

JUDGEMENT

AHMADI, C.J.I. :- This group of cases arise out of the judgment/order dated 29-7-1993 in Miscellaneous Petition No. 1102/91 passed by High Court of Madhya Pradesh (Indore Bench). The three petitioners before the High Court were working on the post of Inspectors in the Police Department of Madhya Pradesh. They sought to challenge the Constitution of the State Administrative Tribunal (in short 'SAT') as well as the appointments of the Vice-Chairman and members of the Tribunal as the Government had not complied with the direction of this Court given in the case of S.P. Sampath Kumar v. Union of India (1987) 1 SCC 124 : AIR 1987 SC 386 to amend the Administrative Tribunals Act, 1985 (hereinafter alluded to as 'the Act') as suggested by it and had not made the appointments after selection by a High Powered Selection Committee as directed by the Court. They stated that they could not obtain a copy of the appointment letter of the aforesaid persons. They prayed for Writ of Quo Warranto to show under what authority they were functioning and or a declaration that the constitution of SAT was null and void. The respondents Nos. 3 to 6 were Members of the SAT and respondent No. 7 was its Vice-Chairman. The respondent Nos. 1 and 2 were the Union of India and the State of Madhya Pradesh, respectively. The High Court quashed the appointments of the respondents Nos. 3 to 7 by the impugned judgment dated 29-7-1993. The respondents Nos. 3 to 6 jointly challenge the judgment in Civil Appeal No 5061 of 1993. The appeal filed by the respondent No 7 is Civil Appeal No. 5062 of 1993. The Union of India also challenges the judgment in Civil Appeal No. 7486 of 1993. The Industrial and Labour Bar Association, Bhopal and another who claim to have been intervenors before the High Court have come up with a special leave petition (Civil) No. 17232 of 1993. We grant them special relief.

2. Shri R. P. Kapoor, whose appointment as Vice-Chairman and S/Shri Dr. Narinder Nath Veermani R. M. Rajwade, G. S. Patel and S. S. Lamba whose appointments as Members were set aside by the High Court are referred to in this judgment as the appellants whereas the three police officers who filed the writ petition before the High Court are being referred to as the original petitioners.

3. The main reason for setting aside the appointments was the alleged failure on the part of the Government to select the candidates for the posts of members and Vice-Chairman of the Tribunal through a High Powered Selection Committee as directed by this Court in S. P. Sampath Kumar's case (AIR 1987 SC 386), (supra) and in the review petitions filed subsubsequently, vide (1987) Supp SCC 734 and 735. By the judgment in S. P. Sampath kumar's case, (supra) certain directions were issued to the Union of India to introduce legislative changes to cure the defects in the procedure for appointment of the Chairman, Vice-Chairman and Members of the Tribunal. An amendment was made in Section 6 of the Act purportedly in compliance with the direction of this Court. The High Court of Madhya Pradesh has held that the amendment was not in conformity with the direction of this Court and did not suffice to ensure the validity of the appointments challenged in the writ petition before it. The appeals were heard by a bench of this Court consisting of M. M. Puchhi, S.C. Agrawal, B.P. Jeevan Reddy, JJ. By an order dated 3-5-1994 the Court referred the matters to the Constitution Bench on the observation that they raised questions of general importance involving the interpretation of the provisions of Section 6, as amended by Act 51 of 1987 as well as the validity of the appointments made in accordance with the said provisions and the issues affect the constitution of the CAT and the SAT.

4. On the pleadings and submissions made before the High Court the points arising for determination came to be formulated in paragraph 7 of the judgment. These comprised preliminary objections as to (i) bar of jurisdiction in view of Section 28 of the Act (ii) propriety of entertaining such a petition by disgruntled litigants in the guise of public interest litigation and (iii) locus standi of the petitioners. The other technical objection raised was in regard to the scope of a petition seeking a writ of quo warranto. None of these objections was pressed before us. The High Court next considered the ambit and import of the observations made by this Court in S.P. Sampath Kumar's case (AIR 1987 SC 386), and in the subsequent orders emanating from that decision. Based on the import of the said observations the High Court went into the question whether the appointments of the Vice-Chairman and Members were validly made. The High Court on appreciation of the decision in S.P. Sampath Kumar and related cases came to the conclusion that the appointment of a High Powered Committee was a sine qua non under the said decisions and the mere fact that the Chief Justice of India had approved the appointments on the administrative side would not render the appointments valid. Detailing the procedure followed in the matter of selection, the High Court after referring to the notings in the department file held the same to be arbitrary and discriminatory and even went to the length of describing the same as 'murky,' 'self-motivated' and 'biased' and in total violation of the procedure prescribed by the Government of India under its order of 15th April, 1991 and consequently quashed the appointments. The petitions were allowed with cost quantified at Rs. 2,500/-.

5. The main question is whether the mode of selection and appointment of the Chairman, Vice-Chairman and Members of the Tribunal as prescribed by the amendment of 1987 is valid? The Amendment Act of 1987 followed the judgment of this Court in S.P. Sampath Kumar's case (AIR 1987 SC 386), (supra) in which certain infirmities were pointed out in the Administrative Tribunals Act, 1985, (hereinafter referred to as 'the Act') and certain directions were given for introducing legislation to cure those defects. What this Court was required to consider in that case was whether constitution of the Administrative Tribunals under the Act, which excluded the jurisdiction of the High Courts, was inconsistent with the concept of judicial review, a basic feature of the constitution. Recalling the law laid down in Minerva Mills, Ltd. v. Union of India, AIR 1980 SC 1789, Bhagwati, J., said : (AIR 1986 SC 386 at P. 386).

"...judicial review is a basic and essential feature of the constitution and it cannot be abrogated without affecting the basic structure of the Constitution and it is equally clear from the same decision that though judicial review cannot be altogether abrogated by parliament by amending the Constitution in exercise of its constituent power, Parliament can certainly, without in any way violating the basic structure doctrine, set up effective alternative institutional mechanisms or arrangements for judicial review. The basic and essential feature of judicial review cannot be dispensed with but it would be within the competence of Parliament to amend the Constitution so as to substitute in place of the High Court, another alternative institutional mechanism or arrangement for judicial review, provided it is no less efficacious than the High Court..."

6. Referring to Article 323-A, the learned Judge observed: (at P.389 and 390 AIR)

"If this constitutional amendment were to permit a law made under clause (1) of Article 323 A to exclude the jurisdiction of the High Court under Articles 226 and 227 without setting up an effective alternative institutional mechanism or arrangement for judicial review, it would be violative of the basic structure doctrine and hence outside the constituent power of Parliament. It must, therefore, be read as implicit in this constitutional amendment that the law excluding the jurisdiction of the High Court under Articles 226 and 227 permissible under it must not leave a void but it must set up another effective institutional mechanism or authority and vest the power of judicial review in it. Consequently, the impugned Act excluding the jurisdiction of the High Court under Articles 226 and 227 in respect of service matters and vesting such jurisdiction in the Administrative Tribunal can pass the test of constitutionality as being within the ambit and coverage of clause (2) (d) of Article 323-A, only if it can be shown that the Administrative Tribunals set up under the impugned Act is equally efficacious as the High Court so far as the power of judicial review over service matter is concerned. We must, therefore, address ourselves to the question whether the Administrative Tribunal established under the impugned Act can be regarded as equally effective and efficacious in exercising the power of judicial review as the High Court acting under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution."

7. The majority judgment in S.P. Sampath Kumar's case (AIR 1987 SC 386) (supra) delivered by Misra, J. also expressed the same view in these words : (at P. 396 of AIR)
"What, however, has to be kept in view is that the Tribunal should be a real substitute for the High Court - not only in form and de jure but in content and de facto. As was pointed out in Minerva Mills (AIR 1980 SC 1789) the alternative arrangement has to be effective and efficient as also capable of upholding the constitutional limitations."
8. The next step was to consider how to ensure that the Tribunal was a 'real substitute' of the High Court. It was observed that the things to be examined were whether the judges of the Tribunal were equally efficient/trained and equally independent as those of the High Court. Said Misra, J. :- (AIR 1987 SC 386 at P. 396).
"Disciplined, independent and trained judges well versed in law and working with all openness in an unattached and objective manner have ensured dispensation of justice over the years. Aggrieved people approach the Court - the social mechanism to act as the arbiter - not under legal obligation but under the belief and faith that justice shall be done to them and the State's authorities would implement the decision of the Court. It is, therefore, of paramount importance that the substitute institution - the Tribunal - must be a worthy successor of the High Court in all respects. That is exactly what this Court intended to convey when it spoke of an alternative mechanism in Minerva Mill's case." (AIR 1980 SC 1789).
9. The Court then proceeded to examine the competence and independence of the Members, Vice-Chairman and Chairman of the Tribunal. The Court struck down Section 6(1) (c) of the Act which prescribed that a person who for at least two years held the post of a Secretary to the Government of India or other equivalent post will also qualify to be the Chairman of the Tribunal. This has no bearing on the facts of the present case. What is relevant for us is how the Court viewed the question so as to ensure independence of the Members as well as of the Chairman and Vice-Chairman of the Tribunal. The Act already had a provision that the judicial members would be appointed only in consultation with the Chief Justice of India but for the Administrative members as well as for the Chairman and Vice-Chairman, no such provision was made, thereby giving unfettered discretion to the Government to make such appointments. It is in this context that the Court laid down the mode of their selection. To quote from the judgment of Misra. J. :- (at P. 397 of AIR)
"We do not want to say anything about Vice-chairman and members dealt with in sub-sections (2), (3) or (3-A), because so far as their selection is concerned we are of the view that such selection when it is not of a sitting judge or retired judge of a High Court should be done by a high powered committee with a sitting judge of the Supreme Court to be nominated by the Chief Justice of India as its Chairman. This will ensure selection of proper and competent people to man these high offices of trust and help to build up reputation and acceptability."
10. The Court desired amendments to bring the provisions in accordance with the observations made in the judgment and hoped that the amendments would be brought about by 31-3-1987.
11. Bhagwati, J. in his judgment considered the method of appointment of the Judges of the High Court, i.e. appointment by the Government in consultation with the Chief Justice of India and observed (AIR 1987 SC 386 at P. 392):-
"Obviously, therefore, if the Administrative Tribunal is created in substitution of the High Court and the jurisdiction of the High Court under Articles 226 and 227 is taken away and vested in the Administrative Tribunal, the same independence from the possibility of executive pressure or influence must also be ensured to the Chairman and members of the Administrative Tribunal. Or else the Administrative Tribunal would cease to be equally effective and efficacious substitute for the High Court and the provisions of the impugned Act would be rendered invalid. I am, therefore, of the view that the appointment of Chairman, Vice-Chairman and Administrative members should be made by the concerned Government only after consultation with the Chief Justice of India and such consultation must be meaningful and effective....".

12. The method suggested by Misra, J. was also accepted by Bhagwati, J. as alternative for ensuring independence of the Chairman, Vice-Chairman and Members of the Administrative Tribunals but with a little modification. Bhagwati, J. advised setting up of a High Powered Selection Committee "headed by the Chief Justice of India, or a sitting judge of the Supreme Court or concerned High Court nominated by the Chief Justice of India." Said the learned Judge: (at P. 392 of AIR)

"Both these modes of appointment will ensure selection of proper and competent persons to man the Administrative Tribunal and give it prestige and reputation which would inspire confidence in the public mind in regard to the competence, objectivity and impartiality of those manning the Administrative Tribunal. If either of these two modes of appointment is adopted, it would save the impugned Act from invalidation. Otherwise, it will be outside the scope of the power conferred on Parliament under Article 323-A. I would, however hasten to add that the judgment will operate only prospectively and will not invalidate appointments already made to the Administrative Tribunal."

13. The amendment that has been brought about is Section 6(7), by Act 51 of 1987 is to the effect that the appointments to the post of Chairman, Vice-Chairman and Members shall not be made except after consultation with the Chief Justice of India.

14. It needs to be mentioned here that the Central Government, in view of the discrepancy in the views expressed by the two learned judges, sough clarification by filing a review petition which was decided by an order dated 5-5-1987 reported in (1987) Supp. SCC 734. The Court ordered:

"Having considered the matter carefully we are of the opinion that in the case of recruitment to the Central Administrative Tribunal the appropriate course would be to appoint a High Powered Selection Committee headed by a sitting Judge of the Supreme Court to be nominated by the Chief Justice of India, while in the case of recruitment to the State Administrative Tribunals, the High Powered Selection Committee should be headed by a sitting Judge of the High Court to be nominated by the Chief Justice of the High Court concerned."

15. The Central Government yet again filed review petitions Nos. 520-23 of 1987 seeking modification of the Court's order to the effect that consultation with the Chief Justice of India alone be prescribed as sufficient because selection by a High Powered Selection Committee was likely to be time consuming. The review petitions also prayed for extension of time for bringing about the amendments. It appears from the order reported in (1987) Supp. SCC 737 that the Court did not make any order on the prayer for modification of the order although it granted extension of time prayed for. To questions that confront us at this stage are:

(a) Whether the direction to set up a High Powered Selection Committee was mandatory or simply advisory in nature; and

(b) Whether non compliance of the direction in making the amendment vitiates the amendment:

16. The judgment, carefully read, clearly indicates that the direction for setting up a High Powered Selection Committee was merely advisory and not mandatory in character. The Act originally provided that the judicial members were to be appointed after consultation with the Chief Justice of India. Neither Bhagwati, J. nor Misra, J. has found fault with it.

Bhagwati, J. indicated that since their is no such provision for the selection / appointment of the Chairman, Vice-Chairman and Administrative Members, there was a risk that they would not be independent of executive influence. Hence Bhagwati, J. suggested that the Chairman, Vice-Chairman and Administrative Members should also be appointed only after consultation with the Chief Justice of India. Misra, J. suggested appointment of the High Powered Selection Committee for all including the judicial members without indicating why selection after consultation with the Chief Justice of India was not acceptable. Obviously, Misra, J. did not discard the method of selection of judicial members after consultation with the Chief Justice of India. Nor did Bhagwati, J. Even in the orders passed on the review petitions no observation against appointments after consultation with the Chief Justice of India was made.

17. The Court was confronted with the problem of ensuring independence of the personnel of the Tribunal. There could be several ways of ensuring such independence. Bhagwati, J. mentioned two such methods while Misra, J. advocated one. In the review petition again the Court altered the constitution of the High Powered Selection Committee by saying that it should be headed by a Supreme Court Judge when selecting the members of the Central Administrative Tribunal but by a High Court judge when selecting the members of the State Administrative Tribunals. Coming to selection of the Members of the High Powered Selection Committee itself, the Court did not make any suggestion or order. It cannot be disputed that many other methods for selection to ensure independence of the personnel of the Tribunal could be suggested. The Court itself considered some of the possible modes and preferred the one mentioned in the order in review reported in (1987) Supp. SCC 734. In the subsequent review petition in which the Government again wanted only consultation with the Chief Justice of India to be accepted as the method of selection of the candidates the Court did not reiterate the previous decision. Nor did it say that the appointment after consultation with the Chief Justice of India was not acceptable. It ordered as under:

"In view of what has been stated before us by the learned Attorney General of India, we extend the time granted to the Union of India up to January 31, 1988 for introducing necessary changes in the statute through legislative enactment in Parliament or by issuing a Presidential Ordinance. We trust it will not be necessary now for the Union of India to seek any further extension of time as this matter has been pending for a long time. The civil miscellaneous petitions are disposed of accordingly."

18. On behalf of the Union of India it is submitted that the previous order regarding the High Powered Selection Committee stood modified by this order and the Government accordingly introduced the Amending Act any to make provision for consultation with the Chief Justice of India. Although it cannot be said that the prayer of the Union of India to introduce the provision to consult the Chief Justice of India in preference to the High Powered Selection Committee was allowed by the Court. It can be perceived that the Court itself did not reject the prayer or reiterate the previous suggestion. That means the view expressed in the order dated 5-5-1987* stood unaltered.

* reported in (1987) Supp SCC 774

19. Now we come to the next question, viz., whether non-compliance with the direction regarding the High Powered Selection Committee vitiates the amendment. Normally even an obiter dictum is expected to be obeyed and followed. In our view further discussion would be purely academic for the simple reason that without amending Section 6(7), the dicta of the Court has in fact been made effective by the appointment of High Powered Selection Committees both at the Central level as well as the State levels with minor modifications. Since these Committees are now expected to make the choice of candidates whose names may be recommended to the Chief Justice of India for final approval, the order of 5-5-1987 is fully complied with. Of course, names may be suggested to the Committee by any source but the ultimate decision has to be taken by the Committee and if the Chief Justice of India is not personally heading the Committee, the final decision would have to be taken by him on the recommendation of the Committee. It would, thus, be seen that without amending Section 6(7), the Government has given effect to the Court's view expressed in the order dated 5-5-1987 which renders the challenge academic and unnecessary to examine.

20. The next question is what was the scope of the enquiry before the High Court? In para 2 of the impugned judgment the High Court has disclosed that the petitioners challenged the validity of the appointments of the appellants as they were made in violation of the direction of this Court given in S.P. Sampath Kumar's case (AIR 1987 SC 386). The petitioners added at the time of hearing, as can be seen from para 4 of the impugned judgment, a plea that instead of selection, the appointments were made by nomination without considering all eligible and available candidates so that the best amongst them could be selected.

21. The Government of India as well as the Government of Madhya Pradesh placed before the High Court the files relating to the impugned appointments. The High Court has gone into a detailed analysis of how the proposal for appointment of the appellants was mooted and how the same was processed right up to the then Chief Justice of India. The High Court observed that the entire procedure was fraudulent not only because of the Government's failure in bringing about a proper amendment but also because of the failure on the part of Government of Madhya Pradesh to select the candidates through a Selection Committee appointed by the Government of India on 15-4-1991. Admittedly, intimation thereof was given to the State Governments by letter dated 19-4-1991. The High Court further observed that even the appointment of the Selection Committee was not in accordance with the order of this Court which provided for appointment of a High Powered Selection Committee. However, the Selection Committee constituted by the Government of India comprised only the Chief Justice of the High Court, the Chief Secretary and the Law Secretary.

22. The High Court on an analysis of the various notes on the Government files observed that the appellants R.P. Kapur and G.S. Patel used their own influence as Chief Secretary and Law Secretary to get themselves appointed on the State Administrative Tribunal and, therefore, their appointments were fraudulent. The appellants pointed out that the High Court committed serious errors in appreciating how the selection process moved. In fact when the High Court examined the files of the Government, the hearing had concluded on 16-12-1992 and the appellants had no opportunity to explain the various notes on the files since the same were produced in Court on 29-7-1993. This itself was against the rules of natural justice. Moreover, the applicants did not allege that the appointments had been secured by the appellants by practising fraud on the Government and were, therefore, bad. Was it open to the High Court to enter upon an enquiry of this nature within the ambit of the writ jurisdiction?

23. It is not in dispute that all the appellants were duly qualified and eligible for the posts against which they had been appointed. There is no allegation that any of them was not suitable for any reason whatsoever. All of them had been appointed after consultation with the then Chief Justice of India. There was no violation of any law in the process of their appointments.

24. The judgment in S.P. Sampath Kumar's case (AIR 1987 SC 386) was delivered in 1987. In that very year, the Act had been amended in compliance with the judgment. The Selection Committee was appointed only on 15-4-1991. This was communicated to the State Government on 19-4-1991. In the order dated 15-4-1991, as quoted in the impugned judgment, there is no reference to the judgment of this Court. As such although it can be said that this order of appointment of the Selection Committee must have been inspired by the judgment, it cannot be said that this was solely in obedience to the order of this Court. It is clear, as observed by the High Court, that the Selection Committee was not a High Powered Committee. As such failure to process the appointments through the Selection Committee will not mean non-compliance with any order of this Court or of any statutory provision. We must not lose sight of the fact that the Government of India itself, despite such order of appointment of Selection Committee, approved the proposals for appointment. In fact the appointments of the appellants other than that of R.P. Kapur had already been approved by the Chief justice of India before the appointment of the Selection Committee was communicated to the State Government. On 15-4-1991 itself the file with the proposal of the appointments was sent to the Chief Justice of India with the approval of the Prime Minister mentioning further that in view of the Supreme Court order of 9-4-1991 in Writ Petition No. 497 of 1990 Shailendra Kumar Gangrade v. Union of India, for making appointments in State Administrative Tribunal within four weeks time, the matter was urgent. The then Chief Justice of India accorded his approval on 18-4-1991 to the appointments of Messrs Lamba, M.N. Virmani, G.S. Patel and Rajwade. It would not be proper to say that because on 15-4-1991 the Government of India constituted the Committee for selection which was not even communicated to any State Government till 19-4-1991, the approval granted by the then Chief Justice of India be set at naught and the whole process of selection/nomination be redone.

25. So far as appellant R.P. Kapur is concerned, the Selection Committee could not be ignored. His name was proposed by the Chief Minister himself on 27-4-1991. The proposal was approved by the Government on 30-4-1991. Subsequently, however, the Secretary, General Administrative Department, noted that the proposal had to be sent to the Selection Committee. It was further noted by him on the file that the Chief Secretary himself being the candidate proposed could not be associated with the Selection Committee. The Committee, therefore, of necessity comprised only of the Chief Justice of the High Court of Madhya Pradesh and the Law Secretary. The Chief Justice approved the name of R.P. Kapoor when the file was presented to him by the Law Secretary himself. The Law Secretary's note itself mentions constitution of the Committee as also his own approval to the proposal to appoint R.P. Kapoor as the Vice-Chairman. The High Court, in the impugned order has observed that the Chief Justice was not told about the appointment of the Selection Committee. This is, however, not borne out from any record. It has to be presumed that in the usual course of business the Chief Justice had gone through the entire file before according his approval to the proposal to appoint R.P. Kapoor as the Vice-Chairman of the State Administrative Tribunal, Madhya Pradesh. Out of the three members of the Selection Committee, one, being the candidate himself, could not participate in the selection process. The other two, namely, the Chief Justice of the High Court and the Law Secretary approved the name of R.P. Kapoor. It cannot be said that merely because the name of R.P. Kapoor was mooted by the Chief Minister, the subsequent approval by the members of the Selection Committee was bad. It may be said at the cost of repetition that there is no averment that there was anyone more suitable than R.P. Kapoor for the post of the Vice-Chairman who was deliberately ignored by either the Chief Minister or the Selection Committee or the State Chief Justice. Nor is there any averment that for some reason R.P. Kapoor should not have been appointed the Vice-Chairman of the Administrative Tribunal. The finding of the High Court that the appointments of R.P. Kapoor and G.S. Patel were vitiated because their appointments were the result of their own machination cannot be upheld. Nor can it be said that their appointments were fraudulent or otherwise vitiated. This High Court seems to have read too much from the notes on the file and, with respect, has drawn unsustainable and wholly unwarranted inference based on, if we may say so, suspicion.

26. Before we part we would like to make a few general observations. As has been pointed out earlier long after the hearing had concluded the Court had called for the files which were produced on 29-7-1993. The Court inspected the files and has drawn its own conclusions on the basis of the notings without giving the parties, the appellants, against whom the inferences were drawn any opportunity to explain the same. This was clearly in violation of the basic rule of natural justice. The Court should have been extra cautious since it was casting serious aspersions against the appellants, particularly, R.P. Kapoor. As we shall briefly point out, the conclusion that "the appointments... are result of murky self motivated machinations" and are, therefore, "vitiated by bias," is not borne out from the material relied on by the High Court. In the first place in must be remembered that the original petitioners had filed writ petitions in the High Court wherein they had sought an interim order against their repatriation to their parent department. On the constitution of the Tribunal their writ petitions were transferred to the Tribunal. The Government had moved an application for vacating the interim order and apprehending that the stay may be vacated, they challenged the constitution of the Tribunal. The idea was to paralyse the Tribunal and prevent it from hearing their petitions for otherwise ordinarily the litigant would like that his case proceeds. In the circumstances it is difficult to say that the petitioners were actuated by considerations of public interest. Secondly, it is not in dispute that all the Members/Vice-Chairman were eligible for appointment, in that, they were fully qualified. Thirdly, it must be remembered that the proposal for the appointment of Members had been initiated much 15-4-1991 and had been cleared by the State functionaries long before that date and by the then Chief Justice of India before the decision was communicated by the Central Government to the States on 19-4-1991. It is legitimate to assume that the proposal must have been thoroughly scrutinised by the Chief Justice of India before he gave his approval to the same. Fourthly it is necessary to notice that R.P. Kapoor was on deputation to the Government of India since 1980 and he was repatriated to the State in 1990 and, therefore, in the absence of positive evidence of his interference it would not be correct to attribute motives to him for the State Government's decision to shift the seat of Vice-Chairman to Bhopal on 4-1-1989. Actually in 1989 he was stationed at Hyderabad. Similarly much has been read into the note, discuss, made on 6-3--1991. As explained by R.P. Kapoor in his submissions before this Court that he desired to discuss the matter as he had some doubt in regard to the vacancy position which, as the subsequent note of the Secretary, GAD., would show, turned out to be correct. So also much ado has been made about the Law Secretary personally carrying the file to Patna where the Chief Justice of Madhya Pradesh was then camping. There was urgency for the clearance of the file because of the time-frame set by judicial orders. It is wrong to read in this visit any oblique motive. The Law Secretary in his capacity as a member of the Committee was deputed to go to Patna so that he may be able to apprise the Chief Justice of the proposal and explain any matter on which the latter would need clarification. It is wrong to infer that the Law Secretary felt obliged to R.P. Kapoor because the latter had not recommended the former's name but the recommendation had come from the then Chief Minister. Even if in normal course of business R.P. Kapoor had in fact recommended his name as a part of his duty, that should not make any difference. Besides, it is clear from the affidavit of the Ex-Law Secretary that he knew that his appointment was cleared by the Government of India long before he proceeded to Patna. There was, therefore, no question of his being under the influence of R.P. Kapoor so as to affect his independent judgment. It is indeed true the R.P. Kapoor in his capacity as Chief Secretary forwarded the file to the Chief Minister on 11-4-1991 proposing his name as Vice-Chairman which was returned by the Chief Minister to the Secretary, GAD, on 27-4-1991. Did forwarding of the file amount to 'active association' with the process of appointment? The fact that under the Rules of Business framed under Article 166 of the Constitution, it is not disputed that the normal channel of submission was through the Chief Secretary. Two options were, therefore, available to R.P. Kapoor; either he as a part of his duty forward the file or refuse to endorse the file. There is nothing else on record to show his active participation therefore. So far as Secretary, GAD, is concerned, he marked the file to the Chief Secretary as per the Rules of Business. There was nothing else he could have done. The Chief Secretary could have avoided to endorse the file but to do so also he would have been required to say so. He chose to quietly forward the file to the Chief Minister without his own comment. It seems to us that the High Court read too much in this action of the Chief Secretary in describing the ultimate appointment as fraudulent. After all when the name of a Chief Secretary about to retire is proposed for appointment, it is impossible to think that the Chief Secretary would not know about it, if the Chief Secretary pretends ignorance, no Court will accept the same as correct. Therefore, even if the Chief Secretary had not endorsed the file, it would not have made any difference. It was ultimately for the Chief Minister to take a decision which was to be approved by the governor as well as the Chief Justice of India. There is no hint on record to infer that he had in any manner influenced the decision of these functionaries. Therefore, merely because he forwarded the file to the Chief Minister which he was required to do as per the extant Rules of Business that ought not to be construed as an act to influence the decision of the aforesaid functionaries. Even without singing the file in normal course of business, he could have done the 'goading and egging' while pretending total ignorance. We are, therefore, of the view that the High Court read too much in this act of the Chief Secretary R.P. Kapoor. This suspicion of the High Court unfortunately coloured its vision resulting in it viewing each ad every action leading to his appointment with suspicion. These, in brief, are a few aspects of the case which we have highlighted to demonstrate how the High Court fell into an error and misdirected itself causing miscarriage of justice. We must undo this injustice by allowing this appeal and setting aside the impugned judgment and order of the High Court and giving appropriate directions as under.

27. The appellants should be allowed to resume their office. Hence we direct that the appellants, as far as possible, be allowed to resume their office unless any one or more of them has or have retired. In case any of them have since attained the age of retirement, the State will treat them as on duty up to the date of retirement and work out their retrial benefits accordingly. All the appellants shall be entitled to arrears of pay and allowances from the date of judgment of the High Court up to the date of resumption of duty or date of retirement. The appeals succeed accordingly and the original writ petition will stand dismissed.

28. We are satisfied beyond any manner of doubt that the petitions filed by the three police Inspectors were, to say the least, motivated with a view to deriving personal benefits and not in public interest. Their idea was to paralyse the working of the Tribunal and benefit from the delay at the cost of other litigants. Otherwise how were they concerned with the legality of their appointments? This, in our view, is a glaring case of abuse of the process of the Court in the name of public interest. Can such petitioners be allowed to get away unscathed? We think they must be saddled with exemplary costs. We, therefore, direct that each petitioner shall pay a sum of Rs. 15,000/- by way of costs. The amount of cost may be recovered from the provident fund/gratuity or any other future monetary benefit including pension or in ordinary course by executing the order.

Appeal allowed.

Hence suggestion was given to him that the Food Inspector prepared the panchanama for samples before his arrival, but same was denied by him.

19. Turning to the deposition of PW3 Subhash Balkishan Kamble, Junior Scientific Officer, Public Analyst's Office, Solapur, who stated that he was posted at Nanded office from November, 1993 till December, 1997 and on 28-4-1994 he received sample of turmeric powder-and duplicate copy of Form No. 7 along with specimen seal, from PW1 M. S. Pati 1. He stated that he tallied the specimen seal with the seal affixed oh the container and found that sample was fit for analysis. Thereafter he got analysed the tufmetibpowder from the Chemist, namely P. B. Halkunde in their Laboratory and they noric'ed'rifce starch and common salt in turmeric pfofwtfer. However, they found that there was salt of 2.31 per cent, adulterated in turmeric powder: However, he could not calculate the exact percentage of adulterated rice starch and stated that there is no specific method to find out percentage of rice starch if adulterated in turmeric powder. Accordingly, he prepared the analysis report and prepared four copies thereof and sent the same to die office of Food and Drugs Inspector, Nanded and copy thereof is produced at Exh. 43. He further stated that adulteration of any foreign substance in turmeric powder is prescribed under Rule 44H-Gftl»e said Rules, as well as he stated that he 'found that the analysed sample was adulterated one.

20. During cross-examination he admitted that, he analysed the sampte after 14 days of its'receipt, but till then the said sample was kept in the custody of Chemist. He also stated that be possessed the form on which the re-sult of analysis of sample is noticed. However, he could not state as to whether it is mentioned on me form of analysis mat samples analysed were found in tact before its analysis. As regards analysis, he stated that he opened the sample on 28-4-1994 and found four packets of turmeric powder packed in a container, and thereafter he handed over two packets out of four for analysis purpose. Accordingly, he received its report from Chemist on 11-5-1994, but he could not state on which date which chemical test was completed. As regards the said reports, he stated that the same were upto the permitted level except starch test and the turmeric powder contained starch. He also stated that microscopic test was carried out in this particular case and same was mentioned in the report. He further stated that he noticed kinds of rice starch and turmeric powder under the microscope, but stated that they did not conduct any other chemical test to bifurcate the rice starch and turmeric powder. He further stated that on the basis of results, test report was submitted by the Chemist. However, he could not state how much other samples were analysed by the Chemist during the analysis of turmeric sample simultaneously. Hence, suggestion was given to him that there was possibility of adulteration of foreign substance in their laboratory, but same was denied by, him. Suggestions were also given to him that there was mistake on the part of the Chemist at the time of .analysis of sample and the said Chemist analysed the sample negligently, but same were denied by him.

21. That takes me to the testimony of PW5 Gajanan Govind Joshi, Investigating Officer, who was serving as Assistant Commissioner, Food and Drugs Administration, Nanded at the relevant time i.e. on 26-7-1993 and PW1 M. S. Patil was working as Food Inspector in his office. He stated that PWI M. S. Patil, was Food Inspector handed over two sealed packets to him on 28-4-1-994 and in one packet out of the same, there were sealed counterpart, of the samples, taken, and in addition to .that there were twacopies of Form No. 7; whereas in the second .Racket, two specimen seal impressions of the seal used for sampling and a covering letter were found. He further stated that after receipt of the above two packets from M. S. Patil, Food Inspector,' he gave two separate receipts on the same day i.e. 28-4-1994 and said receipts are produced at Exhs. 36 and 37, respectively. He admitted that the said receipts bear his signatures.

22. It is recited in his deposition that the Public Analyst, Nanded had given a report on 30-5-1994, but it does not reflect what was sent to Public Analyst, District Health Laboratory arid it was received oil 3-6-1994 and one of the copies of the said report was handed over to the Food Inspector Patil and copy thereof is produced at Exh. 43. Moreover, original report was also filed before the Court, which bore his signature and date, which is marked Exh. 88. Thereafter the Food Inspector communicated him fri respect of filing of present case against the accused on 17-10-1995, which is produced along with list Exh. 85 at Sr. No. 4, and which is marked Exh. 89, which bore the signature of Food Inspector

Gore and his signature in token of receipt thereof. Accordingly, an'ifftimation was given to the accused in respect of filing of case against them in the Court by letter dated 18-10-1995 and the said letter/iiotice, along with copy of the report of Public Analyst, District Health Laboratory, was Self 'by R.P.A.D., as well as separate letter was sent to each of the accused and office copy, thereof dated 18-1- 1995 is filed by him off/record, which is marked Exh. 90. He also produced postal receipts of R.P.A.D. showing that the said letters were sent to the accused by R.P. A.D. and marked Exh. 91. The said letter was received by accused No. 1 and his postal acknowledgment is produced on record mid marked Exh. 92. However, the letter sentto accused No. 2 was returned back without service to him and same is produced on record and marked Exh. 93 and same was received back by the Investigating Officer on 31-10-1995,

23. During cross-exa'hima'tion, he admitted that he has not made it s&te that signature appearing on the acknowledgment receipt Exh. 92 was of accused No; 1; as well as he cannot say whether the signature on Exh. 92 was not of accused No. 1. He afso further stated cordance with Rules 14 to 17 of the said Rules and the sample was taken in a polythene bag and not in a clean bottle or jar as contemplated and the said short comings vitiated the prosecution case and the Trial Court has rightly acquitted the accused persons and there are no extra ordinary reasons to interfere therein, and hence, urged that present appeal be dismissed and acquittal rendered by the Trial Court be upheld.

33. I have perused the oral and documentary evidence adduced and produced by the prosecution, as well as perused the impugned judgment and order dated 14-3-2000 and considered the submissions advanced by the learned counsel for the parties anxiously, as well as perused the observations made and ratios laid down in the judicial pronouncements cited by the learned counsel for the respondents carefully and it is evident that Rule 44H of the said Rules in respect of restriction on sale of common salt has been deleted with effect from 30-9-200Qas per G.S.R. No. 716(E), dated 13-9-2000. Moreover, as canvassed by the learned Senior counsel for the respondents, as regards compliance of Section 10(2) of the said Act, there is no evidence to show that the samples were taken from the turmeric powder for the sale, as well as the procedure in accordance with Section 11 pf the said Act was complied with by,,the Food Inspector M-S. Patil. Moreover, it is evident from the evidence that PW1 M.S. Patil Food Inspector has not taken bulk quantity of turmeric powder for sample purpose. It is also evident from the evidence on record that Food Inspector, M. S. Patil while sampling separated 12 packets in three equal parts i.e. four packets each containing turmeric powder therein and he did not collect the turmeric powder from the said, 12 packets together and did not separate the said quantity of turmeric powder in three parts for analysis purpose and the said such separation of 12 packets Itself in three parts as samples for analysis purpose is not permissible, which leads to jibe position that sampling was not doneby PW1 Food Inspector M. S. Patil properly Which certainly causes' prejudice to the respondents/accused and since the sampling of the'turmeric powder itself is faulty, there is substance in the submissions advanced by the learned Senior Counsel Shri Mandlik for the respondents. In the said context, reliance can very well be placed on the judgment of Division Bench of. this Court in, the case of State of Maharashtra v. Lakhmi-chand Suganchand Agrawal & others, reported at 1998 All MR (Cri) 953 (supra).

34. Moreover, it is also apparent from the evidence on record that PW2 M. S. Patil Food Inspector has not taken the sample in bottle or jar or container, but took the sample in a polythene bag and sent to the Public Analyst, which is not permissible and such taking of sample in polythene bag amounts to violation of mandatory provision of Rule 14 of the said Rules, and therefore, conviction cannot be based against the respondents on such defective sampling and the view adopted by th$ learned single Judge of Patna High Court (in the case of Binod Kumar v. State of Bihar; reported at 2004 FAJ 465, (supra) supports the said proposition.

35. So also, the submissions made by the learned Senior Counsel Shri Mandlik for the respondents that the prosecution has not complied with the mandatory provisions of Rules 14 to 17 of the said Rules in respect of sealing, fastening and dispatching of samples, as well as PW1 M. S. Patil Food Inspector has not complied with Section 11 of the said Act in respect of procedure tobe fbltewed by the Food Inspectors cannot be overlooked while assessing the evidence on record;

36. As regards the compliance of Section 13(2) of the said Act, after receiving the report of Public Analyst, the reasoning adopted by the learned Trial Judge that notice thereof was properly served upon accused No. 1 and the defence of violation of mandatory provision under Section 13(2) of the said Act i.e. serving of notice to accused'No. 1 is not available to accused No. 1, appears to be proper. In the said context, it is material to note that accused No. 1 has submitted the bill of pur-chise of packets of turmeric powder from accused No. 2, which is produced at Exh. 40 andit has come in the evidence of (PW2) that accused No. i has product tfie[1] original bifl dated 22-4-1994 along with letter dated 18-5-1984 Exh.39 and the said lBtt^lsaddiessed tortile Assistant CommissiOiidF, Food and Drugs Administration.(M.S.), Nanded and it is admitted fact that PW1 M. S. Patil Food Inspector visited the shop of accused No. 1 on 27-4-1994 and purchased 12 packets of turmeric powder from his shop. Hence, con-sidering the said aspect, it is amply clear that accused No. 1 purchased the said packets of turmeric powder from accused No. 2 on 22-4-1994 as per bill Exh. 40, which were consequently purchased by PW1 M. S. Patil Food Inspector from accused No. 1 on 27-4-1994 for analysis purpose, and accordingly, since accused No; 1 purchased the packets of turmeric powder from accused No. 2 as per printed bill Exh.40, accused No. 1 has been absolved from the liability, since accused No. 2 is the manufacturer of the said turmeric powder,

37. As regards the report of Public Analyst in accordance with Section 13 of the said Act, PW3 Subhash Kamble, Junior Scientific Officer categorically stated in his deposition that he .got analysed the, turmeric powder from the Chemist in the Laboratory, namely P. B. Halkunde, who is subordinate to him and lie received the test report from the said Chemist on 11-5-1994. However, he could not state on which day which chemical test was completed: Pertinently, although PW3 Subhash Kamble admitted in his testimony that said P. B. Halkunde, Chemistis alive, the said material witness, who, in fact, carried out the analysis of the turmeric, powder, was not examined by the prosecution. It is important to note that PW3 Subhash Kajnpte admitted in his deposition that he prepared analysis report on the basis of result of test reports submitted by Chemist, but he cannot state howmuch other samples were analysed by the Chemist during the analysis of turmeric powder sample simultaneously. Therefore, it is significant to note that PW3 Subhash Kamble has no personal knowledge; whereas P. B. Halkunde, Chemist, who carried,out the analysis of the sample of turmeric powder, although was alive, was.., withheld and not examined by the prosecution and the said inaction on the part of the pros, ecution sustain,S|fatal blow to the case of the prosecution.

38. As regards compliance of Section. 113(2) of the said Act in respect of accused

No. 2, it appears that accused No. 2 was not served at all and Form No. 7 was not sent along with the sample by the Food Inspector, and the said fact is evident from the R.P.A.D. Packet Exh. 93, and therefore, the liability of accused No. 2, who is the manufacturer of the said turmeric powder, is also absolved in view of non-compliance of Section 13(2) of the said Act.

39. Coming to the report of the Public Analyst Exh.88, apparently there is substance in die submissions made by the learned Senior Counsel Shri Mandlik for die appellant that all the ingredients of turmeric powder shown . therein are within the permissible limits prescribed under Rule A.05.20.01 pertaining to turmeric (Haldi) powder, which conforms the prescribed standards in respect of moisture, total ash, ash insoluble in dilute HCI, test for lead chromate and total starch, as mentioned in para No. 28 herein above. Besides, it can-' not be ignored that although microscopic examination was not prescribed under the Act, PW5 Gajanan Joshi admitted that such microscopic examination was carried out.

40. Moreover, there is'also substance in the submission made by learned Senior Counsel regarding the sodium contents in the sample of turmeric powder, which[1] is within the limits as prescribed by the afore said Rules, since the sodium chloride contained 2.31 per cent, i.e. salt, which is not hazardous to human be- ing, and hence, it is amply clear that me sample of turmeric powder doeStibt come within the mischief of alleged charges against the ac- cused.

41. Having the comprehensive view of the matter, I am inclined to accept the submis sions advanced by the learned Senior Counsel Shri Mandlik that the prosecution has failed to make out any case for adulteration, and as dis- cussed herein above, PW1M. S. Patil has failed to follow the procedure, which was required to be followed whiletaking the samples in ac- cordance with Rules 14 to 17 of the said Rules and more particularly, the sample which was taken by him in polythene bag and not in clean bottle or jar, as contemplated in the afore said Rules, vitiates the prosecution case, and the Trial Court has rightly acquitted the accused . persons. Besides that, aner scrutinizing and analysing the evidence, the view adopted by the Trial Court while acquitting the accused persons is a possible view, and same does not appear to be perverse, and therefore, no interference therein is called for in the present appeal, and hence, there is no substance in the present appeal and same is devoid of any merits, and therefore, same deserves to be rejected.

42. Before departing, it is inevitable to make mention that, the learned A.P.P. while making the arguments before the learned Trial Judge cited the Ruling of Kerala High Court in the case of Food Inspector v. James, (reported in Prevention of Food Adulteration Cases) at 1998 (1) P.320, and while discussing the observations made in the said Ruling, the learned Trial Judge has observed in para No. 31 of the impugned judgment that:

"With great respect, I do not agree with the 'view taken' and observations made by Their Lordships in the above case law. Moreover, the said case law is admittedly of Kerala High Court and the same is not binding on this Court."

43. Moreover, while making submissions before the learned Trial Judge, learned A.P.P. also cited Ruling in the case of Rambhai v. State of Madhya Pradesh (Reported in Prevention of Food Adulteration Cases) at 1991 (1) P. 6, as stated in para 34 of the impugned judgment, but the learned Trial Judge, after considering the said ratio laid down in the said Ruling, observed in para No. 35 6T the impugned judgment that: "After going through the observations made by Their Lordships in the above case law, I am of the opinion that though the Ruling is applicable to the present case, however, according to me, with great respect the view taken in the observations of the Ruling is not correct."

44. It manifestly appears from the text and tenor of the observations made by the learned Trial Judge in para Nos. 31 and 35 of the impugned judgment that same do not conform with the judicial discipline and propriety, and apparently amount to disrespect, and therefore, the Registrar General is directed to take suitable action against the concerned Judge, if he is in Judicial Service.

45. In the result, present appeal, which is sans merits, stands dismissed and office to take necessary steps to initiate suitable action against the learned Trial Judge, if he is in Judicial Service, as per the afore said directions. Office to send a copy of the impugned judgment, dated 14-3-2000 and also copy of the present judgment to the Registrar General for the necessary compliance

…Appeal dismissed.

* From Judgement and Order of the Andh. Pra. Administrative Tribunal, Hyderabad in R.P. No. 1586 of 1986, D/- 26-3-1987.

JUDGMENT :- Permission to file S.L.P. granted. Impleadment application allowed.

2. Delay condoned.

3. Leave granted.

4. The short question that arises in these appeals is whether the post of Regional Transport Officer in the Department of Transport can be filled in by transfer of Section Officers of the Secretariat and Superintendents of the Office of the State Transport Authority. The recruitment to the posts of Regional Transport Officers are governed by the rules known as Andhra Pradesh Transport Services Rules framed under Article 309 of the Constitution (hereinafter referred to as the rules). Rule 3(a) provides the method of recruitment to the post of Regional Transport Officer. Rule 3(a) reads as under :-

Category IV : Regional Transport Officer-

1. By direct recruitment.

2. By promotion from among Motor Vehicles Inspectors.

3. By recruitment by transfer from among:

(i) Superintendents of the Office of the State Transport Authority.

(ii) Superintendents of the Subordinate Offices; and

(iii) Section Officers of the Secretariat except Law, Finance and Legislature Departments.

5. Rule 3(a) further provides that the first vacancy in the post of Regional Transport Office is to go to the Motor Vehicle Inspector. The second vacancy is meant for Superintendents of the Office of the State Transport Authority. The third vacancy is to go to Motor Vehicles Inspectors. The fourth vacancy is earmarked for Section Officers of the Secretariat. Fifth vacancy is for Superintendents of subordinate offices of the Multizone. Sixth vacancy is for Motor Vehicles Inspectors. Seventh vacancy is meant for Superintendents of subordinate offices of the Multizone. It is against second and fourth vacancies, the employees working as Superintendents in the Office of the State Transport Authority and as Section Officers in the Secretariat were appointed as Regional Transport Officers by transfer. The said appointments were challenged by the employees working in the office of the Regional Transport Offices.

6. The Andhra Pradesh Administrative Tribunal found that the appointments of Superintendent in the office of State Transport Authority and Section Officers working in the Secretariat to the posts of Regional Transport Officers are contrary to the Presidential Order of 1975. Consequentially, their appointments were set aside. It is against the said order and judgment the appointees whose appointments were set aside and State of Andhra Pradesh are in appeal before us.

7. Learned counsel for the appellant urged that this matter stands concluded by a decision of this Court in the case of State of A. P. v. Sadanandam, 1989 Supp (1) SCC 574 (576) : (AIR 1989 SC 2060 : 1989 Lab IC 2024) wherein it was held that overriding power has been given to the State Government under paragraph 5(2) of the Presidential Order in express terms in recognition of the principle that public interest and administrative exigencies has precedence over the promotional interest of the members of the local cadres and zones and therefore, the State Government by order of transfer can fill the vacancies on the posts in different zones, as contemplated under the Rules.

8. Learned counsel for the respondent attempted to convince us that the decision in the case of State of A. P. v. V. Sadanandam, (AIR 1989 SC 2060 : 1989 Lab IC 2024) (supra) has to be ignored on the principle of per incuriam as certain relevant provisions of the Rules were not considered in the said case, and in any case this case requires to be referred to a larger Bench of three Judges. Rule of per incuriam can be applied where a Court omits to consider a binding precedent of the same Court or the superior Court rendered on the same issue or where a Court omits to consider any statute while deciding that issue. This is not the case here. In State of A. P. v. V. Sadanandam (supra) the controversy was exactly the same as it is here and this Court after considering paragraph 5 of the Presidential Order of 1975 held that the Government has power to fill a vacancy in a zone by transfer. We, therefore, find that rule of per incuriam cannot be invoked in the present case. Moreover, a case cannot be referred to a larger Bench on mere asking of a party. A decision by two Judges has a binding effect on another co-ordinate Bench of two Judges, unless it is demonstrated that the said decision by any subsequent change in law or decision ceases to laying down a correct law. We, therefore, reject the arguments of learned counsel for the respondents.

9. Learned counsel for the respondents then urged that in any case para 5(2) of the Presidential Order does not permit the recruitment by transfer and the only power of the State Govt. under para 5(2) of the Presidential Order is to pass simpliciter order of transfer on an equivalent post. This very argument was also advanced in the case of State of A. P. v. Sadanandam, (1989 Supp (1) SCC 574 : AIR 1989 SC 2060 : 1989 Lab IC 2024 (supra). The relevant para 15 (of Supp SCC) : (Para 14 of AIR, Lab IC) is extracted below :

"In the first place, we must point out that the Tribunal has failed to construe para 5(2) of the Presidential Order in its proper perspective and give full effect to the powers conferred thereunder on the State Government to make provisions contrary to the scheme of local cadres prescribed under para 5(1). The words of sub-para (2) of para 5 viz., 'nothing in this order shall prevent the State Government from making provision for' sets out the overriding powers given to the State Government under sub-para. Such overriding powers have been given to the State Government in express terms in recognition of the principle that public interest and administrative exigencies have precedence over the promotional interests of the members belonging to local cadres and zones. Since para 5(2) also forms a part of the Presidential Order, it forms part of the scheme envisaged for creating local cadres and zones. The Tribunal was, therefore, in error in taking the view that if the State Govt. was to exercise its powers under para 5(2) and make provision for promotion of U.D. Assistant in the Directorate and Assistant Section Officers in the Secretariat to be transferred to posts in zones I to IV, it will be the very negation of the creation of cadres and zones under para 5(1) and it will be destructive of the scheme underlying the Presidential Order. In fact the Tribunal has realised the operative force of para 5(2) to some extent but it has failed to give full effect to its realisation of the scope of Section 5(2).

In para 12 of its judgment in R. P. No. 1595/1983 the Tribunal has stated that since the amended rule refers to para 5(2) of the Presidential Order 'it will no longer be open to the petitioners to attack the amendment as was done in respect of the earlier amendment in the previous R.P.'. The Tribunal has thus noticed that the amended rule has been brought about by the Government in exercise of its powers under para 5(2) but it has failed to draw the logical inference following therefrom."

10. Following the decision in the case of State of A. P. v. Sadanandam, (AIR 1989 SC 2060 : 1989 Lab IC 2024) (supra), we reject the arguments of counsel for the respondents.

11. For the aforesaid reasons these appeals deserve to be allowed. We accordingly set aside the judgments and orders under appeal. The appeals are allowed. There shall be no order as to costs. Appeal allowed.

Criminal Writ Petition No.1591 of 2003

12th March, 2004.

Shri . SUBHASH JHA with Mr. BHARAT VAISHNAWA i /b M/s. Bharat Vaishnawa & Co., for the Petitioners.

Shri . B. R. PATIL, P.P. for Respondent State .

Shri . A. R. DHANUKA, Advocate for Respondent No.2.

(A) Precedents - Courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction should have consistent opinions in respect of identical set of facts or on a question of law - If this rule is not followed instead of achieving harmony in the judicial system, it will lead to judicial anarchy - Hence like questions should be decided alike, otherwise on same question of law or same set of facts different persons approaching a court may get different orders – Supreme Court judgment in Hari Singh case followed. (Para [13])

(B) Constitution of India , Art.226 - Criminal P.C. (1973), S.482 - Quashing of proceedings under S.420, IPC - Court can quash proceedings even if discharge application is either not filed or is pending, if no offence is disclosed by the complaint - On facts held issue of process and further proceedings could not be sustained and the dispute was of a civil nature.

The High Court has sufficient powers to quash the criminal prosecution if it finds that initiation or continuance of the criminal proceedings amounts to abuse of the process of Court or quashing of the proceedings would otherwise serve the ends of justice, when no offence is disclosed by the complaint. This Court in a given case, can indubitably exercise the power under Section 482 of Code even if the discharge application is either not filed or is pending before the Trial Court, when the complaint does not make out any case against the accused and that no useful purpose is likely to be served by allowing the continuance of the criminal prosecution. The very purpose of exercising such power is to avoid agony of undergoing a criminal trial. It is also not comfortable thought for the petitioners to be told that they could appear before the Court, particularly which is at a far off place outside their State, seek their release on bail and then to either move an application for discharge or for recalling of the process or face trial when the complaint makes out no case against them or a dispute is of a civil nature. (Para [11])

In this case, the transaction between the complainant and the petitioners was purely a case of supplying the goods on credit and that the petitioners did not pay the value of the goods to the complainant. Moreover, the complaint, was also vague. It did not give particulars, such as dates of transactions, bill numbers, vouchers etc. The complainant had also not made any reference in the complaint, regarding the earlier transactions with the petitioners. Even in the reply affidavit the complainant has not given any particulars or controverted the statements made by the petitioners in the petition. The Magistrate is expected to be very careful while issuing the process in the complaint, particularly when the averments therein are vague and prima-facie do not disclose any offence or that the dispute reflected in the complaint is of a civil nature. The party to the criminal proceedings cannot be made to undergo the agony of trial which may take a number of years to end. In the present case, the dispute between the parties was of civil nature. It was purely a case of supplying goods on credit by the complainant and that the accused was not paying the value of the goods supplied to the complainant. Hence issue of process and further proceedings are liable to be quashed. (Paras [13 , 15])

JUDGMENT :- Rule. Rule returnable forthwith. Mr. B. R. Patil, Learned Public Prosecutor, waives service for Respondent No.1 State.

Mr. Dhanuka, Learned Counsel waives service for Respondent No.2-Complainant. Heard finally by consent of the learned counsel for the parties.

Petitioners pray that (a) That, this Hon'ble Court may be pleased to issue writ of certiorary or any other writ, order or direction, calling for papers and proceedings of the complaint/case No.147/S of 1997 (Old No.171/S/95) pending in the court of Metropolitan Magistrate's 32nd Court at Bandra, Mumbai, and after going through the legality or otherwise of the said case and process issued therein by the Learned Magistrate, this Hon'ble Court be pleased to quash and set aside the said proceedings and process issued therein; (b) That, pending the hearing and final disposal of the petition, the proceedings in the Case No.184/S/1997 (Old No.247/S/95) pending in the Court of Metropolitan Magistrate's 32nd Court, Bandra, Mumbai, be stayed; (c) That, ad-interim and interim reliefs in terms of prayer (b) above be granted; etc.

2. This writ petition was heard along with twenty six other writ petitions filed by different petitioners invoking the inherent powers of this Court under section 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (for short: 'the Code') read with Article 227 of the Constitution of India (for short, 'the Constitution') for quashing of the proceedings bearing Criminal Complaint/Case No.147/S of 1997, pending in the Court of the Metropolitan Magistrate. The facts in all the petitions are not only similar but they are also identical. The only difference in all the petitions is that of the names of the petitioners and the amounts involved. In view of this, the judgment in the instant writ petition would cover all other twenty-six writ petitions and they would also stand disposed of in accordance with this judgment.

3. The factual matrix revealed that petitioner No.2 is a trader from Andhra Pradesh and carries on business in the name and style of M/s. Shri Srinivasa Cut Pieces Cloth Shop-Petitioner No.1, situate at Rajahmundri. Respondent No.2 (for short: 'the Complainant') has filed the complaint against the petitioners and 28 others stating that he is the proprietor of Sai Syntax having his office in Mumbai. According to the complainant, the petitioners represented to him that they are dealing in textile goods/fabrics and that they intended to procure textile goods from the complainant through their agent M/s. S.K.V. Enterprises, Vijayawada . They further represented that they would pay interest at the rate of 24% per annum on delayed payment beyond 45 days and/or value of the goods would be paid within the stipulated period from the date of the invoice. It is further alleged that 45 days of they induced the Complainant to part with the textile goods on the aforesaid conditions and did not pay the value of the goods. The case of the complainant is that the petitioners had no intention of making the balance payment of the textile goods supplied by him and hence they have committed an offence punishable under Section 420 of the Indian Penal Code (for short 'I.P.C.'). The Petitioners, according to the complainant, caused wrongful loss of Rs.3 ,251 /- to them. The Complainant claims that he had called upon the Petitioners to make the payment, but they failed to do so and, therefore, a notice dated 21.2.1995 was sent through an Advocate. Thus, according to the complainant, the Petitioners, in furtherance of a common intention of cheating, induced the complainant to part with textile goods knowing fully well that they would not be able to clear the outstanding bills and have thereby caused a wrongful loss of Rs.3 ,251 /- to the complainant.

4. On the order hand, according to the petitioners they had dealings with the complainant during the period commencing from August, 1991 to March, 1993. They used to purchase the textile goods from the complainant through their agent at Vijaywada, M/s. S.K.V. Enterprises. They have categorically stated in the petition that during the aforestated period, under the various bills, they had purchased textile goods and made payments to the said agents and/or to the complainant by demand drafts/ cheques and occasionally in cash. It is also stated in the petition that the last such dealing with the complainant was on 10.3.1993 when, according to the petitioners, after making up accounts, they had made payments of all the outstanding dues to the complainant and nothing remained due and payable by them to the complainant. The particulars of the payment made by the petitioners are also given in the petition and that they have craved leave to refer to and rely upon the bills, receipts, bank statement, counterfoils of cheques and account book in respect of their dealings with the complainant. In paragraph 3(e) and (f), the petitioners have made a categoric statement that the complainant has filed over 125 cases against the traders from Vijaywada, Rajahmundri, Visakhapatnama, Trichy, East Godawari in Andhra Pradesh and in all these cases the complaint in stereotype. It is further stated that in all the complaints there are only 11 paragraphs, the averments, comma, fullstops are identical except that the names of the accused and the amounts are different. All the complaints are identical and there is no difference of any nature whatsoever in all 125 cases filed by the complainant.

5. It is in this backdrop, the petitioners have invoked the inherent powers of this Court seeking quashing of the criminal case pending since 1995 in the Court of the Metropolitan Magistrate at Bombay .

6. I have heard the learned counsel for the parties for quite sometime, perused the contents of the petition and annexures thereto and the reply affidavit filed by the respondents. The learned counsel for the parties have placed reliance upon several judgments of the Apex Court in support of their contentions.

7. Mr. Jha, learned counsel for the petitioners, at the outset, placed heavy reliance upon the order passed by this Court in Criminal Writ Petition No.95 of 1996 which came to be disposed of on 24.4.1997. In his submission, the complaint involved the Criminal Writ Petition No.95 of 1996 and the complaint in the instant writ petition are identical. In other words, the Criminal Case No.230/S/95, which was the subject matter of Criminal Writ Petition No.95 of 1996 is one out of 125 cases filed by the complainant against the traders from Andhra Pradesh. The complaint in the said case and the complainant in the instant case is identical. Both these complaints have 11 paragraphs and the averments, comma, fullstop are identical except the names and the amounts mentioned in these two complaints. The said writ petition was allowed by order dated 24.4.1997 and Criminal Case No.230/S/95 was quashed. He, therefore, submitted that the instant writ petition is squarely covered by the order passed by this Court in Criminal Writ Petition No.95 of 1996 and, therefore, deserves to be allowed.

8. Mr. Jha further submitted that the complainant has deliberately suppressed material facts while filing the complaint and it was filed only with a view to harass the traders from outside state and extract amounts which were not due from them. The complaint is vague as it does not make reference to the bill numbers and the vouchers. There is also no reference to the earlier dealings and the payments made by the petitioners from time to time either by cheques or by demand drafts or in cash. According to Mr. Jha, even if it is assumed that the amounts were still outstanding, the only remedy available to the petitioners was to file a civil suit and not the criminal cases inasmuch as the nature of dispute is wholly of civil nature. It was also submitted that this is a fit case where this Court should exercise the inherent powers under section 482 of the Code read with Article 227 of the Constitution to quash the said criminal proceedings. In support of his submission, he placed heavy reliance upon the following judgments of the Apex Court (i) State of Haryana Vs. Bhajanlal, AIR 1992 SC 504, (ii) Madhavrao Scindia Vs. Sambhajirao Chandrajirao Angre, (1988)1 SCC 692, (iii) Pepsi Foods Ltd. Vs. Special Judicial Magistrate & Ors., (1998)5 SCC 749 : [1998 ALL MR (Cri) 144 (S.C.)] (iv) Hari

Singh Vs. Haryana (1993)3 SCC 114, and (v) Dist. Manager APSRTC Vs. K. Sivaji, (2001)2 SCC 135.

9. On the other hand, Mr. Dhanuka, learned counsel for the complainant, submitted that the order passed by this Court in Criminal Writ Petition No.95 of 1996 dated 24.4.1997 cannot be relied upon or taken recourse to, to allow the instant petition, in view of the fact that the said order was passed ex- parte. In view of this submission of Mr. Dhanuka, I heard him on merits at length. Mr. Dhanuka further submitted that this writ petition deserves to be dismissed on the ground of delay and on the ground that the discharge application, that was filed by the petitioners before the learned Magistrate, came to be dismissed as not pressed on 28.8.2003. Mr. Dhanuka further submitted that the complaint, prima-facie, discloses the offence under Section 420 of IPC. In support of this submission, he invited my attention to the averments in the complaint and in particular paragraph Nos.3 and 6 to contend that the petitioners induced the complainant to part with textile goods and thereby caused wrongful loss to him and wrongful gain to them. The inherent powers under section 482 of the Code, according to Mr. Dhanuka, cannot be exercised to stifle legitimate prosecution. Mr. Dhanuka further submitted that the inherent powers under section 482 of the Code is only an exception and not the rule and that the said power has to be used very sparingly and that the instant case is not a fit case to exercise the powers and quash the criminal proceedings. He further submitted that this Court cannot assume the role of trial Court and embark upon an enquiry as to the reliability of the material on record. He further submitted that the sale of goods on condition of payment of price on delivery, and in turn non-payment of the price thereof amounts to cheating. He also submitted that the complainant would not have any objection if the petitioners were given liberty to file a fresh application for discharge before the trial court as that would be proper course to follow. In short, according to Mr. Dhanuka, whether a dispute is of civil nature or not, could be decided only after recording of evidence and the petitioners would have an opportunity to prove their case at the trial. Though in paragraph 7 of the reply affidavit the complainant has stated that the facts of the present case are entirely different from the facts of Criminal Case No.230/S/95 which has been quashed by this Court in Writ Petition No.95 of 1996, Mr. Dhanuka fairly conceded that the contents of the complaint in the instant case and that of the Criminal Complaint No.230/S/95 are identical and the difference is only of name and the amounts. Mr. Dhanuka placed heavy reliance upon the following judgments of the Apex Court in support of his contentions (i) State of Karnataka Vs. M. Devendrappa & Anr., (2002)3 Supreme Court Cases 89, (ii) State of Himachal Pradesh Vs. Krishnan Lal Pradhan & Ors., AIR 1987 Supreme Court 773, (iii) Mahadeo Prasad Vs. State of West Bengal, 1954 Cri.L.J. 1806 (SC), (iv) Union of India Vs. Prakash P. Hinduja and Anr., 2003(6) S.C.C. 195 : [2003 ALL MR (Cri) 1578 (S.C.)], (v) State through Special Cell, New Delhi Vs. Navjot Sandhu alias Afshan Guru and Ors., 2003(6) SCC 641 and (vi) M. Krishnan Vs. Vijay Singh and Anr., AIR 2001 SC 3014.

10. I have heard the learned counsel for the parties and with their assistance, I have carefully gone through the petition and the annexures thereto as also the reply affidavit filed by the complainant. The Apex Court , in a catena of judgments, has considered the ambit of the inherent powers of the High Court under section 482 of the Code read with Article 227 of the Constitution to quash the criminal proceedings. The Apex Court in Pepsi Foods Ltd., (supra) has clearly held that though the Magistrate can discharge the accused at any stage of the trial if he considers the charge to be groundless, but that does not mean that the accused cannot approach the High Court under section 482 of the Code or Article 227 of the Constitution to have the proceedings quashed against him when the complaint does not make out any case against him and still he has to undergo the agony of a criminal trial. In paragraph 30 of the report, the Apex Court has observed that it is not comfortable thought for the appellants to be told that they could appear before the Court which is at a far off place in Ghaziapur in the State of Uttar Pradesh, seek their release on bail and then to either move an application under Section 245(2) of the Code or to face a trial when the complaint and the preliminary evidence recorded makes out no case against them.

(a) Similarly, in Madhavrao Scindia (supra), the Apex Court has observed that when a prosecution at the initial stage is asked to be quashed, the test to be applied by the Court is as to whether the uncontroverted allegations made prima facie establish the offence. It is also for the Court to take into consideration any special features which appear in a particular case to consider whether it is expedient in the interest of justice to permit a prosecution to continue. This is so on the basis that the Court cannot be utilised for any oblique purpose and where in the opinion of the Court chances of an ultimate conviction are bias (sic) and therefore, no useful purpose would be served by allowing a criminal prosecution to continue, the court may, while taking into consideration the special facts of a particular case also quash the proceedings, even though it may be at a preliminary stage.

(b) The Apex Court in Bhajanlal and Ors. (supra) has enumerated categories of the cases where the High court may in exercise of the powers under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution or under Section 482 of the Code may interfere in the proceedings relating to cognizable offences to prevent abuse of the process of any Court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice. It has also noted that such powers should be exercised sparingly and that too in the rarest of rare cases.

(c) In Union of India Vs. Prakash P. Hinduja & Anr. (supra), relied upon by the complainant, the Apex Court, while considering the ambit of the power under Section 482 of the Code, has held that the inherent power can be exercised to quash the criminal proceedings on the following grounds: (i) where the allegations made in the FIR or complaint, even if they are taken at their face value and accepted in their entirety do not prima facie constitute any offence or make out a case against the accused, (ii) where the uncontroverted allegations made in the FIR or complaint and the evidence collected in support of the same do not disclose the commission of any offence and make out a case against the accused, (iii) where there is an express legal bar engrafted in any of the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure or the Act concerned to the institution and continuance of the proceedings. The Apex Court has also noted that such power has to be exercised in a rare case and with great circumspection. However in that case, since the High Court has not examined the nature of the allegations made in the FIR or the evidence by which the prosecution sought to establish charge against the accused during trial, allowed the appeal by setting aside the judgment and order of the High Court quashing the criminal prosecution.

(d) In Navjot Sandhu alias Afshan Guru and Ors. (supra), the Apex Court was considering the case of five terrorists who attacked the Parliament. In that case, it is observed that the inherent power is to be used only in cases where there is an abuse of the process of the court or where interference is absolutely necessary for securing the ends of justice. It is further held that the inherent power must be exercised very sparingly in cases which require interference would be few and far between. The most common cases where inherent jurisdiction is generally exercised is where criminal proceedings are required to be quashed because they are initiated illegally, vexatiously or without jurisdiction and while doing so it must be remembered that the inherent power is not to be resorted to if there is a specific provision in the Code or any other enactment for redress of the grievance of the aggrieved party. This judgment of the Apex Court in my opinion would not help the complainant, keeping in view the facts of the instant case.

(e) In yet another case M. Krishna (supra), the Apex Court has observed that the inherent powers for quashing the proceedings at the initial stage can be exercised only where the allegations made in the complaint or the first information report, even if taken at their face value or accepted in their entirety, do not prima facie disclose the commission of an offence.

(f) In the State of Karnataka Vs. M. Devendraappa and Anr. (supra), yet another case relied upon by the complainant, it is held that in exercise of the powers Court would be justified to quash any proceeding if it finds that initiation/constitution of it amounts to abuse of the process of court or quashing of these proceedings would otherwise serve the ends of justice. It is further held that when no offence is disclosed by the complaint, the Court may examine the question of fact. When a complaint is sought to be quashed, it is permissible to look into the materials to assess what the complainant has alleged and whether any offence is made out even if the allegations are accepted in toto. In this case, the Apex Court has also noted that the High Court being the highest Court of a State should normally refrain from giving a prima facie decision in a case where the entire facts are incomplete and hazy, more so when the evidence has not been collected and produced before the Court and the issue involved, whether factual or legal, are of magnitude and cannot be seen in their true perspective without sufficient material, and no hard and fast rule can be laid down in regard to cases in which the High Court should exercise its extraordinary jurisdiction of quashing the proceeding at any stage. The reliance placed on the Judgment of the Apex Court in State of Himachal Pradesh Vs. Krishnalal Pradhan (supra), in my opinion, is misplaced.

11. It is thus clear that this Court has sufficient powers to quash the criminal prosecution if it finds that initiation or continuance of the criminal proceedings amounts to abuse of the process of Court or quashing of the proceedings would otherwise serve the ends of justice, when no offence is disclosed by the complaint. This Court in a given case, can indubitably exercise the power under Section 482 of Code even if the discharge application is either not filed or is pending before the Trial Court, when the complaint does not make out any case against the accused and that no useful purpose is likely to be served by allowing the continuance of the criminal prosecution. The very purpose of exercising such power is to avoid agony of undergoing a criminal trial. It is also not comfortable thought for the petitioners to be told that they could appear before the Court, particularly which is at a far off place outside their State, seek their release on bail and then to either move an application for discharge or for recalling of the process or face trial when the complaint makes out no case against them or a dispute is of a civil nature.

12. This Court in Criminal Writ Petition No.95 of 996 by order dated 24.4.1997, had quashed criminal case No.230/S/95 filed by the complainant against one of the similarly placed traders from Andhra Pradesh. In paragraphs 2 and 3 of the judgment, this Court held thus:-

'2. The first Respondent is the complainant. He filed a private complaint against the petitioners alleging an offence of cheating under section 420, IPC. The allegations in the complaint are that the complainant had delivered textile goods on credit to accused persons, that the accused have not paid the value of the same inspite of repeated demands and the notice. It is, therefore, alleged that the accused have committed an offence of cheating. The learned Magistrate issued process under section 420 of IPC. Being aggrieved by that order, the accused have come up with the present petition.

3. After perusing material on record, I am satisfied that issue of process cannot be sustained and the dispute is of civil nature. This is purely a case of supplying goods on credit and the accused have not paid the value of goods to the Complainant. But the defence is that the accused had paid the amount. Even, if we ignore the defence , as per the allegations in the complaint, it is only a case of accused not paying the value of the goods, which they had received on credit. It is purely a civil dispute and does not amount to offence of cheating. The learned Magistrate has not applied his mind to the facts of the case, but has mechanically issued process. It is a sheer abuse of process of the court if the civil dispute is allowed to be tried in a criminal forum. Hence issue of process is liable to be quashed.'

13. It is true that this Court while disposing of the aforestated criminal writ petition, neither the petitioner nor the respondent was present. However, it is apparent from the order that the learned Single Judge had perused the entire record and after satisfying that the dispute was of a civil nature, quashed the proceedings. On perusal of the complaint and the averments in the petition, I find no reason to take a different view in the matter than the one that has been taken by the learned Single Judge in Criminal Writ Petition No.95 of 1996. It is apparent that the transaction between the complainant and the petitioners was purely a case of supplying the goods on credit and that the petitioners did not pay the value of the goods to the complainant. Moreover, the complaint, in my opinion, is also vague. It does not give particulars, such as dates of transactions, bill numbers, vouchers etc. The complainant has also not made any reference in the complaint, regarding the earlier transactions with the petitioners during the period commencing from August, 1991 to March, 1993. Even in the reply affidavit the complainant has not given any particulars or controverted the statements made by the petitioners in the petition and in particular the contents of paragraphs 3 and 4 thereof. In view of this, I have no hesitation in agreeing with the view taken by the learned Single Judge in Writ Petition No.95 of 1996, as a matter of fact, the well settled basic principle which has to be kept in view, in an eventuality, such as in the present case, is that the Courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction should have consistent opinions in respect of an identical set of facts or on a question of law. If courts express different opinions on the identical set of facts or question of law while exercising the same jurisdiction, then instead of achieving harmony in the judicial system, it will lead to judicial anarchy. It is a very sound rule and practice that like questions should be decided alike, otherwise on same question of law or same set of facts different persons approaching a Court can get different orders. This basic principle is enunciated by the Apex Court in Hari Singh Vs. State of Hariyana (supra). Keeping this in view and as I have already expressed that I do not find any justifiable reason to take a different view from the one which has been taken by the learned Single Judge in Criminal Writ Petition No.95 of 1996, this petition deserves to be allowed for the self same reasons.

14. Mr. Dhanuka, learned counsel for the complainant with vehemence at his command, submitted that bare look at the complaint shows that the offence under section 420 of IPC is made out. In support of his contention, he invited my attention to paragraphs 3 and 6 of the complaint in particular and submitted that it has been clearly mentioned in paragraph 3 that but for the representation and inducement on the part of the petitioners, the complainant would not have parted with textile goods and that the petitioners, right from the very inception, had no intention of making the balance payment. On the other hand, Mr. Jha, learned counsel for the petitioners, submitted that merely because the ingredients of section 420 of IPC reflect in the complaint in the form of the wording of the section would not mean that the offence under that provision is made out. I have perused the complaint minutely. The complainant has stated in the complaint that he was induced by the petitioners to part with the textile goods. While saying so the complainant has suppressed several facts. There is no reference in the complaint that the petitioners were dealing with him since more than 2-3 years prior to the last transaction which invited the complaint under section 420 of IPC. The transaction referred to in the complaint was not an isolated transaction, as tired to suggest in the complaint. Moreover, it does not give the particulars of the transaction.

15. I am of the considered view that merely because the ingredients of a particular offence reflect in the complaint, in the form of the wordings of the section, that, by itself, would not be sufficient to constitute an offence and to hold that prima facie case has been made out. In other words, merely because, the complaint states that the accused cheated him and dishonestly induced him to deliver a property to any person without there being a reference to other particulars in the complaint or a reference to the earlier transactions between them, such wording of the complaint by itself would not constitute an offence under section 420 of IPC. The Magistrate before whom the complaint is filed is expected to apply his mind to the facts of the case and the law applicable thereto. He has to examine the nature of the allegations made in the complaint before issuing a process or the summons to the accused. The Magistrate is expected to be very careful while issuing the process in the complaint, particularly when the averments therein are vague and prima-facie do not disclose any offence or that the dispute reflected in the complaint is of a civil nature. The party to the criminal proceedings cannot be made to undergo the agony of trial which may take a number of years to end. In the present case, I am satisfied that the dispute between the parties was of civil nature. It was purely a case of supplying goods on credit by the complainant and that the accused was not paying the value of the goods supplied to the complainant. Even if the defence as disclosed in the petition is ignored, it is only a case where the goods were delivered on credit and the value of the goods was not paid by the accused. It is in this backdrop, I find no merit in the submissions of Mr. Dhanuka, learned counsel for the complainant.

16. In the result, this petition is allowed. The issue of process and further proceedings in Criminal Complaint/Case No.147/S of 1997 are hereby quashed. However, this order is without prejudice to the rights of the complainant to recover whatever amount due to him from the accused by approaching the Civil Court in accordance with law.

Authenticated copy of this order may be made available to the parties.

Petition allowed.

Section 156(3) Cr.P.C.- requirement of application of mind by the Magistrate before exercising jurisdiction under Section 156(3) Cr.P.C. – Held, The application of mind by the Magistrate should be reflected in the order. The mere statement that he has gone through the complaint, documents and heard the complainant, as such, as reflected in the order, will not be sufficient. After going through the complaint, documents and hearing the complainant, what weighed with the Magistrate to order investigation under Section 156(3) Cr.P.C., should be reflected in the order, though a detailed expression of his views is neither required nor warranted

We may first examine whether the Magistrate, while exercising his powers under Section 156(3) Cr.P.C., could act in a mechanical or casual manner and go on with the complaint after getting the report. The scope of the above mentioned provision came up for consideration before this Court in several cases. This Court in Maksud Saiyed v. State of Gujarat and Others (2008) 5 SCC 668 examined the requirement of the application of mind by the Magistrate before exercising jurisdiction under Section 156(3) and held that where a jurisdiction is exercised on a complaint filed in terms of Section 156(3) or Section 200 Cr.P.C., the Magistrate is required to apply his mind, in such a case, the Special Judge/Magistrate cannot refer the matter under Section 156(3) against a public servant without a valid sanction order. The application of mind by the Magistrate should be reflected in the order. The mere statement that he has gone through the complaint, documents and heard the complainant, as such, as reflected in the order, will not be sufficient. After going through the complaint, documents and hearing the complainant, what weighed with the Magistrate to order investigation under Section 156(3) Cr.P.C., should be reflected in the order, though a detailed expression of his views is neither required nor warranted. We have already extracted the order passed by the learned Special Judge which, in our view, has stated no reasons for ordering investigation.

J U D G M E N T

K.S. RADHAKRISHNAN, J.

1. Leave granted.

2. We are in this case concerned with the question whether the Special Judge/Magistrate is justified in referring a private complaint made under Section 200 Cr.P.C. for investigation by the Deputy Superintendent of Police " Karnataka Lokayukta, in exercise of powers conferred under Section 156(3) Cr.P.C. without the production of a valid sanction order under Section 19 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988.

3. The Appellants herein filed a private complaint under Section 200 of Cr.P.C. before the Additional City Civil and Special Judge for Prevention of Corruption on 9.10.2012. The complaint of the Appellants was that the first respondent with mala fide intention passed an order dated 30.6.2012 in connivance with other officers and restored valuable land in favour of a private person. On a complaint being raised, the first respondent vide order dated 6.10.2012 recalled the earlier order. Alleging that the offence which led to issuance of the order dated 30.6.2012 constituted ingredients contained under Section 406, 409, 420, 426, 463, 465, 468, 471, 474 read with Section 120-B IPC and Section 149 IPC and Section 8, 13(1)(c), 13(1)(d), 13(1)(e), 13(2) read with Section 12 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, a private complaint was preferred under Section 200 Cr.P.C. On receipt of the complaint, the Special Judge passed an order on 20.10.2012 which reads as follows :-

â€œOn going through the complaint, documents and hearing the complainant, I am of the sincere view that the matter requires to be referred for investigation by the Deputy Superintendent of Police, Karnataka Lokayukta, Bangalore Urban, under Section 156(3) of Cr.P.C. Accordingly, I answer point No.1 in the affirmative.

Point No.2 : In view of my finding on point No.1 and for the foregoing reasons, I proceed to pass the following :

ORDER

The complaint is referred to Deputy Superintendent of Police â€" 3 Karnataka Lokayukta, Bangalore Urban under Section 156(3) of Cr.PC for investigation and to report.â€�

4. Aggrieved by the said order, the first respondent herein approached the High Court of Karnataka by filing Writ Petition Nos.13779-13780 of 2013. It was contended before the High Court that since the appellant is a pubic servant, a complaint brought against him without being accompanied by a valid sanction order could not have been entertained by the Special Court on the allegations of offences punishable under the Prevention of Corruption Act. It was submitted that even though the power to order investigation under Section 156(3) can be exercised by a Magistrate or the Special Judge at pre- cognizance stage, yet, the governmental sanction cannot be dispensed with. It was also contended that the requirement of a sanction is the pre-requisite even to present a private complaint in respect of a public servant concerning the alleged offence said to have been committed in discharge of his public duty.

5. The High Court, after hearing the parties, took the view that the Special Judge could not have taken notice of the private complaint unless the same was accompanied by a sanction order, irrespective of whether the Court was acting at a pre-cognizance stage or the post- cognizance stage, if the complaint pertains to a public servant who is alleged to have committed offences in discharge of his official duties. The High Court, therefore, quashed the order passed by the Special Judge, as well as the complaint filed against the appellant. Aggrieved by the same, as already stated, the complainants have come up with these appeals.

6. We have heard the senior counsel on either side. Shri Kailash Vasdev, learned senior counsel appearing for the appellants, submitted that if the interpretation of the High Court is accepted, then the provisions of Section 19(3) of the PC Act would be rendered otiose. Learned senior counsel also submitted that, going through the above mentioned provision, the requirement of sanction under Section 19(1) is only procedural in nature and the same can be cured at a subsequent stage of the proceedings even after filing of the charge-sheet and hence the requirement of â€œprevious sanctionâ€ is merely directory and not mandatory. Reliance was placed on the judgments of this Court in R. S. Nayak v. A.R. Antulay (1984) 2 SCR 495 and P. V. Narasimha Rao v. State (CBI/SPE) (1998) 4 SCC 626. Learned senior counsel further submitted that the High Court also committed an error in holding that the sanction was necessary even while the Court was exercising its jurisdiction under Section 156(3) Cr.P.C. Learned senior counsel submitted that the order directing investigation under Section 156(3) Cr.P.C. would not amount to taking cognizance of the offence. Reference was made to the judgments of this Court in Tula Ram and Others v. Kishore Singh (1977) 4 SCC 459 andSrinivas Gundluri and Others v. SEPCO Electric Power Construction Corporation and Others(2010) 8 SCC 206.

7. Shri Uday U. Lalit, learned senior counsel appearing for the respondents, on the other hand, submitted that the question raised in this case is no more res integra. Reference was made to the judgment of this Court in Subramanium Swamy v. Manmohan Singh and another (2012) 3 SCC 64. Learned senior counsel submitted that the question of sanction is of paramount importance for protecting a public servant who has acted in good faith while performing his duties. The purpose of obtaining sanction is to see that the public servant be not unnecessarily harassed on a complaint, failing which it would not be possible for a public servant to discharge his duties without fear and favour. Learned senior counsel also placed reliance on the judgment of this Court in Maksud Saiyed v. State of Gujarat and Others (2008) 5 SCC 668 and submitted that the requirement of application of mind by the Magistrate before exercising jurisdiction under Section 156(3) Cr.P.C. is of paramount importance. Learned senior counsel submitted that the requirement of sanction is a prerequisite even for presenting a private complaint under Section 200 Cr.P.C. and the High Court has rightly quashed the proceedings and the complaint made against the respondents.

8. We may first examine whether the Magistrate, while exercising his powers under Section 156(3) Cr.P.C., could act in a mechanical or casual manner and go on with the complaint after getting the report. The scope of the above mentioned provision came up for consideration before this Court in several cases. This Court in Maksud Saiyed case (supra) examined the requirement of the application of mind by the Magistrate before exercising jurisdiction under Section 156(3) and held that where a jurisdiction is exercised on a complaint filed in terms of Section 156(3) or Section 200 Cr.P.C., the Magistrate is required to apply his mind, in such a case, the Special Judge/Magistrate cannot refer the matter under Section 156(3) against a public servant without a valid sanction order. The application of mind by the Magistrate should be reflected in the order. The mere statement that he has gone through the complaint, documents and heard the complainant, as such, as reflected in the order, will not be sufficient. After going through the complaint, documents and hearing the complainant, what weighed with the Magistrate to order investigation under Section 156(3) Cr.P.C., should be reflected in the order, though a detailed expression of his views is neither required nor warranted. We have already extracted the order passed by the learned Special Judge which, in our view, has stated no reasons for ordering investigation.

9. We will now examine whether the order directing investigation under Section 156(3) Cr.P.C. would amount to taking cognizance of the offence, since a contention was raised that the expression â€œcognizanceâ€ appearing in Section 19(1) of the PC Act will have to be construed as post-cognizance stage, not pre-cognizance stage and, therefore, the requirement of sanction does not arise prior to taking cognizance of the offences punishable under the provisions of the PC Act. The expression â€œcognizanceâ€ which appears in Section 197 Cr.P.C. came up for consideration before a three-Judge Bench of this Court in State of Uttar Pradesh v. Paras Nath Singh (2009) 6 SCC 372, and this Court expressed the following view:

â€œ6. .....And the jurisdiction of a Magistrate to take cognizance of any offence is provided by Section 190 of the Code, either on receipt of a complaint, or upon a police report or upon information received from any person other than a police officer, or upon his knowledge that such offence has been committed. So far as public servants are concerned, the cognizance of any offence, by any court, is barred by Section 197 of the Code unless sanction is obtained from the appropriate authority, if the offence, alleged to have been committed, was in discharge of the official duty. The section not only specifies the persons to whom the protection is afforded but it also specifies the conditions and circumstances in which it shall be available and the effect in law if the conditions are satisfied. The mandatory character of the protection afforded to a public servant is brought out by the expression, â€˜no court shall take cognizance of such offence except with the previous sanctionâ€™. Use of the words â€˜noâ€™ and â€˜shallâ€™ makes it abundantly clear that the bar on the exercise of power of the court to take cognizance of any offence is absolute and complete. The very cognizance is barred. That is, the complaint cannot be taken notice of. According to Blackâ€™s Law Dictionary the word â€˜cognizanceâ€™ means â€˜jurisdictionâ€™ or â€˜the exercise of jurisdictionâ€™ or â€˜power to try and determine causesâ€™. In common parlance, it means taking notice of. A court, therefore, is precluded from entertaining a complaint or taking notice of it or exercising jurisdiction if it is in respect of a public servant who is accused of an offence alleged to have been committed during discharge of his official duty.

xxx xxx xxx

In State of West Bengal and Another v. Mohd. Khalid and Others (1995) 1 SCC 684, this Court has observed as follows:

"It is necessary to mention here that taking cognizance of an offence is not the same thing as issuance of process. Cognizance is taken at the initial stage when the Magistrate applies his judicial mind to the facts mentioned in a complaint or to a police report or upon information received from any other person that an offence has been committed. The issuance of process is at a subsequent stage when after considering the material placed before it the court decides to proceed against the offenders against whom a prima facie case is made out."

10. The meaning of the said expression was also considered by this Court in Subramanium Swamy case (supra). The judgments referred to herein above clearly indicate that the word cognizance has a wider connotation and not merely confined to the stage of taking cognizance of the offence. When a Special Judge refers a complaint for investigation under Section 156(3) Cr.P.C., obviously, he has not taken cognizance of the offence and, therefore, it is a pre-cognizance stage and cannot be equated with post-cognizance stage. When a Special Judge takes cognizance of the offence on a complaint presented under Section 200 Cr.P.C. and the next step to be taken is to follow up under Section 202 Cr.P.C. Consequently, a Special Judge referring the case for investigation under Section 156(3) is at pre-cognizance stage.

11. A Special Judge is deemed to be a Magistrate under Section 5(4) of the PC Act and, therefore, clothed with all the magisterial powers provided under the Code of Criminal Procedure. When a private complaint is filed before the Magistrate, he has two options. He may take cognizance of the offence under Section 190 Cr.P.C. or proceed further in enquiry or trial. A Magistrate, who is otherwise competent to take cognizance, without taking cognizance under Section 190, may direct an investigation under Section 156(3) Cr.P.C. The Magistrate, who is empowered under Section 190 to take cognizance, alone has the power to refer a private complaint for police investigation under Section 156(3) Cr.P.C.

12. We may now examine whether, in the above mentioned legal situation, the requirement of sanction is a pre-condition for ordering investigation under Section 156(3)

Cr.P.C., even at a pre-cognizance stage. Section 2(c) of the PC Act deals with the definition of the expression â€œpublic servant and provides under Clauses (viii) and (xii) as under:

â€œ(viii) any person who holds an office by virtue of which he is authorised or required to perform any public duty.

(xii) any person who is an office-bearer or an employee of an educational, scientific, social, cultural or other institution, in whatever manner established, receiving or having received any financial assistance from the Central Government or any State Government, or local or other public authority.

The relevant provision for sanction is given in Section 19(1) of the PC Act, which reads as under:

19. Previous sanction necessary for prosecution.â€”(1) No court shall take cognizance of an offence punishable under Sections 7, 10, 11, 13 and 15 alleged to have been committed by a public servant, except with the previous sanction"

a) in the case of a person who is employed in connection with the affairs of the Union and is not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of the Central Government, of that Government;

b) in the case of a person who is employed in connection with the affairs of a State and is not removeable from his office save by or with the sanction of the State Government, of that Government;

c) in the case of any other person, of the authority competent to remove him from his office.

Section 19(3) of the PC Act also has some relevance; the operative portion of the same is extracted hereunder:

Section 19(3) " Notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 (2 of 1974)-

a) no finding, sentence or order passed by a special judge shall be reversed or altered by a court in appeal, confirmation or revision on the ground of absence of, or any error, omission or irregularity in the sanction required under sub-section (1), unless in the opinion of that Court, a failure of justice has in fact been occasioned thereby;

b) xxx xxx xxx

c) xxx xxx xxx

13. Learned senior counsel appearing for the appellants raised the contention that the requirement of sanction is only procedural in nature and hence, directory or else Section 19(3) would be rendered otiose. We find it difficult to accept that contention. Sub-section (3) of Section 19 has an object to achieve, which applies in circumstances where a Special Judge has already rendered a finding, sentence or order. In such an event, it shall not be reversed or altered by a court in appeal, confirmation or revision on the ground of absence of sanction. That does not mean that the requirement to obtain sanction is not a mandatory requirement. Once it is noticed that there was no previous sanction, as already indicated in various judgments referred to hereinabove, the Magistrate cannot order investigation against a public servant while invoking powers under Section 156(3) Cr.P.C. The above legal position, as already indicated, has been clearly spelt out in Paras Nath Singh and Subramanium Swamy cases (supra).

14. Further, this Court in Criminal Appeal No. 257 of 2011 in the case of General Officer, Commanding v. CBI and opined as follows: â€œThus, in view of the above, the law on the issue of sanction can be summarized to the effect that the question of sanction is of paramount importance for protecting a public servant who has acted in good faith while performing his duty. In order that the public servant may not be unnecessarily harassed on a complaint of an unscrupulous person, it is obligatory on the part of the executive authority to protect him. If the law requires sanction, and the court proceeds against a public servant without sanction, the public servant has a right to raise the issue of jurisdiction as the entire action may be rendered void ab-initio.

15. We are of the view that the principles laid down by this Court in the above referred judgments squarely apply to the facts of the present case. We, therefore, find no error in the order passed by the High Court. The appeals lack merit and are accordingly dismissed.

JUDGEMENT

[1] This matter arises out of the issue of process by the additional chief metropolitan Magistrate, borivli, Bombay in case no.58/s/91 filed by the first respondent against the petitioners.lt is alleged in the complaint that the petitioners have committed offences under Sections 386, 451, 352, 419, 506 (ii) read with Section 34 of the I.P.C.For the purpose of the case I do not think it is necessary to go into the every details contained in the complaint.Along with the complaint the names of 10 witnesses were shown and about 8 items of documents were also produced.The complaint was filed on 5-2-1990 and it was posted for verification on 6-3-1990.It appears that on 6-3-1990 verification was not done.On 15-5-1990 verification was done.But it was stopped abruptly, and it was adjourned to 5-6-1990 for want of time.In the verification he stated that he made a complaint in borivli police station as per exh.D a zerox copy of which is produced. On 2-2-1991 I.E. After an year the Magistrate made an endorsement that verification statement was perused and directed the complainant to bring evidence.On 2-4-1991 the advocate for the complainant made an endorsement to the effect that the complaint does not press the offences under Section 386, 352, 419 I.P.C.But he pressed for process under Sections 451, 506 (1) read with 34 of I.P.C.On the same day the Magistrate ordered thus:- in view of the subsequent endorsement of the complainant, issue process under Sections 451, 506 (1) read with 34 of I.P.C.Against the accused.

[2] Shri tirodkar the learned counsel for the petitioner submits that a very strange procedure has been adopted by the Magistrate which is in violation of the provisions of Sections 200, 202, 203 and 204 of I.P.C.He submits that under these provisions a Magistrate is got only with three options.One is that when the Magistrate is satisfied with the allegation and materials and on examination of witness present on the date of filing of the complaint, he can issue process.Secondly, if he is not satisfied with the veracity of the complaint, he can dismiss the complaint, straightway.Thirdly, on the basis of the materials available before the Magistrate neither he dismiss or issue process, he can direct an enquiry under Section 156 of the cr.P.C.Or 202 of cr.P.C.

[3 AJccording to shri tirodkar, Magistrate however, cannot adopt the methods which he has adopted in this case.The Magistrate cannot collect the evidence by calling upon the parties when allegation contained in the complaint does not satisfy him, nor the complainant cannot bargain for that.The learned counsel submits that if the Magistrate is not satisfied with the offence which originally alleged in the complaint, the Magistrate can issue process at least, for some minor offence, if sufficient materials are there.I find considerable force in the contention of the learned counsel that a very strange procedure is seem to have been adopted by the Magistrate in this case.

[4] It has to be mentioned that about one year has taken by the Magistrate atleast to issue process in this case.A reading of Section 200 does not permit the Magistrate to wait for such a long time on a complaint filed by the complainant under Section 200 I.P.C.It should bear in mind that Section 200 cr.P.CIs an alternative protection for a citizen who suffers, against the reluctant attitude of the police either to entertain his complaint or a police officer May be baised against the accused.In that circumstances, a complaint filed under Section 200 should be Acted with a sense of urgency.Here, an year has been taken.The complaint was filed on 5-2-90 and verification has been taken for the reasons best known to the Magistrate only on 6-3-1990 and the Actual verification process started on 5-6-1990 and again evidence was called for on 2-2-1991.Ultimately, the endorsement was made by the advocate on 2-4-1991 and the order was passed for issuing summons against the petitioner on 2-4-1991.The time spent by the Magistrate is not in the ordinary course of business of the Court.Such delay is not admissible in the light of the provisions of Sections 200, 202, 203, and 204 of cr.P.C.The Magistrate cannot split offences according to the wishes of the complainant as is done in this case.The procedure adopted by the Magistrate is clearly an instance of mis-carriage of justice.In view of this, I have to uphold the contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner.In the result the writ petition is allowed.Rule is made absolute in terms of prayer clause (b).No order as to costs.

that the order of the issue of the process under Sections 451, 506 (1) read with Section 34 of the Indian penal code issued by the learned metropolitan Magistrate, 26th Court, borivli, Bombay in Court case no.58/s/1991 be quashed and set aside and the said complaint be quashed.Petition allowed.

9) Complaint in question was a product of fraud and a total a buse of process of court – It was filed to expose corrupt practices prevailing in subordinate courts – Serious doubt if procedure required under Cr. P.C. was followed by magistrate while taking cognizance – Complaint was liable to be quashed – Fraudulent act even in judicial proceedings could not be allowed to stand – All action taken in complaint including issuance of baillable warrants was declared void-ab-intio- (Para 9) This court in express News Papers Pvt Ltd. & ors – Vs – Union of India & ors [AIR 1986 SC 872] At para 118 has held thus.

"Fraud" on power voids the order if it is not exercised bonafide for end design. There is a distinction between exercise of power in good faith and misuse in bad faith. The former arises when on authority misuses its power in breach of law, by taking in to account bonafide, end with best intentions, some extraneous matters or by ignoring relevant matter that would render the impugned act or order ultra vires. It would be a case of fraud on powers.

The misuse in bad faith arises when the power is exercised for an improper motive, say, to satisfy a privateor personal grudge or for wreaking vengenence of a minister as in S. Pratap Singh – Vs – State

(AIR 1964 SC 733)

A power is exercised maliciously if its repository is motived by personal animosity towards those who are directly affected by its exercise Use of power for on alient purpose other than the one for which the power is conferred is malafide use of power. Same is the position when an order is made for a purpose other than that which finds place in the order. The ulterior or alien purpose clearly speaks of the misuse of the power…..

It was said Warangton C.J. in Short – Vs – Poole Corporation (1926) I Ch 66 that :

No public body can be regarded as having statutory authority to act in bad faith or from corrupt motives and any action purporting to be of that body, but proved to be committed in bad faith or from corrupt motives would certainly be held to be inoperative.

"Fraud" Vitiates all transactions know to the law of however high a degree of solemnity.

(Para 10) Similar is the view taken by this court in the case of Ram Chandra Singh – Vs – Savitridevi and ors. (2003(8) SCC 319) Wherein this court speaking through one of us (Sinha J.)

"Fraud as is well known vitiates every solemn act fraud and Justice Newer dwell together. Fraud is a conduct either by letter or words which induces the other person or authority to take a define determinative stand as a response to the conduct of the former either by word or letter. It is also well settled that misrepresentation itself amounts to fraud Indeed, imnocent representation may also give reason to claim relief against fraud A fraudulent misrepresentation is called deceit and in leading a man into damage by willfully or recklessly causing him to believe an act on falsehood.

It is a fraud in law if a party makes representation which he knows to be false and injury ensues therefore. Although the motive from which the representation proceeded may not have been bad. An act of fraud on court is always viewed seriously. A collusion or conspiracy with a view to deprive the rights of other in relation to a property would render the transaction void – ab – into Fraud and deception are synonymous. Although in a given case a deception may not amount to fraud, fraud is anathema to all equitable principles and any affair tainted with fraud cannot be perpetuated or saved by the application of any equitable doctrine including res-judicata.

10) Order of Magistrate showed that complaint disclosed no offence and inspite of this he ordered issue of process Magistrate had misused powers of court in issuing process – Order of magistrate qushed – Complaint dismissed and complainant saddled with casts of Rs.10,000/- payable to petitioner.

(para 7) What was expected of the learned magistrate was to find out that there any offence is made out in the complaint. The entire order of learned magistrate does not even remotely indicate how he came to the conclusion that offence is disclosed. He has observed that at this stage main allegation is that documents produced before the selection committee of the M.P.S.C. were false and matter was decided only after a trial, this reasoning of the learned magistrate in his order simply stated that it is a fit case for full fledged trial which reasoning is incomprehensible and it appears that for some reasons not on record the learned magistrate took cognizance of offence without having been himself satisfied that an offence was in fact committed.

the order of learned magistrate if read in its entirely clearly shows that the magistrate was aware that complaint discloses no offence and inspited of having become aware he issued the process for reason which can only be extraneous. (para 8)

The order not only suffers from non – application of mind but clearly show that it is passed for some extraneous considerations. As a senior additional chief metropolitan magistrate he is expected to know what is the effect of summoning a person as accused to criminal court – To cause harassment to the petitioner recourse taken to criminal court and the court lend necessary assistance to the complainant to abuse the process of law by passing a vague order consciously. It is not a case of some order passed hurriedly due to pressure of work the learned magistrate had passed an order running in seven pages which does not speak of a single sentence as to how and what offence is committed. I am convinced that the learned Magistrate also found that no offence is disclosed even thereafter going out of the way he wanted to help the complainant. The process of law was misused not only by the complainant but also by the learned magistrate. It is a clear case of misuse of Judicial power by the Court.

58) "In Ashwini Kumar Ghose & Anr. -Vs – Arinda Bose & Anr. (AIR 1953 SC 75)" It was held that the Supreme Court is never over sensitive to public criticism; but when there is danger of grave mischief being done in the matter of administration of justice, the animadversion can not be ignored and viewed with placid equanimity–

The path of criticism is a public way : the wrong headed are permitted to err therein; provided that members of the public abstain from imputing improper motives to those taking part in the administration of justice and are genuinely exercising a right of criticism and not action in malice or attempting to impair the administration of justice they are immune. Justice is not cloistered virtue; she must be allowed to suffer the scrutiny and respectful, even though outspoken comment of ordinary man.

- No criticism of judgment however vigorous can amount to Contempt of Court provided it is kept within the limits of reasonable courtesy and good faith. Fair and reasonable critism of judgment which is a public document or which is a public act of a judge concerned with administration of justice would not constitute contempt. Such a critism may fairly assert that the judgment is in correct or an error committed both with regard to law or established facts.

75) Administration of justice – Fraud – Allegations of fraud played upon Court or of abuse of process of law, made and established from record – Court would not sit on technicalities to deny relief to affected party - It will be bounden duty of Court to remedy the mischief, because no man can take advantage of his own wrong.

When allegation of fraud played upon the Court or of abuse of process of Court are made and if established from the record then the courts would not sit on technicalities to deny the relief to an affected party but, in that situation it will be the boundent duty of the Court to remedy the mischief. The cardinal principle recognized by Court of law and of equity is that – no man can take advantage of his own wrong (NUI LUS COMMODUM CAPER POTEST DEINJURIA SUA PROPRIAO) The Apex Court in the case of S.P. Changalvapa Naidu (dead) by his LRs. Vs. Jagannath (deed) by his LRs and ors. Reported in 1994 (1) SCC 1 has observed that the principle of finality of litigation Cannot be pressed to the extent of such an absurdity that it becomes an engine of fraud in the hands of dishonest litigants. In this case, the Court below has denied relief to the petitioner on the specious plea that he had not Locus-standi to maintain an application for setting aside the expert decree even through the same was the creation of a fraud played on the Court and of abuse of process of Court. In the above case the Apex Court has further observed that the courts of law are meant for imparting justice between the parties and that one who comes to the Court must come with clean hands. It is further observed that a person whose case is based on falsehood has no right to approach the Court and should be summarily thrown out at any stage of the litigation for a judgment or decree obtained by playing fraud on the Court is a nullity and non –sst in the eyes of law and it be so treated by every Court whether superior or inferior.

The Apex Court has further observed that a fraud is an act of deliberated deception with the design of securing something by taking unfair advantage of another. It is a deception in order to gain by another loss. Further a litigant, who approaches the Court is bound to produce all the materials relevant to the litigation and if he withholds any in order to gain advantage of the other side then he would be guilty of playing fraud on the Court as well as on the opposite party similarly an abuse of process is improper use or perversion of process after it has been issued. The perversion of process is improper use of regularly issued process. In other words when the party employees the regularly issued process for some other purpose than for which it was intended by the law to effect is nothing but abuse of process. Once the courts are satisfied with this position them it will be the bounden duty of the court to expertise its inherent jurisdiction to remedy the mischief –if necessary by removing or the procedure and technical shackles EX DEBITO JUSTITIAE so as to do complete justice between the parties.

HC raps Magistrate for sending rape victim to jail

Woman To Get 1L From Judicial Officer's Salary

A Subramani TNN

Chennai: More than 12 years after a young woman, who accused a man of raping her, found herself in jail after a woman magistrate remanded her in judicial custody, the Madras HC has ordered a compensation of Rs 1 lakh, besides Rs 10,000 as cost, to the woman. It directed the state government to recover the sum from the salary of magistrate Gunavathi.

Justice Vinod K Sharma, who passed the order last week, also directed initiation of departmental proceedings against the magistrate, pointing out that instead of correcting her mistake of remanding the victim in judicial custody, the magistrate acted in the most irresponsible manner and also filed a false affidavit in the HC denying any such act.

The matter relates to a complaint lodged by a woman on October 16, 2000 alleging that one John Kennedy had a sexual relationship with her after promising to marry her. But after she became pregnant, he refused to do so, she said. Kennedy was arrested on charges of rape the same day and remanded in judicial custody. On October 17, 2000, the accused and the victim were taken for a medical examination. After the checkup, the woman was produced before Gunavathi, who was the then a judicial magistrate at Dharmapuri. Quite mechanically, the magistrate remanded the woman also in judicial custody and she had to spend three days in a sub-jail before she was spotted by a legal aid volunteer. During her incarceration, she was allegedly ill-treated and not given medicines. Her counsel Sudha Ramalingam approached the court seeking Rs 5 lakh compensation.

Denying the allegations, the magistrate filed an affidavit saying the victim had mistaken her for someone else and that she never passed such an erroneous remand order. She even said the victim should be hauled up for criminal contempt of court for "scandalising or lowering the authority of the court."

JUDGEMENT

(1.) NUMBER of cases are coming before this Court complaining of an abuse of powers by the Executive Magistrate under Chapter VIII of the Criminal Procedure code. These cases come from the cities or bigger towns. This Court has not seen a case coming from a remote village. Obviously, the people living in such areas do not find it possible to reach the High Court. Therefore, this Court presumes that these powers may be abused with impunity as the persons suffering under these areas may not be able to reach the High Court. The power of the Executive Magistrate are exercised in the State of Andhra Pradesh by the Assistant Commissioner of Police In-Charge of the area. There is always a clash of interest between a Police Officer In-Charge of an area and the Magistrate exercising the magisterial power within the same area. We had earlier also expressed a desire that the Government should consider delegating these powers either to judicial Magistrates or at least to officials of the Revenue Department. The provisions of the criminal Procedure Code are being misused and abused sometimes purposely, but more often without note because of ignorance of law. We are taking this case as one of the sample cases for the purpose of demonstrating as to how the provisions of law are being abused.

(2.) SINCE the issues involved in both the above writ petitions are same, both the writ petitions are being decided by this common judgment. For the purpose of deciding the issue, the facts in Criminal Writ Petition No. 2682 of 2008 are taken note of.

(3.) THE petitioners received a notice 24th March, 2008. The petitioners submit that they are law abiding citizens and have never been involved in commission of any offence. According to them, two false complaints were registered against the petitioners. In Sessions case No. 58 of 1996, one of petitioner was acquitted and another was discharged. In another case being C. R. No. 8 of 2008 the petitioner No. 1 had been admitted to bail in anticipation of his arrest. The respondent issued a notice under Section 111 of the Criminal procedure Code on 24th March, 2008 and the proceedings were fixed for hearing 6th April, 2008. But the respondent passed orders on the same day i. e. 24th March, 2006 purportedly under Section 116 (3) of the Code of Criminal procedure without giving any opportunity of being heard, directing the petitioners to execute an interim bond for good behaviour on conditions. The petitioners contend that it was not possible for the petitioners to arrange for surety and the surety which the respondents had sought and, therefore, the petitioner No. 1 was arrested and sent to jail on the same day. The petitioner No. 1 filed a revision in the Court of Sessions Judge. The learned Sessions Judge allowed the revision partly.

(4.) EARLIER also the proceedings were initiated against the petitioners which they had challenged by filing a Writ Petition and the writ petition was disposed of as a statement was made by the respondents that the Chapter proceedings against the petitioners were dropped. This order had been passed on 20th october, 2008.

(5.) BEFORE going to the counter affidavit, it will be necessary to have a look on the orders passed by the Executive Magistrate on 24th March, 2008. He passed an order under section 111 of the Criminal Procedure Code, referred to two cases and then said, "i have confirmed that there will not be any improvement in the behaviour of the respondents (petitioners herein) in future". Then says, "therefore, it is proper to proceed against you as per Section 110 (e) (g) of Criminal Procedure code, hence why not be taken one surety with solvency certificate of Rs. 1,00,000/- for 1 year for good behaviour from you and another chairman who is not involved in the dispute, as such two sureties from the area where the respondents are residing ? Its reasons be given orally or in writing. You have been given the date 6/4/2008 for the work". In fact this was not a show cause notice but was an order to furnish two sureties from the area where the petitioners were residing. It was also stated that one surety must be given by the Chairman. We do not know how can the respondents ask a surety of a particular person and if the particular person was not ready to give surety that would eventually mean that the man would have to go to Jail. This order was passed on 24th March, 2008, per se fixed on 6th April, 2008. But the petitioners were brought perhaps after arresting them before the Magistrate on the same day and on the same day he passed another order under Section 116 (3) of the Code of Criminal procedure in which he brazenly stated that for the interim period till the inquiry is completed the respondents (Petitioners in this writ petition)should give surety on following terms : (1) One surety with Solvency Certificate in the area where the respondents are residing. (2) One surety chairman who is not involved in the dispute in the area where the respondents are residing. Then on same day he puts a question as to whether the Petitioners wanted to say anything about interim bond. Records answer as "no" and then passed an order, which reads thus: "respondent:- Pravin Vijaykumar Taware, r/o. Sanghvi, Tal.-Baramati, Dist.-Pune, this respondent was produce before me as per section 110 (e) (g) of Cri. Pro. Code and the enquiry of the respondent is adjourned upto date 7/4/2008, which is necessary. Therefore, take the custody of the respondent and produce before me on the above day in the Court of Special Executive magistrate, Pune Rural Chavan Nagar, pune-8, on 7/4/2008 in the morning 11. 00 hours, as such informing you. Issued on 24/3/2008 with my signature and seal of the Court. The Respondent was arrested on 24/3/2008. "And sends the petitioner to jail.

(6.) AT no point of time the petitioners were given a chance to show cause against the furnishing of bond and at no point of time they were also given a chance to arrange for the bond and the conditions imposed were such that it was impossible to get a bond from the chairman with whom according to the petitioners, the petitioners had a dispute. This is absolutely in defensible. The scheme of chapter VIII of the Criminal Procedure Code is that when a Magistrate acting under Sections 107, 108, 109 or 110 of the Criminal Procedure code deems it necessary to require any person to show cause under such sections, he shall make an order in writing. Therefore, when the magistrate takes action under Section 111 of the Criminal Procedure Code, he has no power to arrest and detain a person. His power is to require to show cause and if necessary start an inquiry. Inquiry has to be done in terms of section 116 of the Criminal Procedure Code and if at that stage the Magistrate is of the view that during the inquiry a person should be asked to give a bond and he refuses to give a bond then the person may be sent to custody till the inquiry is complete and final order can be passed under Section 17 of the Criminal Procedure code. Now this section also has proviso. One of the proviso is, "no person against whom proceedings are not being taken under section 108, section 109, or section 110 shall be directed to execute a bond for maintaining good behaviour". Then the second proviso is that, "the conditions of such bond, whether as to the amount thereof or as to the provision of sureties or the number thereof or the pecuniary extent of their liability, shall not be more onerous than those specified in the order under section 111".

(7.) EVEN directing a person to give bond and on failure send him to jail cannot be done even at the interim stage unless some sort of inquiry is conducted with regard to truth of the information. This question came before the supreme Court as early as in the year 1991 in the case of Madhu Limaye Vs. Sub-Divisional magistrate, Monghyr and Ors. , reported in air 1971 SC 2486 : [2007 ALL SCR (O. C. C.)191], and the Constitutional Bench laid down the parameters of Section 117 of the Criminal procedure Code. Paragraph 43 of the judgment is reproduced here below :

"43. In our opinion, the words of the section are quite clear. As said by Straight, j. in Empress Vs. Babua, (1883)ILR 6 All 132, the order under S. 112 is on hearsay but the inquiry under S. 117 is to ascertain the truth of the necessary information. Sub-section (1) contemplates an immediate inquiry into the truth of the information. It is pending the completion of the inquiry that an interim bond can be asked for if immediate measures are necessary, and in default it is necessary to put the person in custody. Therefore, as the liberty of a person is involved, and that person is being proceeded against on information and suspicion, it is necessary to put a strict construction upon the powers of Magistrate. The facts must be of definite character. In nafar Chandra Pal Vs. Emperor, 28 Cal. WN 23 = (AIR 1924 Cal 114) there was only a petition and a report and these were not found sufficient material. In some of the cases before us no effort was made by the magistrate to inquire into the truth of the allegation. The Magistrate adjourned the case from day to day and yet asked for an interim bond. This makes the proceedings entirely one sided. It cannot be described as an inquiry within an inquiry as has been said in some cases. Some inquiry has to be made before the bond can be ordered. We, therefore, approve of those cases in which it has been laid down that some inquiry should be made before action is taken to ask for interim bond on placing the person in custody in default. In an old case reported in A. D. Dunne Vs. Hem Chunder, (1869)12 suth WR Cr 60 (FB), a Full Bench of the calcutta High Court went into the matter. The case arose before the present Code of criminal Procedure and, therefore, there was no provision for an interim bond but what sir Barns Peacock, C. J. said applies to the changed law also not only with regard to the ultimate order but also to the interim order for a bond. The section even as it is drafted today is hedged in with proper safeguards and it would be moving too far away from the guarantee of freedom, if the view were allowed to prevail that without any inquiry into the truth of the information sufficient to make out a prima facie case a person is to be put in jeopardy of detention. A definite finding is required that immediate steps are necessary. The order must be one which can be made into a final order unless something to the contrary is established. Therefore, it is not open to a Magistrate to adjourn the case and in the interval to send a person to jail if he fails to furnish a bond. If this were the law a bond could always be insisted upon before even the inquiry began and that is neither the sense of the law nor the wording or arrangement of the sections already noticed. "

(8.) THEREFORE, at every stage the law has been violated. Surprisingly, the order challenged before the Sessions Judge was more or less upheld and the learned Sessions Judge noted that the impugned orders were not illegal or without jurisdiction. Only the condition of furnishing surety of the Chairman was set aside. The petitioners remained in illegal custody and we have no doubt about that. The petitioner seeks compensation of Rs. 10,000/- per day. He remained in custody for 4 days. Earlier also we have imposed costs. But in this case an additional affidavit was filed by the Executive magistrate tendering an apology to the Court. He sought condonation of the error committed by him and stated on affidavit that he had not exercised the power with any malice.

(9.) AFTER hearing the learned Public prosecutor and also the Executive Magistrate, who was also present in the Court, we give benefit of doubt to the Magistrate on the ground that perhaps these Magistrates are not aware of the law. They are not trained to act as magistrate. We understand they have not undergone any training before they were given the powers of a Magistrate. When a person is appointed or posted as an Assistant commissioner of Police, he is almost mechanically appointed as an Executive magistrate and is given authority to execute powers under Chapter VIII of the Criminal procedure Code. Since the Government is not interested in taking away these powers from the Police Officers and handover the powers to judiciary or to revenue officials, we are inclined to give the following directions:

(1) That the State Government shall immediately take steps to train its all executive Magistrates so that they understand as to how the provisions of chapter VIII of the Criminal Procedure code have to be applied.

(2) We understand that there is a police academy in the State. All the Executive magistrate should undergo a crash course. Preferably the Sessions Judges should be invited to teach these magistrate about the nuances of law, so that the powers are not abused or misused by the Executive Magistrate.

(3) Whenever, an order is passed by a magistrate at interim stage or at final stage requiring a person to give a bond, he shall be given sufficient time to furnish the bond and the surety.

(4) At the stage of inquiry, the Magistrate shall not ask for an interim bond pending inquiry unless the Magistrate has satisfied himself about the truth of the information sufficient to make out a case for seeking a bond.

(5) Whenever, an Executive Magistrate passes an order under sub-section (3)of Section 116 of Chapter VIII of the criminal Procedure Code directing a person to be sent to jail, a copy of the order shall be sent to the learned Principal sessions Judge immediately.

(6) On receiving copy of the order, the learned Principal Sessions Judge shall go through the order and if he finds a case of revision, he may intervene under section 397 of the Criminal Procedure code.

(7) A copy of the order directing a person to be sent to jail under Chapter VIII of the Criminal Procedure Code shall also be sent to the immediate superior of the magistrate in his Department.

(10.) WITH the above observations and the guidelines, both the writ petitions are disposed of.

(11.) COPY of this order shall be sent to all the Principal Sessions Judges in the State of maharashtra as also to the Principal Secretaries of the State, Law and Judiciary and Home Department. Ordered accordingly.

Judgement

ORDER :-

1. Heard Mr. Toraskar appearing for the petitioner Smt. Usha Kejariwal, the learned APP appearing for the State of Maharashtra as respondent No. 3. Mr. A. G. Nirmal, Sub-Inspector in his individual capacity as respondent No. 2 and the Special Executive Magistrate, Kalyan in his Official capacity as respondent No.1

2. This petition is filed by the petitioner for quashing chapter proceedings initiated against him by the respondents for his forthwith release and for claiming compensation of Rs. 25,000/- for his illegal detention and for other reliefs.

3. It was contended by the counsel for the petitioner that the petitioner is a resident of Kalyan that he is a law abiding and peace loving citizen, but Bazarpeth Police Station, Kalyan has been using provisions of Criminal Procedure Code to arrest and detain the petitioner as and when they like and they are doing this in contravention of the provisions of Criminal Procedure Code and the right of freedom guaranteed by the Constitution of India to the petitioner. Further according to him, the petitioner is so illegally arrested and detained at the instance of one Mhatre family whose family members have been convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment on the charge of murder of Ramesh Beturkar in 1982 and murder of Shakti Beturkar in 1992 in Kalyan. Both these victims of the murders were the family members of the petitioner, and the petitioner was the prosecution witness in the murder case of Shakti Beturkar. It is at the instance of Mhatre family that respondent Nos. 1 and 2 have been arresting the petitioner every now and then and detaining him without any rhyme and reasons subjecting him all sorts of mental agony and torture.

4. The petitioner has given number of instances of such illegal arrest in his petition. For example, on 24-2-1998 Bazarpeth Police Station arrested the petitioner under S. 151(3) of the Criminal Procedure Code and produced before the Judicial Magistrate for seeking 14 days custody. However, the Magistrate after finding that there were no reasons to arrest the petitioner under S. 151(3) of the Criminal Procedure Code immediately ordered his release on 24-2-1998 itself. Secondly, the petitioner was again arrested on 27-4-1998 at 23.05 hours under S. 151(3) of the Criminal Procedure Code and produced before the Judicial Magistrate, Kalyan on 28-4-1998 for seeking his detention for 7 days. But the Magistrate, Kalyan after finding that again there were no grounds for detention of the petitioner released him on 28-4-1998. The petitioner has also stated that in 1996 the chapter proceedings were initiated against him by respondent Nos. 1 and 2 under S. 110(e) and (g) of the Criminal Procedure Code and was called to execute an interim bond under S. 116 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The petitioner moved this Court by filing Criminal Writ Petition No. 941 of 1996 and Justice Ashok Agarwal and Justice R. M. Khandeparkar immediately ordered the release of the petitioner.

5. Lastly, the petitioner was arrested again on 15-7-1998 at 20-30 hours and chapter proceedings under S. 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code were initiated against him, he was called upon to furnish interim bond of his good behaviour for three years in the sum of Rs. 10,000/- with two sureties in the like amount and on his failure to do so, he was detained and he had to file the present petition, in which the learned APP had to concede that the petitioner was required to release forthwith and was so released by Justice Pandya on 10-8-1998. Therefore, according to the petitioner his detention in custody from 15-7-1998 to 10-8-1998 was illegal detention and for all these reasons he has filed this petition claiming the above reliefs.

6. It was also the contention of the petitioner that the Bazarpeth Police Station, Kalyan and respondent No. 1 are illegally invoking their powers and resorting initiation of the chapter proceedings without any basis whatever and harassing the petitioner and his detention for about 25 days from 15-7-1998 as stated above and harassment caused to him earlier by four illegal detention is mala fide, without legal basis for which he is entitled for the reliefs claimed including the relief of compensation of Rs. 25,000/-.

7. It was further contended by the advocate for the petitioner that even though the petitioner is facing some prosecution as per the details given by the petitioner in his petition and which are as under :-

1. I 73/91 Under Ss. 147, 148, 149, 302, 307, 120(b).
2. I 43/92 Under Ss. 324, 34.
3. I 0046/98 Under Ss. 324, 34.
4. N. C. 45/92 Under Ss. 504, 506
5. 189/93 Under Ss. 323, 504.
6. 13/92 Cr. P.C. 110(e)(g).
7. Local

Application 25/93. all these prosecutions were the prosecutions of 1991, 1992, 1993 and for good period of 5/6 years there were no prosecution against him up to 1998 when the case under S. 324 r/w S. 34 of the Indian Penal Code was registered against him vide Case No. 10046 of 1998. However, according to the petitioner pendency of all these cases cannot and does not give any right to the respondents to arrest him again and again under S. 151(3) of the Criminal Procedure Code and start chapter proceeding against him and all the orders of his forthwith release passed by the concerned judicial Magistrate of Kalyan at the relevant time and by this High Court have clearly show that his arrest and detention were illegal and was not called for and was without any legal and factual basis and therefore, it was contended by his advocate on the basis of certain authorities that this was a fit case to grant compensation to the petitioner for his illegal detention at least for the last illegal detention from 15-7-1998 to 10-8-1998.

8. The advocate for the petitioner further contended that so far as initiation of the proceedings under Ss. 151(3) and 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code from 15-7-1998 onwards is concerned, there was no compliance to any of the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Criminal Procedure Code that show cause notice was not served upon him, that no time was given to him for furnishing interim bond, that thumb impressions were taken forcibly by the police on certain papers, even though, he was in a position to write and put his signature in his own hand writing, that none of his family members were made aware of his arrest/detention, that there was no ground for his arrest and for initiation of chapter proceedings, and therefore, initiation of chapter proceedings against the petitioner and his arrest from 15-7-1998 onwards and his detention are illegal, mala fide and without justification, and he is entitled for the reliefs claimed and protection for any kind of further harassment or mental torture.

9. On the other hand it was contended by the learned A.P.P. that the petitioner was facing as many as seven prosecutions under different provisions of Indian Penal Code and considering those prosecutions and his activities as extortionist, his detention on all the earlier occasions under S. 151(3) of the Criminal Procedure Code and initiation of Chapter proceedings was fully justified. She also contended that when the chapter proceeding No. 13 of 1998 which is the subject matter for challenge in this petition were initiated and the petitioner was produced before the Special Executive Magistrate the respondent No. 1 on 17-7-1998, the mother of the petitioner and his other relative one Mr. Dinesh Patil were present before the Special Executive Magistrate and they were asked to make an arrangement of furnishing interim bond or sureties. But they did not avail of this opportunity and consequently, the petitioner was required to be detained from 17-7-1998 till he was released on 10-8-1998 by the order of this High Court. She, therefore, contended that the detention of the petitioner from 17-7-1998 to 10-8-1998 was on account of petitioner's failure to furnish bond, and therefore, it could not be said that the respondents acted mala fide or did not follow the provisions of law in that regard. She, therefore, opposed the petition vehemently and further contended that the statements of witnesses were recorded before initiating the present chapter proceeding No. 13 of 1998 and those statements reveal that not only the petitioner was facing earlier prosecutions but there were witnesses who had stated before the police that the petitioner was likely to commit the offences of extortion etc. as defined in S. 110(d) of the Criminal Procedure Code, and therefore, according to her, there were no mala fide on the part of the respondents in arresting and detaining the petitioner or initiating the chapter proceeding No. 13 of 1998. She also relied upon affidavit filed by respondent No. 1 on record page No. 29, affidavit of respondent No. 2 on record page 36 and affidavit of Joint Secretary to the Government of Maharashtra, Home Department, Mantralaya, Mumbai on record page 42 of the petition in compliance to the directions given by Justice Pandya on 25-8-1998. She further contended that since the petitioner has been released forthwith by this Court by order of Justice Pandya on 10-8-1998 nothing remains in this petition in that regard. So far as claim of compensation is concerned, she submitted that demand of compensation was itself illegal and unjust and not maintainable. She further contended that if compensation was awarded, same would result fear in mind of the police in discharging their official duties and this would ultimately result in affecting public peace and tranquillity etc.

10. I have given my anxious consideration to the submissions made by the advocate for the petitioner and learned APP for the State-respondents. It is true that the prayer of the petitioner for grant of compensation if allowed, would act as deterrent against police officials. But I am unable to agree with the submissions made by the learned APP that such a prayer should not be considered only on that count, because, in a society governed by the rules of law, the Constitution of India and the statutory provisions of Criminal Procedure Code, it is for the Court to see that all these provisions made for protecting liberty of the individual against arbitrary exercise of statutory powers are strictly complied with, and that whims and caprices and motives and prejudices of the police officers who are the guardians and protectors of law did not and do not mingle with the powers granted to them by the law.

11. It is true that the petitioner is facing prosecution in the following cases which are pending against him since 1991 :-

1. I 73/91 Under Sec. 147, 148, 149, 302, 307, 120(b).

2. I 43/92 Under Sec. 324, 34.

3. I 0046/98 Under Sec. 324, 34.

4. N. C. 45/92 Under Sec. 504, 506

5. 189/93 Under Sec. 323, 504.

6. 13/92 Cri. P.C. 110(e)(q).

7. Local

Application 25/93.

Out of these seven cases, there is one case of 1991, three cases of 1992, two cases of 1993 and one case of 1998. So far as seriousness of the cases is concerned, there is only one case of 1991 registered under Sections 302 and 307 of the Indian Penal Code. Other cases are registered under Sections 324 or 504 of the Indian Penal Code. Sr. No. 6 that is case No. 13 of 1992 and Sr. No. 7 that is the case No. 25 of 1993, are the chapter proceedings. As against this, the orders passed by the Judicial Magistrate in the applications for further remand regarding arrest of the petitioner under Section 151(3) of the Criminal Procedure Code and annexed with the petition at Exhibits A and B will show that the apprehension of the police and the reasons given by them regarding possibility of the petitioners committing cognizable offences in view of the forthcoming parliamentary election as is revealed in Exhibit A and in view of the Shiv Jayanti Utsav as is revealed in Exhibit 'B' did not find favour with the Magistrate and on both these instances the Magistrate ordered immediate and forthwith release of the petitioner and rejected the application of Bazarpeth Police Station for further detention of the petitioner.

12. Record page 19 of the petition shows that all the criminal cases pending against the petitioner as reproduced above were made the basis for at least of the petitioner on 24-2-1998 under Section 151(3) of the Criminal Procedure Code for seeking his further detention of 14 days. The order of the Division Bench comprising of Justice Agarwal and Justice Khandeparkar dated 10-9-1996 at Annexure 'C' of the petition shows that the Division Bench did not find any satisfactory reason to continue the detention of the petitioner and to the contrary, it was observed that the show cause notice of the chapter proceedings under Section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code was served upon the petitioner on 13-8-1996 and on the same day he was taken in custody on the ground that he has failed to furnish security.

13. From all these facts, it will be, therefore, clear that it is the pendency of the aforesaid seven cases that has been repeatedly made basis for arrest of the petitioner under Section 151(3) of the Criminal Procedure Code and for initiating chapter proceedings against him. Two orders of the J.M.F.C. at Exhibits A and B and order of this Court of the Division Bench show that apart from the seven prosecutions stated above the Bazarpeth Police Station, Kalyan had nothing with them in all the three instances above to arrest the petitioner and seek his further detention and consequently, the Judicial Magistrate as per Exhibits A and B and Division Bench of this Court as per Exhibit C to the petition ordered release of the petitioner forthwith.

14. It is further clear from the record of the petition that when the present petition came before Justice Pandya on 10-8-1998, the learned APP did not and could not support the detention of the petitioner from 15-7-1998, and therefore, the learned APP had to concede that the petitioner was required to be released forthwith.

15. It will be therefore clear from the submissions made by the petitioner's advocate and from the record before this Court that respondent Nos. 2 and 3 have been arresting the petitioner under Section 151(3) of the Criminal Procedure Code and are initiating chapter proceedings against him only on the ground that he is facing seven prosecutions referred to and quoted to above, including his initiation of the present chapter proceeding No. 13 of 1998. It will also be clear from two orders of the J.M.F.C. Exhibits A and B of the petition that there was no immediate cause, information or material with the police before arrest of the petitioner on those two occasions and even for initiating of chapter proceedings in 1996 wherein Division Bench of this Court ordered immediate and forthwith release of the petitioner.

16. However, the question that is raised by the petitioner in this petition is that he is entitled for the compensation of Rs. 25,000/- for his illegal detention from 15-7-1998 to 10-8-1998 (as per the case of the petitioner), or from 16-7-1998 to 10-8-1998 (as per the case of the police) and second question is, whether the detention of the petitioner in chapter proceeding No. 13 of 1998 was illegal, without any basis and without complying requirements of the Criminal Procedure Code and without following the principle of natural justice viz. giving information of arrest of the petitioner to his relatives, giving opportunity to the petitioner and his relatives to furnish bond, and third question is, whether consequent upon the decision of the abovementioned two questions, whether the petitioner is entitled for the compensation in addition to the other reliefs claimed in the petition. Fourthly, whether the petitioner can get compensation on the basis of the Division Bench's judgment of this Court reported in 1999 All MR (Cri) 134 (Aurangabad Bench), Chandrabhan Rama Dhengle v. Indirabai Chandrabhan Dhengle, and on the basis of the judgment of the Supreme Court, reported in 1980 (Supp) SCC 649 : (1981 Cri L.J. 337), Gopalana-chari v. State of Kerala; judgment reported in (1993) 2 SCC 746 : (1993 Cri L.J. 2899), Nilabati Behera v. State of Orissa.

17. Since according to the counsel for the petitioner, the aforesaid judgments of this Court and Supreme Court have direct bearing to this case. It is necessary to consider the legal aspect of the case at the threshold. In the Division Bench's judgment of this Court (Aurangabad Bench) referred to above, the compensation of Rs. 50,000/- was granted to the petitioner Chandrabhan Dhengle by the Division Bench and respondent Nos. 2 to 5 viz. P.S.I. and S.E.M. etc. were ordered to pay the said amount and respondent No. 6, perhaps, State of Maharashtra was directed to hold departmental inquiry into the conduct exhibited by the respondents Nos. 2 to 5. The facts of that case were that Indirabai Dhengle, the wife of Chandrabhan Dhengle i.e. the petitioner, lodged a complaint against her husband for assault and beating. Since the offences were non-cognizable, no action was taken. However, the PSI initiated chapter proceedings against the petitioner/husband before S.E.M. for execution of bond with or without surety from him for keeping peace. In that background of the matter, it was held by the Division Bench that initiating chapter proceedings for keeping peace under Section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code on the basis of the complaint lodged by the wife of the husband was completely illegal and unjustified and consequently, detention of the petitioner was illegal and he was entitled for compensation.

18. In Gopalanachari's case of the Supreme Court referred to above, the petitioner Gopalanachari, the man of 71 years of age, was in jail from 23-2-1980 and labelled as habitual criminal and was kept in custody under Section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but on findings that his detention was completely illegal, Justice Krishna Iyer ordered dropping of the proceedings against him with directions not to use Section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code, torturesome fashion, against the week and poor merely because they belonging to the "have not" class and can be easily apprehended as "habitual" this or that or dangerous or desperate. Justice Krishna Iyer also drew attention of the State Government to the likely misuse of the preventive provisions and expect it to issue suitable instructions to the police minions so that the law will be legitimated by going into action where it must strike and by being kept sheathed where there is no need for indiscriminate display.

19. In Nilabati's case the Supreme Court has awarded compensation in proceedings for enforcement of fundamental rights in case where custodial death was proved and the Supreme Court has observed as under (at Pages 2908-2909 of Cri L.J.) :

"The Court is not helpless and the wide powers given to the Supreme Court by Article 52, which itself is a fundamental right, imposes a constitutional obligation on the Court to forge such new tools, which may be necessary for doing complete justice and enforcing the fundamental rights guaranteed in the Constitution, which enable the award of monetary compensation in appropriate cases, where that is the only mode of redress available. The power available to the Supreme Court under Article 142 is also an enabling provision in this behalf. The contrary view would not merely render the Court powerless and the constitutional guarantee a mirage, but may, in certain situations, be in an incentive to extinguish life, if for the extreme contravention the Court is powerless to grant any relief against the State, except by punishment of the wrongdoer for the resulting offence, and recovery of damages under private law, by the ordinary process. If the guarantee that deprivation of life and personal liberty cannot be made except in accordance with law, is to be real, the enforcement of the right in case of every contravention must also be possible in the constitutional scheme, the mode of redress being that which is appropriate in the facts of each case. This remedy in public law has to be more readily available when invoked by the have nots, who are not possessed of the wherewithal for enforcement of their rights in private law, even though its exercise is to be tempered by judicial restrain to avoid circumvention of private law remedies, where more appropriate."

20. All the three judgments referred to above by the counsel for the petitioner show that the Courts have been vigilant and/or required to be vigilant regarding fundamental rights of the citizens and if proper and justifiable case is made out by the petitioner, the Courts have ample powers and which were exercised to award compensation in case of misuse of statutory provisions by the machinery of the State in detaining the citizens illegally. The judgment of the Division Bench of this Court (from Aurangabad Bench) referred to above is a judgment on award of compensation in chapter proceedings for illegal detention, and therefore, in a sense the said judgment has direct bearing upon this case. However, it is necessary to find out whether detention of the petitioner in chapter proceeding No. 13 of 1998 either from 15-7-1998 to 10-8-1998 or 16-7-1998 to 10-8-1998 is a detention entitling the petitioner to claim compensation. Such a scrutiny is necessary because the compensation is claimed in respect of this detention, and therefore, even if, it is held by me that on all earlier occasions, the respondent could not succeed in seeking further detention of the petitioner and failed to get his further custody and the petitioner succeeded in getting the orders of release forthwith, this exercise is necessary because compensation is claimed only in respect of detention in chapter proceeding No. 13 of 1998.

21. In this regard it was submitted by the learned APP on the basis of record made available that Bazarpeth Police had in April 1998 sought permission of the Deputy Commissioner of Police, Kalyan to start chapter proceeding under Section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code against the petitioner, that the permission was refused, and therefore, in June 1998 the Bazarpeth Police again sought similar permission and same was granted to them by the Deputy Commissioner of Police by their letter dated 13-6-1998. She, therefore, contended that it could not be said that the chapter proceedings No. 13 of 1998 were initiated against the petitioner without seeking permission from the seniors or without application of mind. She, further, contended that before obtaining this permission by letter dated 13-6-1998 the Bazarpeth Police had recorded statements of two persons viz. Madhukar Vishwanath Kadam and Subhash Barku Mali regarding extortionist activities of the petitioner and same was evident from the report submitted to the Special Executive Magistrate dated 17-7-1998 with reference to chapter proceeding No. 13 of 1998. She, therefore, contended that the petitioner was arrested on 16-7-1998 not only because of earlier pending 6/7 cases but because of the material collected by the Bazarpeth Police in the form of aforesaid two statements regarding activities of the petitioner requiring initiation of chapter proceedings under Section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

22. She further contended that the allegations of the petitioner that none of his family were informed about his arrest and about necessity of the petitioner to furnish interim bond either by the Bazarpeth Police or S.E.M., were not only unsupported from the documents on record but to the contradictory to record, and therefore, these allegations were required to be turned down outright. In support she drew my attention to paragraph Nos. 5 and 11 of the petition and to Exhibit 'D' or the petition, the letter written by the petitioner's mother to the Assistant Commissioner of Police, Kalyan. She, therefore, contended that the said letter and the paragraph Nos. 5 and 11 of the petition falsified the contentions of the petitioner that no intimation of his arrest was given to his relatives or no intimation of requirements of furnishing interim bond was given to his relatives. On the basis of the same fact she further contended that the arrest of the petitioner on 16-7-1998 and his further detention was perfectly legal and if petitioner had furnished surety as ordered by respondent No. 1 immediately on 12-2-1998 or within reasonable time, he would not have been detained any more. Therefore, according to her, the Judicial Magistrate could not be blamed for his detention from 17-7-1998 onwards till petitioner released by this Court on 10-8-1998.

23. As against this it was contended by the petitioner's advocate that there was nothing with the respondents to show that any intimation of arrest of the petitioner was given to his relatives in writing on 15-7-1998 or 16-7-1998. He also contended that roznama of the chapter proceeding No. 13 of 1998 did not at all show that the mother of the petitioner or the so-called relative was present before the S.E.M. on 17-7-1998 and that they were intimated about the requirements of the petitioner to furnish interim bond of Rs. 10,000/- for six months with one respectable surety from the locality. He also contended that till 20-7-1998 neither the petitioner nor his relatives were knowing about the arrest and detention of the petitioner and when the petitioner's mother learned about this on 20-7-1998 and applied to the Assistant Commissioner of Police for necessary documents and particularly she was not given those particulars but was treated rudely and consequently no attempts could be made either by the petitioner or his relatives to furnish bond before the S.E.M., and seek release of the petitioners. It was further contended that the arrest of the petitioner on 15-7-1998 or 16-7-1998 and further detention under chapter proceeding under Section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code were totally illegal and there were no circumstances justifying his arrest and further detention and/or initiation of proceedings under Section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

24. In view of these rival contentions, the facts are required to be scrutinized from the record of chapter proceeding No. 13 of 1998 which was made available by learned APP Smt. Kejariwal. The record which starts from Roznama from 17-7-1998 shows that the show cause notice under Section 111 of the Criminal Procedure Code was served upon the petitioner and he was asked to furnish surety. The petitioner denied the allegations made against him and at that time the petitioner was accompanied with his mother Shakuntala Beturkar and one relative Dinesh Patil. They were asked to make arrangement to furnish security or surety for Rs. 10,000/- and that they asked for some time. Further Roznama dated 24-7-1998, 31-7-1998, 3-8-1998, 10-8-1998 shows that the petitioner was produced some time but could not furnish interim bond and ultimately on 10-8-1998 he was released pursuant to the order of this Court.

25. Now so far as this Roznama is concerned, the contention of the learned APP Smt. Kejariwal that on 17-7-1998 the petitioner's mother Shakuntala Beturkar and one relative Dinesh Patil were present before the S.E.M. is not supported. Even though the Roznama makes a reference about their presence, I am not inclined to accept the Roznama in that regard because, if at all the petitioner's mother and relative were present and they were informed about the requirements of furnishing surety, their signatures in token of having received the said information should have been obtained on the Roznama or separate intimation should have been served upon them to show the compliance regarding giving of intimation and sufficient time and opportunity should have been given to the petitioner to furnish surety or to make arrangement in that regard. Ordinarily there is a presumption about the official acts and record, but in the instant case considering the previous instances, I am not inclined to draw such presumption in favour of the respondents.

26. It is further pertinent to note that the record and proceedings of the chapter proceeding case No. 13 of 1998 contain copy of show cause notice under Section 111 of the Criminal Procedure Code, order under Section 116(3) of the Criminal Procedure Code and statement of the petitioner recorded by S.E.M. under Section 112 of the Criminal Procedure Code. All these three important documents bear thumb impression of the petitioner. It is the case of the petitioner that his thumb impression was forcibly obtained in ordinary circumstances. I would not have accepted this contention without recording evidence or without requiring the matter to be proved by the petitioner. However, the counsel for the petitioner made categorical statement that the petitioner was capable of and was knowing reading, writing and put his signature and this fact of statement was not disputed by the respondent or their learned APP. Obtaining thumb impression from a man who is capable of putting his signature is a circumstance raising strong suspicion. These three documents referred to above bearing thumb impression, therefore, cannot support the case of the respondent that the relatives of the petitioner were made aware of regarding detention of the petitioner.

27. However the contention of the petitioner that none of his family members were made aware or informed about the arrest of the petitioner and he was being required to furnish ad interim bond, cannot be accepted for two reasons. Firstly in paragraph No. 5 of the petition it has been stated as :-

"The family members of the petitioner was only informed that the petitioner is being arrested under the chapter proceeding."

Secondly, in paragraph No. 11 of the petitioner it has been stated as :-

"The parents of the petitioner approached the office of the respondent No. 1 and respondent No. 2 twice with request to furnish the relevant papers viz. notice, order etc."

These two averments prima facie show that the family members or parents of the petitioner were made aware about the arrest of the petitioner and initiation of the chapter proceeding. Apart from this, the petitioner has filed the documents at Exhibit D to the petition dated 28-7-1998 and signed by the petitioner's mother which is an application or getting urgent copies of the chapter proceeding. In that application the petitioner's mother stated that the petitioner was arrested on 15-7-1990 at about 8.30 p.m. by Bazarpeth Police and she has further stated that she learnt that the chapter proceeding were started against her son by respondent No. 1 and that he has been sent to Kalyan Jail. These positive assertions in the aforesaid application coupled with the two statements made in the petition and reproduced above will show that the relatives of the petitioner were aware of and had learnt about initiation of the chapter proceeding against the petitioner, and they got this knowledge on 16-7-1998 or 17-7-1998. For these two reasons, therefore, the contention of the petitioner is required to be rejected.

28. The next question that arises is, whether the arrest of the petitioner on 15-7-1998 or 16-7-1998 by respondent No. 2 and his detention by respondent No. 1 on failure of the petitioner to furnish ad interim bond was justified? In this regard it was submitted by the learned A.P.P. that there was sufficient material before the respondent No. 2 in arresting the petitioner and initiating the chapter proceeding, and according to her, that material is in the form of statements of witnesses Madhukar Kadam and Subhash Mali. She also relied upon 6/7 criminal cases against the petitioner as the basis of this arrest.

29. I am not convinced by this submission made by the learned A.P.P. I have already held and observed that all the attempts of the respondent to arrest the petitioner and detaining him on the basis of pending cases became unsuccessful because of the intervention of the Courts viz. the Magistrate and the High Court as stated above. On all these previous occasions the police could not justify the arrest and the further detention of the petitioner as prayed by them and the petitioner was required to be released forthwith on all the previous occasions. Therefore, mere pendency of the criminal cases could not be legal and valid ground for arrest of the petitioner either on 15-7-1998 or 16-7-1998 for the purpose of initiating chapter proceeding No. 13 of 1998. So far as statements of Madhukar Kadam and Subhash Mali (which were relied upon by respondent No. 2 in the report submitted to respondent No. 1 on 17-7-1998 for initiating chapter proceeding No. 13 of 1998) are concerned, even these statements cannot justify the arrest of the petitioner on 16-7-1998 and his further detention on 17-7-1998 on account of petitioner's failure to furnish ad interim bond. The statements of Madhukar Kadam and Subhash Mali were recorded on 9-4-1998 i.e. about more than three months before the arrest of the petitioner. The delay of three months in the said two statements and arrest of the petitioner will clearly show that there was no case of extreme urgency or emergency when the petitioner was arrested on 16-7-1998 and chapter proceeding started against him on 17-7-1998. The petitioner was arrested on 16-7-1998 under Section 41(2) of the Criminal Procedure Code which provides that any officer in charge of a police station may, in like manner, arrest or cause to be arrested any person, belonging to one or more of the categories of persons specified in Section 109 or Section 110. Section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code deals with the cases in which the security for good behaviour from habitual offenders can be taken. As per the report of respondent No. 2 to respondent No. 1 dated 17-7-1998 the chapter proceedings were initiated under Section 110(e) and (g) of the Criminal Procedure Code. Sub-section (e) of Section 110 is about the person who habitually commits, or attempts to commit, or abets the commission of, offences, involving a breach of the peace. Sub-section (g) of Section 110 is about the person who is so desperate and dangerous as to render his being at large without security hazardous to the community.

30. If the chapter proceedings against the petitioner are initiated for two reasons i.e. because the petitioner is falling in category of sub-section (e) or (g) of Section 110, then it is necessary for the respondent to prove prima facie that the petitioner was so desperate and dangerous as to render his being at large without security hazardous to the community or that he was habitually commits or attempts to commit or abets the commission of, offences involving a breach of the peace. Admittedly, the respondents are relying on only two statements of witnesses Madhukar Kadam and Subhash Mali but since these statements were recorded in April, 1998 they could not have been made basis for the arrest of the petitioner under Section 41(2) of the Criminal Procedure Code and initiation of the chapter proceedings under Section 110(e) and (g) in the month of July, 1998.

31. This is, therefore, the case where the petitioner was arrested on 16-7-1998 without there being any emergency or without there being any basis or information to the police that he is a desperate and dangerous character person creating problems for the security of the community or if he is not being arrested on that particular day or at particular time would have committed or attempted to commit or abetted the commission of offences involving breach of peace.

32. It is, therefore, clear that the arrest of the petitioner on 16-7-1998 under the aforesaid provisions was totally illegal and uncalled for and so also the initiation of proceedings under Section 110(e) and (g) of the Criminal Procedure Code.

33. Having come to the aforesaid finding the question is regarding grant of compensation claimed by the petitioner. If the arrest of the petitioner is found to be totally illegal and uncalled for, then respondents are liable to pay compensation to the petitioner. However, the compensation for the detention from 17-7-1998 to 10-8-1998 cannot be granted because the mother of the petitioner was knowing that the petitioner has been arrested and sent to Kalyan Jail on account of his failure to furnish ad interim bond. If the relatives of the petitioner were diligent, they could have got the petitioner released on furnishing ad interim bond or security immediately on 17-7-1998 or 18-7-1998. But no efforts in that regard were made by the petitioner or his relatives, and therefore, the respondents cannot be held responsible for the detention of the petitioner for all these period.

34. However, since the arrest of the petitioner on 16-7-1998 is found illegal, unwarranted and preceded by other 3 or 4 unjustified and unsuccessful arrest, he is entitled for the compensation of one day and compensation of Rs. 3000/- would be sufficient in the circumstances of the case. Hence for all these reasons I pass the following order :-

ORDER

Petition is allowed.

Rule made absolute.

Chapter Proceedings against the petitioners are quashed.

Respondents to pay jointly and severally compensation of Rs. 3000/- to the petitioner for illegal detention and mental agony and Rs. 1000/- as the costs of the petition.

After this order was pronounced learned APP Smt. Usha Kejariwal prayed for stay of the operation of this order for a period of one month. Advocate for the petitioner has no serious objection. Hence this order is stayed for four weeks from today. Certified copy expedited.

Petition allowed.

JUDGMENT

J.N. Patel, J.

1. The petitioner who is a journalist and working as reporter of Daily Hindusthan published from Amravati, is a resident of Malkapur town in Buldhana District. The petitioner was required to invoke the extraordinary jurisdiction of this Court by filing the petition under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution of India as he came to be arrested and detained in custody under the impugned order passed by the respondent No. 2-Special Executive Magistrate and Police Inspector Local Crime Branch, Buldhana, District Buldhana on 23.10.1999 in a proceedings initiated under Chapter VIII of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973.

2. It is the case of the petitioner that, as a journalist, he exposed the police machinery of Malkapur Police Station on having taken up some matters criticising the mal practice and high handedness of the Police personnel. One of such matter was relating to sensational murder case in Malkapur town which occurred in the month of September 1999. It is the case of the petitioner that, annoyed by such publications, the respondent Nos. 3 to 6 started harassing the petitioner and also booked him in a false case. On 24.9.1999, the petitioner was threatened by respondent No. 4 Shri S.M. Jagdale, Police Sub-Inspector and therefore the petitioner approached City Police Station, Malkapur for lodging a complaint, but his complaint was not accepted and therefore he forwarded the complaint to the S.D.P.O. Malkapur and forwarded copies of the same to the authorities. The petitioner expressed that there was eminent danger to his life and personal liberty as he has been threatened by respondent No. 4. Instead of taking cognizance of the complaint, the respondents Police Officials, out of vengeance, accosted the petitioner on 24.10.1999 at 10.30 p.m. when he was going to visit his relative, on his way. The respondent No. 6. Police Constable Baban Sangade, along with the Police Officers who are joined as respondent Nos. 3 to 5 mercilessly beaten the petitioner in Police Station, Rural, where respondent No. 6 Baban Sangade is attached and posted because of which the petitioner suffered injury to his right eye and other parts of the body. According to the petitioner, it is respondent No. 6 Baban Sangade who accosted the petitioner while he was going to visit his relative on his vehicle at Harikiran Society, Malkapur and brought the petitioner to Police Station, Rural Malkapur and informed respondent Nos. 3 to 5 on telephone and it is in the Police Station, Rural that all these persons mercilessly assaulted the petitioner. In support of his contention, the petitioner has placed on record photograph at Annexure 'O' and 'A-1'. It is the case of the petitioner that while assaulting the petitioner, he was threatened by respondent Nos. 3 to 6 that if he does not stop giving news against them, they will not leave him alive. Thereafter the petitioner was taken to City Police Station and there again respondent Nos. 3 to 6 along with the other staff on duty assaulted the petitioner and he was detained in lock up. Thereafter the petitioner was taken for medical check up to Medical Officer of Cottage Hospital, Malkapur who advised to take the petitioner to Buldhana for immediate medical treatment. But, instead of doing so the petitioner was brought back to police station and by threat and under duress, obtained in writing that the petitioner wants to take medical treatment in private hospital and the petitioner was released.

3. It is submitted by the petitioner that a false complaint came to be registered against the petitioner for having committed an offence under Section 353 of the Indian Penal Code and so on and that the petitioner was illegally detained on summoning him to the police station on the pretext of taking him to Buldhana Hospital for further medical treatment (Annexure 'D'). The petitioner came to be produced before the Special Executive Magistrate (Respondent No. 2) on 23.10.1999, who is a Police Inspector, by filing istegasha, showing his arrest on 23.10.1999 at 13.15 Hrs. under Section 41(2) of the Criminal Procedure Code vide istegasha No. 44/1999. On his production before the respondent No. 2 without even questioning the petitioner, the respondent No. 2 passed an order:

N.A. produced before me at 17.20 hrs. Brought by P.C. 1026 of Malkapur city. He has no complaint against Police. No surety. M.C.R. granted. 4.11.1999. Reqd. one year Rs. 10,000/- one solvency. One surety. Simple Cross. and was ordered to be sent to prison. On this, the petitioner informed the respondent No. 2 that he has been mercilessly beaten by the police and he is having various injuries and further requested to release him on personal bond and time to give the surety. But, neither his request was granted nor he was allowed to take legal aid, and, therefore, the respondent No. 2, without following the due process of law, straightway, passed the impugned order and sent the petitioner to M.C.R. fill 4.11.1999. It is contended on behalf of the petitioner that this was an illegal order because of which petitioner was in jail from 23.10.1999 to 30.10.1999 and it was only due to intervention of this Court that on 29.10.1999 an order was passed by this Court to release the petitioner. But the petitioner was released on 30.10.1999 though the orders passed by this Court were communicated to the authorities by wireless and telephone.

4. It is the contention of the petitioner that the proceedings initiated by respondent No. 2 under Section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code are totally unwarranted, and without following the procedure of law he came to be detained during the period 23.10.1999 to 30.10.1999 unlawfully and illegally and, therefore, the petitioner seeks action against respondent Nos. 2, 2-A, 3 to 6 in accordance with law. The petitioner also claims compensation for his custodial torture and illegal detention.

5. It is the case of the petitioner that the powers vested with the Police Officers to initiate proceedings under Chapter VIII of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the abuse of these powers by the police in connivance with their senior officers who have been appointed as Special Executive Magistrates is violative of petitioner's right enshrined in Articles 14 and 21 of the Constitution of India and, therefore, the petitioner seeks appropriate writ order or direction against the respondent-State to regulate arbitrary exercise of such powers which affects the liberty of person 'as in all such cases, without following the due process of law and the procedure provided under Chapter VIII, innocent persons are illegally detained in prison and, therefore, such powers of Executive Magistrate/Special Executive Magistrate vested in police officers should be directed to be withdrawn. The petitioner has also challenged the conferring of power of Executive Magistrate or Special Executive Magistrate in Police Officers below the rank of Commissioner of Police, as contemplated under Sub-section (5) of Section 20 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The petitioner has specifically sought a direction of withdrawal of powers conferred on respondent No. 2-A under Section 21 of the Criminal Procedure Code appointing him as Special Executive Magistrate for gross misuse of the powers by him and, therefore, declare the notification dated 10.2.1993 (Annexure F-1) which confers, power under Section 107 to 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code on the officers like respondent No. 2 (Police Officers), as bad in law and also a direction that the State shall not confer such powers on any other officer below the rank of Commissioner of Police. The petitioner has, in addition to his claim for compensation, also prayed for allowing the petition with costs.

6. In spite of service on all the respondents it is only respondent No. 2 who has chosen to file his submissions on affidavit. It is the case of respondent No. 2 that the petitioner, by taking advantage of his position as a journalist and reporter of one Daily Hindusthan at Malkapur, indulged in extortion of money from shopkeepers, businessmen and other Government Officers by publishing false and defamatory news items against them in newspapers and due to his nuisance value none of the affected persons dares to lodge any complaint against him. It is submitted that following cases are pending against the petitioner.

1. Crime No. 86/1997 under Section 406 of Indian Penal Code.

2. Crime No. 3020/98 under Sections 294, 540 and 506 of Indian Penal Code.

3. Crime No. 6049/1998 under Section 85(1) of Bombay Prohibition Act.

4. Crime No. 88/1998 under Sections 324, 504 and 337 of Indian Penal Code.

5. Crime No. 152/1998 under Sections 452 and 294 of Indian Penal Code.

6. Crime No. 149/1999 under Section 353 of Indian Penal Code read with Section 120 of Bombay Police Act.

7. N.C. No. 521/1998 under Section 504.

8. N.C. No. 28/1998 under Sections 323, 504 and 506 of Indian Penal Code.

It is further submitted that the enquiry before the S.D.P.O. Malkapur is pending for initiating externment proceedings against the petitioner as per Section 56 of the Bombay Police Act, 1951. Another allegation made against the petitioner is that he is in the habit of consuming liquor and committing breach of peace in the city by creating nuisance and therefore, in Ganpati festival, the petitioner was served with notice under Section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code in September 1999 in order to maintain law and order and it is because of this notice that the petitioner was enraged and published a defamatory news item in Daily Hindustan dated 22.9.1999 against the Police of Police Station Malkapur City of which enquiry is pending.

7. According to respondent No. 2, on 21.10.1999 at 21 hours, the petitioner went to Police Station, Malkapur, Rural where Police Constable Baban Sangade was on duty. He enquired from him as to where is Gadari Saheb on which he was informed that he will come to know about it in the morning. At that time the petitioner was in drunken condition and his clothes were smeared with blood. Thereafter at 23.00 hrs. petitioner came to the Police Station. At that time, it was noticed that there was injury on his hand and blood was oozing out of it. At that time also the petitioner was in drunken condition. It is the case of respondent No. 2 that the petitioner told the Police Constable Baban Sangade that he is beaten by the people and therefore he should accompany him on which Police Constable Baban Sangade told the petitioner to report at Police Station, City. The petitioner again got enraged and started abusing Police Constable Baban Sangade in filthy language and further told him that "Police Wale Majle, Maza Hafta Kothe Ahe, Tumhi Paise Khata." On this Police Constable Baban Sangade requested him to go from there. So, petitioner picked up a stone and threw it on Police Constable Baban Sangade and assaulted him. Other police personnel present there separated the petitioner from Police Constable Baban Sangade. It is out of this incident that an offence under Section 353 of the Indian Penal Code read with Section 120 of Bombay Police Act came to be registered on 22.10.1999 at 01.00 hrs. against the petitioner at Police Station, Malkapur City as the incident occurred in Police Station, Malkapur, Rural which is within the jurisdiction of Police Station, Malkapur

City. In case of the complaint of the petitioner that he has been beaten by public, he was told that he should report the matter with that police station i.e. Police Station, Malkapur City. It is the contention of respondent No. 2 that after registering the said crime, the petitioner was arrested on 23.10.1999 and he was sent to Rural Hospital, Malkapur for medical examination. As per the Medical Officer at Rural Hospital, Malkapur, petitioner suffered minor injury and further he was referred to E.N.T. specialist at Buldhana for further treatment but the petitioner refused to go at Buldhana and informed in writing that he will get treated from private doctor. Thereafter, at about 12.30 hrs. he was released on bail.

8. The reason given for the arrest of the petitioner under Section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code is that at the relevant time there were processions of immersion of Durga Idols and therefore the petitioner was arrested under Section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code and was sent on 23.10.1999 at 17.20 hrs. to Special Executive Magistrate. Local Crime Branch and that it was necessary to take prohibitory action against the petitioner and therefore, under the istegasha No. 44/1999, under Section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code, he was told to keep ready two sureties of Rs. 10,000/- each for his release. But, as the petitioner could not furnish sureties he was sent to magisterial custody till 1.11.1999. It is submitted that the petitioner was sent to magisterial custody as he could not produce the sureties and that the respondent No. 2 has not misused any powers or provision and the prohibitory action was taken against the petitioner as per law. It is also clarified that when he was produced before respondent No. 2, respondent No. 2 enquired with him as to whether there is any complaint against the police. But the petitioner informed that he has no complaint against the Police and it is only on 29.10.1999 when this Court passed an order, petitioner came to be immediately released on bail on 29.10.1999 and therefore there is no substance in the petition. The same deserves to be dismissed.

9. We have heard Mr. P.B. Patil, learned Counsel appearing for the petitioner and Mr. Bhushan Gavai, learned Government Pleader and Public Prosecutor along with Mr. K.S. Dhote, learned Additional Public Prosecutor for the respondents and have given anxious consideration to the facts and circumstances placed before us.

10. The facts relating to the arrest and detention of the petitioner by the impugned order passed in a proceeding initiated under Section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code are not much disputed. It is also not disputed that the petitioner had suffered injuries as claimed by him. The only point of disagreement is who is responsible for these injuries suffered by the petitioner on 22.10.1999. It is the case of the petitioner that he was accosted by Police Constable Baban Sangade and taken to Police Station, Rural Malkapur where he called respondent Nos. 3 to 6 and they all assaulted him in the police station, which resulted in injury. On the other hand, it is the case of the respondent No. 2 that the petitioner had come to Police Station, Rural, Malkapur with a complaint that he has been assaulted by the members of the public and was in drunken condition. If these allegations and counter allegations are taken into consideration in the background that the petitioner has lodged a complaint dated 24.9.1999, (Annexure A) to the S.D.P.O., Malkapur, followed by another complaint on 22.10.1999 which was sent through Post and Telegram Department, and a detailed complaint of the same was also lodged to the S.D.O. Malkapur before the petitioner came to be arrested by Police Station, Rural or City, Malkapur after he was summoned as per Annexure 'O'. We fail to understand as to why the Police did not take cognizance of the complaint made by the petitioner and there is no reply filed on affidavit before the Court by the State of Maharashtra to explain this. In the affidavit-in-reply filed by respondent No. 2, there is no whisper about this complaint lodged by the petitioner. Secondly, if the story given by respondent No. 2 in his affidavit-in-reply has to be accepted that the petitioner came to Police Station Rural, Malkapur in the night of 22.10.1999 with a complaint that he has been assaulted by members of the public, why the Police did not register such a complaint and sent the petitioner for medical examination. If the Police was satisfied that the petitioner had suffered serious injuries and was in drunken state, it was necessary on their part to get him medically examined for the injuries suffered by him and to ascertain the fact that he has consumed alcohol. None of the respondents have filed their affidavit-in-reply denying the allegations made by the petitioner. Therefore, this Court has no hesitation to arrive at a conclusion that the story given by the petitioner will have to be accepted that he was accosted by Police Constable Baban Sangade and brought to Police Station, Rural, Malkapur and given beating, causing serious injuries on his person. The respondents have not denied the injuries as reflected in the photograph annexed to the petition. On the other hand, it is their case that these injuries are caused because he is beaten by members of the public. In his affidavit-in-reply, the respondent No. 2 has, in terms accepted that the petitioner is a nuisance for the Society as he extorts money from businessmen, people in the locality as well as Government officers and therefore, the contention of the petitioner that as he was exposing the functioning of the Police i.e. mal practice and high handedness of the Police personnel. It was out of vengeance that the respondent Nos. 3 to 6 not only assaulted him in the Police Station while he was in their custody but also threatened him of dire consequences and the superior officers, in spite of repeated complaints by the petitioner, failed to take notice of it.

11. Now let us turn our attention to the proceedings initiated against the petitioner by the respondents under Chapter VIII of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The reason given in the affidavit-in-reply filed by respondent No. 2 for initiating such proceedings against the petitioner was that at the relevant time processions for immersion of Durga Idols was under process and therefore the petitioner was arrested under Section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and was sent on 23.10.1999 at 17.20 hours, to Special Executive Magistrate Local Crime Branch and such action was necessary keeping in mind the processions of Durga Idols immersion and therefore the respondent No. 2, under istegasha No. 44/1999, under Section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code as it was necessary to take prohibitory action against the petitioner told him to keep ready two sureties of Rs. 10,000/- each for his release. But as the petitioner could not furnish the sureties, he was sent to Magisterial custody on 1.11.1999 whereas the istegasha, on which the impugned order came to be passed do not mention anything about the prohibitory action taken by the Police due to procession of immersion of Durga Idols. But there is a specific mention of the fact that considering the previous offences for which the petitioner is being prosecuted and that the petitioner lodges false complaint with senior officers against any person and publishes report in newspapers because of which nobody is prepared to make complaint against the petitioner in Police Station and because of this, common people are terrorised and there is a danger to their property and lives due to these activities of the petitioner and that there is all likelihood that he may commit offence of serious nature, and to prevent all this, it is necessary that he should be called upon to furnish substantial surety.

12. Chapter VIII of the Code of Criminal Procedure provides for various provisions under which security for keeping the peace and for good behaviour can be sought from any person. The provisions in this Chapter which empower the Court of Magistrates to obtain security from a person to prevent him from committing offence, in future, are of two kinds. (i) A security for keeping peace which is covered by the provisions under Sections 106 and 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code and (ii) A security for good behaviour which is covered by provisions under Sections 108 to 110. Sections 111 to 124 contains procedural provisions under which such proceedings are to be conducted. We are not concerned with provisions under Sections 106 and 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In case of security for good behaviour, it is Sections 108 to 110 which can be initiated. Sections 110, 111 and 116(3) of the Criminal Procedure Code relevant for the purpose, reads as under:

110. Security for good behaviour from habitual offenders.-When an Executive Magistrate receives information that there is within his local jurisdiction a person who

(a) is by habit a robber, house-breaker, thief or forger, or

(b) is by habit a receiver of stolen property knowing the same to have been stolen, or

(c) habitually protects or harbours thieves, or aids in the concealment or disposal of stolen property, or

(d) habitually commits, or attempts to commit, or abets the commission of the offence of kidnapping, abduction, extortion, cheating or mischief, or any offence punishable under Chapter XII of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860) or under Section 489A, Section 489B, Section 489C or Section 489D of that Code, or

(e) habitually commits, or attempts to commit or abets the Commission of offences, involving a breach of the peace or

(f) habitually commits, or attempts to commit or abets the commission of-

(i) any offence under one or more of the following Acts, namely

(a) the Drugs and Cosmetics Act, 1940 (23 of 1940);

(b) the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1973 (46 of 1973);

(c) the Employee's Provident Funds (and Family Pension Fund) Act, 1952 (19 of 1952);

(d) the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954 (37 of 1954);

(e) the Essential Commodities Act, 1955 (10 of 1955);

(f) the Untouchability (Offenders) Act, 1955 (22 of 1955);

(g) the Customs Act, 1962 (52 of 1962); or

(ii) any offence punishable under any other law providing for the prevention of hoarding or profiteering or of adulteration of food or drugs or of corruption, or

(g) is so desperate and dangerous as to render his being at large without security hazardous to the community, such Magistrate may, in the mariner hereinafter provided, require such person to show cause why he should not be ordered to execute a bond, with sureties, for his good behaviour for such period, not exceeding three years as the Magistrate thinks fit.

111. Order Co be made.-When a Magistrate acting under Section 107, Section 108, Section 109 or Section 110, deems it necessary to require any person to show cause under such section he shall make an order in writing, setting forth the substance of the information received the amount of the bond to be executed, the term for which it is to be in force and the number, character and class of sureties (if any) required.

116. Enquiry as to truth of information.-

(3) After the commencement and before the completion of the inquiry under Sub-section (1), the Magistrate, if he considers that immediate measures are necessary for the prevention of a breach of the peace or disturbance of the public tranquillity or the commission of any offence or for the public safety, may, for reason to be recorded in writing, direct the person in respect of whom the order under Section 111 has been made to execute a bond, with or without sureties, for keeping the peace or maintaining good behaviour until the conclusion of the inquiry and may detain him in custody until such bond is executed or in default of execution until the inquiry is concluded:

Provided that-

(a) no person against whom proceedings are not being taken over under Section 108, Section 109, or Section 110 shall be directed to execute a bond for maintaining good behaviour.

(b) the conditions of such bond whether as to the amount thereof or as to the provision of sureties or the number thereof or the pecuniary extent of their liability shall not be more onerous than those specified in the order under Section 111.

Therefore, it is clear that proceedings under Section 110 are taken to prevent committing such acts by a person as mentioned therein. The object of this section is to bind down the person to good behaviour with an object to afford protection to the public against a repetition of crimes against their person or property and is not a punishment of the offender for his past offences, but for securing his good behaviour for the future. Since this section confers drastic powers to bind down persons suspected; but not proved to have committed any of the offences specified in various clauses, the powers should be used with extreme caution and judicial discretion and strictly according to the procedure laid down, so that it may not be used as an engine of oppressions, blackmail or private vengeance.

13. The first step in the proceedings is passing of a preliminary order under Section 111 of the Criminal Procedure Code which is a condition precedent for taking further steps in any proceedings under Sections 107 to 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Such order, with its required contents, must be recorded and indicated even where the Police have brought before the Magistrate a person under arrest as a suspected offender. The first thing is that the Magistrate must do after receipt of the information, referred to in Section 110 is to apply his mind to such information, if he is satisfied that there is ground for proceeding under such Chapter to pass an order in writing under the present section and, therefore, it is mandatory on the part of the Magistrate for passing of a preliminary order stating the substance of the information etc. which will be served as a notice. It does not contemplate a notice different from such order. If the person charged is present in the Court, the order should be read over to him and that may amount to notice. If they are not present, a copy of summons must be enclosed with the summons or warrant as the case may be and therefore, it is quite clear that no final step in the proceedings can be made and therefore, without giving an opportunity to such person to show cause by reading over the order to him if he happens to be in the Court when order under Section 111 is made. It is only thereafter that the preliminary order under Sub-section (3) of Section 116 of the Code of Criminal Procedure can be passed and, therefore, one thing is clear that unless and until steps as contemplated under Section 111 of the Criminal Procedure Code are taken i.e. an order requiring a person to show cause under such section, which should be in writing setting forth the substance of the information received, the amount of the bond to be executed the term for which it is to be in force and the number, character and class of sureties (if any) required no further steps can be taken, in the present case, plain reading of the impugned order which is reproduced below:

N.A. produced before me at 17.20 hrs. Brought by P.C. 1026 of Malkapur city. He has no complaint against Police. No surety M.C.R. granted.

4.11.1999.

does demonstrate that the learned Executive Magistrate did not follow the procedure as contemplated under Section 111 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Even the impugned order does not indicate under what clause of Section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code he has to execute bond and furnish surety. The order also do not conform to the requirement of Section 116(3), which is indicative of the fact that the respondent No. 2A, in misuse of his powers conferred under Section 21 of the Criminal Procedure Code, remanded the petitioner to custody as the impugned order is passed without application of mind and by ignoring the due process of law, therefore, the detention of the petitioner can only be said to be illegal and in violation of Article 21 of the Constitution of India.

14. Our attention was drawn by the learned Counsel for the petitioner to the case of Chandrabhan Rama Dhengle v. Indirabai Chandrabhan Dhengle and Ors. , in which this Court held that the Magistrate was found to have exercised jurisdiction under Section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code arbitrarily and in clear violation of Article 21 of the Constitution resulting in illegal detention of the petitioner in the said proceedings for a period of 63 days. The State was liable to pay compensation of Rs. 50,000/- to the petitioner for the said illegal confinement. Another case is of Vimladevi Tiwari v. State of Maharashtra and Ors. 1998 (3) Mh.L.J. 712 : 1998 Bom. C.R. (Cri.) 676 : 1999 (1) All M.R. 116, wherein also this Court held that the Court having failed to follow the procedure under Section 111 as well as 116 of the Criminal Procedure Code and causing detention of the son of the petitioner, can be only termed as wholly unauthorised and without jurisdiction. In the two cases cited before us, this High Court had an occasion to examine the manner in which the Special Executive Magistrate conferred with powers under Chapter VIII of the Code of Criminal Procedure had exercised them in an arbitrary manner and without following the due procedure, causing illegal detention, which was held to be wholly unauthorised and without jurisdiction.

15. In the given facts and circumstances of this case we are satisfied that the respondent No. 2, which office was held by respondent No. 2A overlooked the necessary and essential requirement of law, while passing the impugned order and arbitrarily ordered the magisterial custody remand of the petitioner without being vested with such powers at the instance of respondent Nos. 3 to 6 and the whole object of initiation of these proceedings which are challenged before this Court was to see that the petitioner is taught a lesson by torturing him in custody resulting in serious injuries and is also detained in prison so that he should learn a lesson not to expose Police Officers of the region within whose jurisdiction he was residing.

16. In addition to seeking quashing of the proceedings, the petitioner has also claimed compensation on two counts, firstly for the injuries suffered by him while he was detained in Police custody and assaulted by respondent Nos. 3 to 6 to which there is no challenge by the respondent Nos. 3 to 6 and secondly for his wrongful detention in the prison under orders of respondent No. 2. The petitioner has also sought for directions against the State Government for withdrawing the powers vested in respondent No. 2 as Special Executive Magistrate and by ordering the respondent/State to refrain from vesting of such powers under Chapter VIII in Police Officers except in cases provided under Sub-section (5) of Section 20 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

17. Mr. Patil the learned Counsel appearing for the petitioner after a well researched study made several submissions, highlighting the importance of independence of judiciary as an essential attribute of rule of law which is a basic feature of our Constitution in the background of frequent and deliberate misuse of powers vested under Chapter VIII in favour of Special Executive Magistrate, specially with reference to Police Officers in addition to various constitutional provisions. Mr. Patil has also drawn our attention to the various reports of Law Commission of India regarding reform of judicial administration and submitted that in fact this Court should issue appropriate writ, order or direction so as to declare Section 21 of the Code of Criminal Procedure as ultra vires as it vests unguarded discretion in the Stale to confer judicial powers on Police Officers which is misused with impunity with total arbitrariness as such misuse of powers has direct nexus with the liberty of the citizen and it is in derogation of the fundamental right guaranteed under Section 21 which shall provide that no person shall be deprived of his life or personal liberty except according to procedure established by law. Mr. Patil submitted that though the provisions under Chapter VIII, do provide for a procedure which can be called reasonable fair and just but it is prone to misuse by the Executive to subserve their cause and therefore, such appointment of Police Officers as Special Executive Magistrates deserves to be quashed and set aside.

18. Mr. Gavai, learned Government Pleader and Public Prosecutor submitted that when statute permits the State Government to appoint an Executive Magistrate to exercise powers vested in the provisions under Chapter VIII, it cannot be said to be arbitrary as the manner in which such powers are to be exercised is also regulated by the said provisions and, therefore, it will not be proper to quash and set aside or issue any writ, order or direction against the State from conferring powers of Special Executive Magistrates to Police Officers. It is submitted that the State, in its wisdom and considering the exigencies, has conferred powers of Special Executive Magistrate on Police Officers of the rank of Police Inspectors for conducting proceedings under Chapter VIII of the Code of Criminal Procedure and that in a given case, this Court can very well quash and set aside orders which are passed by such Executive Magistrates which are found to be illegal. Mr. Gavai has tried to canvass before us that the Court will have to consider the submissions made by Mr. Patil by looking to the object which the Statute seeks to achieve and it should have a purposive approach for interpreting the provisions of Sections 20 and 21 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

19. Our enquiry from the learned Public Prosecutor as to why the State Government thought it fit to confer power of Special Executive Magistrate by invoking Section 21 of the Criminal Procedure Code in an officer of the rank of Police Inspector when even in case of appointment of Executive Magistrates such powers are restricted by Sub-section (5) of Section 20 only to the officers of the rank of Commissioner of Police we were informed relying upon a communication by Fax from the State Government, that such powers were vested in Police Inspectors as the State was satisfied that they are experienced, Gazetted Officers of the Police Department and have reasonable knowledge of law. Well, we do not propose to go into all these niceties but we should record that vesting of powers of Special Executive Magistrate in Police Officers of whatever rank they may, has resulted in blatant misuse of such powers to the detriment of fundamental right of a citizen as enshrined in Article 21 of the Constitution of India. Very few cases reach the High Court relating to the proceedings before Special Executive Magistrate concerned with Chapter VIII of the Criminal Procedure Code. This Court has no hesitation to take a judicial notice of the fact that if there is a survey conducted in the jails in the State of Maharashtra of the under trial prisoners languishing in jail, most of them are those who are arrested in petty offences and surprisingly a reasonable number of such persons are those against whom proceedings under Chapter VIII have been initiated. At least we have not come across any case in which when such proceedings are challenged either by way of revision before the Sessions Court or by invoking the writ jurisdiction of this Court, a detention of a person against whom proceedings under Chapter VIII is pending, was found to be justifiable. Therefore, in our humble opinion, it is high time that the State, which is duty bound to protect the fundamental right of its citizen and particularly relating to their liberty, should resort to Section 478 of the Code of Criminal Procedure which vests in the State powers to order functions allocated to Executive Magistrates and such powers vested in favour of police officers as Special Executive Magistrate particularly in reference to Chapter VIII proceedings as they are commonly known and relate to Sections 108 to 110 as well as Sections 145 and 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code to be made over to Judicial Magistrate of the First Class or Metropolitan Magistrate, as the case may be.

20. We have already come to the conclusion that the petitioner was tortured in Police Custody which was illegal, causing him serious injuries and further came to be detained under the impugned order illegally and unauthorisedly, without following the procedure provided under Sections 111 and 116 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In Smt. Nilabatti Behera alias Lalita Behera v. State of Orissa and Ors. AIR 1993 SC 1960 : 1993 (2) SCC 746 : 1993 A.C.J. 787 : 1993 SCC (Cri.) 527, the Supreme Court held as under:

A claim in public law for compensation for contravention of human rights and fundamental freedoms, the protection of which is guaranteed in the Constitution is an acknowledged remedy for enforcement and protection of such rights, and such a claim based on strict liability made by resorting to a constitutional remedy provided for the enforcement of a fundamental right is distinct from and, in addition to the remedy in private law for damages for the tort resulting from the contravention of the fundamental right. The defence of sovereign immunity being inapplicable, and alien to the concept of guarantee of fundamental rights, there can be no question of such a defence being available, in the constitutional remedy. It is this principle which justifies award of monetary compensation for contravention made by the State or its servants in the purported exercise of their powers, and enforcement of the fundamental right is claimed by resort to the remedy in public law under the Constitution by recourse to Articles 32 and 226 of the Constitution.

The Supreme Court is not helpless and the wide powers given to it by Article 32 which itself is a fundamental right, imposes a constitutional obligation on it to forge new tools, which may be necessary for doing complete justice and enforcing the fundamental rights guaranteed in the constitution, which enable the award of monetary compensation in appropriate cases, where that is the only mode of redress available. The power available to the Court under Article 142 is also an enabling provision in this behalf. The contrary view would not merely render the Court powerless and the constitutional guarantee a mirage, but may, in certain situations, be an incentive to extinguish life, if for the extreme contravention the Court is powerless to grant any relief against the State, except by punishment of the wrongdoer for the resulting offence and recovery of damages, under private law, by the ordinary process. If the guarantee that deprivation of life and personal liberty cannot be made except in accordance with law, is to be real, the enforcement of the right in case of every contravention must also be possible in the constitutional scheme, the mode of redress being that which is appropriate in the facts of each case. This remedy in public law has to be more readily available when invoked by the have-nots, who are not possessed of the wherewithal for enforcement of their rights in private law, even though the exercise is to be tempered by judicial restraint to avoid circumvention of private law remedies, were more appropriate and therefore, we direct the respondent/State to pay a sum of Rs. 15,000/- to the petitioner for custodial torture and illegal detention of the petitioner. The compensation to be paid to the petitioner within a period of four weeks from the date of passing of this Order. We also direct the respondent/State to pay Rs. 5,000/- as costs to the petitioner. We further direct the State to take suitable action against its guilty officers i.e. respondent Nos. 3 to 6 for custodial torture meted out to the petitioner. It will be open for the State to recover the amount of compensation directed to be paid to the petitioner from its officers who are found responsible in the cause. Rule made absolute in the aforesaid terms. Certified copy expedited.

JUDGMENT

1. These two writ petitions had been filed by the petitioners raising several key issues in reference to the practice and procedure followed by the Police Officers, who are vested with the powers of Executive Magistrate for conducting proceedings under Chapter VIII of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 (hereinafter referred to as 'Code' for short).

2. In Criminal Writ Petition No. 428/2002 the petitioner is an Advocate, who was required to invoke the extraordinary jurisdiction of this Court, as one person by name Khobaib Raja engaged him to represent his case before the Special Executive Magistrate, Tahsil Division, city of Nagpur, in the proceedings initiated under Section 107 of the Code at the behest of Police Station Lakadganj, and has highlighted the various illegalities and irregularities being practiced in the court of Special Executive Magistrate, who also happens to be the Assistant Commissioner of Police of Kotwali Division, and has been joined in person as respondent No. 3. The main grievance of the petitioner is that in addition to the procedure adopted by respondent No. 3 and the officials working under him, respondent No. 3's behaviour is unbecoming of holding the said post, as he misbehaved, insulted and humiliated the petitioner, who is an Advocate and was appearing for his client, by giving threat and used unparliamentary words, and that inspite of the petitioner having made complaints to the Superior Officers of respondent No. 3, no action in the matter was taken. It is further contended that the person, whom the petitioner was representing, was reprimanded for engaging the petitioner and was threatened with detention in jail by respondent No. 3 through his Clerk Shri Karade, in event of his failure to pay sum of Rs. 2000/-as bribe. Therefore, according to the petitioner, the respondent No. 3 has violated the majesty and dignity of the court of Special Executive Magistrate and solemn office of Executive Magistrate held by him and in connivance with his staff has been extorting money from persons against whom proceedings under Chapter VIII of the Code are initiated in his court under duress of detaining them in jail, if their demands are not fulfilled and by discouraging such persons to engage an Advocate of their own choice by insisting upon engaging Advocate who are patronised by his office and, therefore, such conduct of the respondent No. 3 and his staff is violative of Article 21 and 22 of the Constitution of India, as it deprives personal liberty of a citizen without following the procedure established by law, which should be reasonable, fair and just. Further, their conduct in denying a person to be defended by legal practitioner of his choice is violative of his rights under Article 21 and 22 of Constitution of India.

3. In so far as Criminal Writ Petition No. 293 of 2003 is concerned, it is filed by the petitioners contending that they were called upon to execute a bond of Rs. 25000/-in a proceedings initiated by Walgaon Police under Section 151 read with Section 107, 116(3) of the Code, by insisting upon executing the bond for the sum of Rs. 25000/-with one cross-surety in the like amount belonging to rival group, as interim order passed under Section 116(3) of the Code without following provisions of law and sent the petitioners in jail thereby curtailing their personal liberty contrary to the procedure established by law.

4. This court in both the matters has passed various interim orders including an enquiry into the allegations made by the petitioner Advocate Shri. R.S.Nayak in Criminal Writ Petition No. 428 of 2002 against respondent No. 3 and the staff working with him by senior Police Officer and also obtained record and proceedings of the cases in the two petitions. By its order dated 23/9/2003 in Criminal Writ Petition No. 498 of 2002 this Court thought it proper that both the petitions can be heard together and that is how we proposed to dispose of both these petitions by common judgment and order, as the nature of allegations made in the petitions and the illegalities and irregularities, which are alleged to have been adopted by the court of Executive Magistrate are of identical nature.

5. We have heard the learned Counsel for the petitioners and so also the learned Additional Public Prosecutor, representing the respondents in both the matters and with the able assistance of the learned Counsel for the parties, we have examined the record and proceedings in the two cases. What we find is that the allegations made in both the petitions - in so far as it relates to the procedure adopted by the Police Officers who are holding post of Executive Magistrate for conducting proceedings under Chapter VIII of the Code - that it is not properly followed resulting in violation of rights of the petitioners under Articles 21 and 22 of the Constitution of India and it deserves to be streamlined, and effective vigilance on the functioning of such courts of Executive Magistrate is need of the day so that such malpractices can be prevented and their working regulated and controlled by judicial supervision by the court of Sessions and so also administrative control by Senior

Police Officers, who have disciplinary control over the persons functioning in such courts including the Presiding Officers, who are of the rank of Inspector of Police and Assistant Commissioner of Police and are conferred with powers of Executive Magistrates, and conduct proceedings under Chapter VIII of the Code.

6. It is in this backdrop that we want to examine the allegations made in the two petitions against the conduct of the authorities and before we dwell on specific allegations made in these two petitions, we would like to reiterate the settled principles relating to initiation of proceedings under Chapter VIII, which provides for security for keeping the peace and for good behaviour. The provisions in this Chapter which empower courts and Magistrate to obtain security from a person to prevent him from committing offences in the future are of two kinds. Firstly, security for keeping the peace, which is contemplated under Sections 106 and 107 of the Code and secondly security for good behaviour, which is specified in Sections 108 to 110 of the Code. Rests of the chapter contains procedure and provisions which is set out in Sections 111 and 112 of the Code. We need not go into a detailed analysis of these provisions but we would like to highlight the practice and procedure which is to be adopted by person holding the post of Special Executive Magistrate or Executive Magistrate while conducting these proceedings.

7. Though the incidents of the various proceedings under this Chapter (Sections 106 to 110 of the Code) differ in material respects, there is one aspect, namely, that all these proceedings have for their object -the prevention, and not punishment of a crime. The other common aspect of all these proceedings is that they are not obligatory but confer the discretionary power on the specified court or magistrate to exercise such power in the specified circumstance being an interference with the liberty of the individual, such power must be exercised judicially, and strictly in accordance with the procedure laid down in the relevant sections. The Magistrate must first himself consider that immediate measures are necessary for the prevention of the breach of the peace or the disturbance of the public tranquility or then commission of any offence or for the public safety and then after recording his reasons in writing, direct the person concerned to execute a bond for keeping the peace, etc. until the conclusion of the enquiry. This postulates application of his judicial mind by the Magistrate, whose order is subject to judicial scrutiny by superior Courts of Revision and superintendence. He cannot completely mortgage his decision, or abdicate his power or surrender his own responsibility in favour of the police, though it would be well within his competence, in a given case to take into account the police report for what it is worth in forming his own conclusion on the material legally available to him. But this exercise must indisputably be seen to be done and the order of the Magistrate must clearly reflect the application of the Magistrate's own judicial mind to the facts and circumstances properly placed before him. However, summary the proceedings under Chapter VIII, Cr.P.C., may be considered, they are judicial proceedings and have to be conducted in accordance with the Code and the Magistrate holding these proceedings must see that the fundamental elements of the judicial process find expression in the machinery for administering justice. It is clear that an order under Sub-section (3) of Section 116 of the Code for furnishing of bond can be made only after the commencement of the enquiry and before its completion, provided the allegations forming the basis of the parent proceeding or the allegations leading to the necessity for furnishing of interim bonds are tested by inquiry and judicial mind is applied for ascertaining whether there is prima facie justifiable basis for such a direction. Sub-section (2) of Section 116 provides that the inquiry is to be as nearly as practicable in the manner prescribed for conducting trial and recording of evidence in summons cases. Chapter XX of the Code makes provision for trial of summons cases. Until the allegations are supported by materials so as to satisfy the judicial mind that a direction for bond is called for, no order for furnishing of a bond can be given. Section 116 of the Code of 1973 corresponds to Section 117 of the Code of 1898, Sub-section (6) and (7) of the 1973 Code are new provision. Old Sub-section (3) commenced with .pending the completion of the enquiry.. The new Sub-section (3), however, starts with .after the commencement and before the completion of the enquiry.. This change has been made so as to put the matter beyond doubt that an interim bond can be called for only after commencement of the enquiry and before its completion. The amendment gives effect to the Supreme Court's decision in Madhu Limaye v. Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Momghyr (A.I.R.1971 S.C.2481)

8. The next important aspect, which has come to our knowledge by examining various record and proceedings from the file of the Executive Magistrate is the manner in which orders are passed under Section 111 and Section 116(3) of the Code. We are shocked and surprised to note that so far as the Execute Magistrate of Kotwali Division is concerned, the learned Special Executive Magistrate has got a printed form incorporating both the orders leaving certain margins so as to fill in the blanks/gaps which only go to indicate that the two orders are passed in a rigid manner without application of mind. We are afraid but have no hesitation to observe that this practice and procedure is probably followed by all the Executive Magistrates, who are Police Officers of the rank of the Assistant Commissioner of Police functioning in their respective Division throughout the city of Nagpur. The learned Additional Public Prosecutor on seeking instructions has made a statement that this practice would be discontinued forthwith. We may remind the Presiding Officers of the courts of Executive Magistrates that both the orders i.e. 1) Under Section 111 and other under Section 116(3) of the Code has to be passed by the learned Magistrate on due application of mind. In so far as order under Section 111 of the Code is concerned, it enjoins upon the Magistrate to make an order in writing, setting forth the substance of information received, the amount of the bond to be executed, term for which it is to be in force, and the number, character and class of sureties (if any required) and the Magistrate can only proceed to pass an order under Section 111 of the Code on the basis of substance of the information received by him, which has to be spelt out in the order, which requires that there must be information of a nature which convinces him that there is likelihood of a breach of peace. The person, who gave information might not be in a position to give details, but the source of information might be sufficient to convince the Magistrate that the breach of the peace was likely and if he was convinced, the law required him to take action. Needless to say, the substance of information must be setforth in the order which depends in each case upon the circumstances of the case. Without an order under Section 111 of the Code, the Magistrate has no competence to deal with such person. In so far the order which is required to be passed under Section 116(3) of the Code -The provisions of Section 116(3) clearly mention that the order of interim bond should be passed after recording reasons therefore. The Magistrate while acting under Sub-section (3) of Section 116, Cr. P.C., has to make careful consideration as regards to the separate case of emergency as contemplated under the said section and he must be satisfied that immediate steps are necessary. The fact that the police report indicated that the members of the opposite-party were likely to create breach of the peace is not sufficient to pass an order and it cannot be said that the Magistrate has given a careful consideration to the existence of a case of emergency when he merely relies on a police report without even calling the police officer to the witness box. An order made under Sub-section (3) is bad if it is not accompanied by reasons recorded in writing why the Magistrate wants to take the emergency measures..

9. The next important thing which is required to be kept in mind by the learned Magistrate is in relation to the amount of the bond. This should be fixed with due regard to the circumstances of the case, and must not be excessive. The Magistrate should consider the station in life of the person concerned, and should not go beyond a sum for which there is a fair probability of his being able to find security. Imprisonment is provided as a protection to society against the perpetration of crime by the individual, and not as a punishment for a crime committed, it is only reasonable and just that the individual should be afforded a fair chance at least of complying with the required condition of security.

10. While passing an order under Section 116(3) of the Code, the Magistrate is also expected to be conscious about the provisions relating to requirements of the bond. Since under new Section 116(3) of the Code a Magistrate cannot demand any surety bond, in a proceeding initiated under Section 107 of the Code the question of executing the bond or the liability of furnishing the surety will no longer arise under the said Section. The relevant provisions of Section 116 of the Code reads as under:

Section 116 : Inquiry as to truth of information. -

(1) When an order under Section 111 has been read or explained under Section 112 to a person present in Court, or when any person appears or is brought before a Magistrate in compliance with, or in execution of, a summons or warrant, issued under Section 113, the Magistrate shall proceed to inquiry into the truth of the information upon which action has been taken, and to take such further evidence as may appear necessary.

(2) Such inquiry shall be made, as nearly as may be practicable, in the manner hereinafter prescribed for conducting trial and recording evidence in summons cases.

(3) After the commencement, and before the completion, of the inquiry under Sub-section (1), the Magistrate, if he considers that immediate measures are necessary for the prevention of a breach of the peace or disturbance of the public tranquility or the commission of any offence or for the public safety, may, for reasons to be recorded in writing, direct the person in respect of whom the order under Section 111 has been made to execute a bond, with or without sureties, for keeping the peace or maintaining good behaviour until the conclusion of the inquiry, and may detain him in custody until such bond is executed or, in default of execution, until the inquiry is concluded: Provided that -

(a) no person against whom proceedings are not being taken under Section 108, Section 109, or Section 110 shall be directed to execute a bond for maintaining good behaviour;

(b) the condition of such bond, whether as to the amount thereof or as to the provision of sureties or the number thereof or the pecuniary extent of their liability, shall not be more onerous than those specified in the order under Section 111. Sub Section (4) ...onwards not relevant for our purpose.

11. This, we are required to highlight as a fact that in a proceedings initiated under Section 107 of the Code, it is common practice on the part of the Executive Magistrate to insist for surety bond by passing interim order under Section 116(3) Cr.P.C. The court has taken judicial notice of this that inspite of a clear cut provisions in Clause (a) of the proviso to Sub-section 3 of Section 116 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, in a proceeding initiated under Section 107 of the Code and the form No. 12 (Scheduled II) which is prescribed for executing bond under Section 107 of the Code, persons are detained in judicial custody for their failure to furnish interim surety in a proceedings initiated under Section 107 of Chapter VIII of the Code in exercise of jurisdiction not vested upon them in law. {See State of Maharashtra and Anr. v. Mangali Dewaiyya Pupalla, Mh.L.. 483, Mrs.Pramila Navin Shaha v. State of Maharashtra and Ors. 2005 All MR (Cri) 1233}. Having clarified the fact that in a proceedings initiated under Section 107 of the Code no surety/security or personal bond is required to be furnished under an interim order under Section 116(3) Cr.P.C., henceforth if it comes to the notice of this Court that a person against whom proceedings are initiated under Section 107 of the Code is detained in judicial custody for failure on his part to furnish interim surety/security Bond or personal Bond pursuant to an order passed under Section 116(3) of Cr.P.C. The State shall be liable to pay compensation to such person for violation of his fundamental right enshrined under Article 21 of the Constitution of India and the aggrieved person may also take recourse to other remedies available to him under the general law viz to prosecute the said magistrate for wrongful confinement and appropriate compensation for wrongful detention.

12. It will be fruitful to mention at this stage that there is a practice on the part of Executive Magistrate for insisting upon surety from caste, creed and religion other than that of the person against whom proceedings are initiated under the nomenclature .cross surety.. We may like to impress upon the Executive Magistrate, exercising powers under Chapter VIII of the Code, that such insistence of cross-surety irrespective of the nature of the case is unwarranted and most of the time it is insisted upon so as to deprive a person of his personal liberty so as to make it beyond his reach to fulfill such a condition. This is in addition to the practice of quoting excessive and prohibitive amount as sum of surety, though Clause (b) of proviso to Section 117 of the Code clearly provides that the amount of every bond shall be fixed with due regard in the circumstances of the case and shall not be excessive.

13. Concept of cross-surety has to be understood in the context of the peculiar facts and circumstances of the case, which is being dealt by the Executive Magistrate. One can understand that in a given case where proceedings are initiated against persons of the rival group to give security in keeping the peace of the opposite party. It has been so ordered in Criminal Writ Petition No. 293 of 2003 wherein the Executive Magistrate has specified that in order to keep peace and tranquility in village Kamunja, as there was probable and imminent danger of likelihood of breach of peace due to the rival claim and possession over the mosque Madarsa of Kamunja between two sect of Muslim namely 'Sunni' and 'Tablig', and hence such an order was required to be passed.

14. In reference to the grievance made by the Petitioner' Advocate Shri R.S.Nayak in Criminal Writ Petition No. 428 of 2002 an enquiry was conducted according to order passed by this Court by the Joint Commissioner of Police wherein the petitioner as well as his client was examined and the enquiry report dated 29/1/2003 came to be submitted to the court does prima facie makes out a case in favour of petitioner except for the issue of demand of bribe of Rs. 2000/-by the A.C.P. through his staff police constable Mr.Karade. Mr.B.T. Nighinglova, Joint Commissioner of Police, Nagpur in his report itself has mentioned that the concerned A.C.P. who was conferred with the powers of Executive Magistrate Kotwali Division has been transferred and so also his staff and all the ACPs in charge of the Division, who are conferred and vested with powers of Executive Magistrate under the Commissionerate are instructed to strictly adhere to provisions of Chapter VIII of Code. The Respondent/State was kind enough to immediately respond to the interim orders passed by this Court from time to time and also filed affidavit of the then principal Secretary (Spl.), Government of Maharashtra, Home Department that they would streamline the procedure and exercise of powers by the Executive Magistrate and special Executive Magistrate under Chapter VIII of the code. But as suggested by this Court in the case of Surendra v. State of Maharashtra and Ors. 2001 (4) Mh.L.J.601, the Government is, however, of the opinion that considering the present scenario and the law and order situation it may not be feasible to revert back to the 1980's position and entrust this powers to judicial magistrate. The State has also, in the affidavit filed by the then Commissioner of Police Shri Jayant Umaranikar referred to the Circular dated 28th April, 2003 which provides for guidelines to the Executive Magistrate and Special Executive Magistrate while dealing with Chapter Case i.e. proceedings under Chapter VIII of the Code so as not to violate fundamental rights of citizens as enshrined under Article 21 of the Constitution of India. The same has been reiterated by the subsequent affidavit filed by the present Commissioner of Police. This court has been assured that in future the proceedings under Chapter VIII of the Code would be conducted in proper order. Respondent No. 2/The Commissioner of Police in his affidavit dated 22/3/2006 has also taken cognizance of the fact that the office of the Special Executive Magistrate and Executive Magistrate functioned till late hours in night and has noted that said officer would function in accordance with the guidelines issued by the Government of Maharashtra vide Circular dated 28/4/2003 and those instructions have been issued to all the ACPs vide Circular dated 20/3/2006 to conduct and hold their courts only during working hours and further to take prior permission from concerned Zonal Deputy Commissioner of Police, if there is any urgent case to be dealt with after working hours and in that case subsequently send the report to the Commissioner of Police stating the reason holding proceedings after office hours (the said circular is annexed as Annexure R-2). In view of the fact that the commitment made by the Commissioner of Police in his affidavit dated 22/3/2006 is on solemn affirmation, we accept it as an undertaking given to this Court and make it clear that in future if any violation of the undertaking takes place, this Court would take serious cognizance of such breach in addition to directing the State to initiate appropriate action against the persons found guilty of misuse of the powers vested in them under Chapter VIII of the Code.

15. We only propose to forewarn Police Offices vested with powers under Chapter VIII of the Code that they should also remember that the party against whom proceedings are initiated under Chapter VIII of the Code is entitled to forthwith receive copy of the order which may result in curtailing their liberty before they are remanded to judicial custody, either for their failure to execute necessary bond with or without sureties or at the conclusion of the proceedings, as it has come to our notice, on going through the present state of affairs in the office of Special Executive Magistrate Kotwali Division, that the staff functioning in the office of Special Executive Magistrate, Kotwali Division are careless in issuing certified copy of such orders which are amenable to revisional, appellate and writ jurisdiction of the courts and though such orders as a matter of practice are in printed forms depriving a person of certified copy of such orders, is nothing but an attempt on the part of the court of Special Executive Magistrate and its staff to deprive them of procedural justice.

16. By way of illustration, proceedings initiated by Shri Dhamke the present Special Executive Magistrate against one Pramod Dinakrrao Samarth vide Chapter Proceedings No.

64 of 2006 and interim order under Section 116(3) of the code was placed on record. It came to be passed in a proceedings initiated under Section 110 of the Code, which are all in printed form, clearly indicating that the orders under Section 111 of the Code as well as 116(3) of the Code have been passed by the Special Executive Magistrate without application of mind, as the proceedings initiated under Section 110 of the Code is not maintainable against said Pramod Dinkarrao Samarth for the simple reason that it does not confirm and meet the requirements of Section 110 of the Code. It is in this proceedings that an application for grant of certified copy was made by the counsel for the accused on 22/3/2006 and there is an endorsement from the office of Special Executive Magistrate, Kotwali Division, Nagpur that copies would be delivered within three days. Such practice deserves to be highly deprecated.

17. Assistant Commissioner of Police Shri Dhamke, who is the Special Executive Magistrate of Kotwali Division was personally present in the court and the learned Additional Public Prosecutor Smt.Neeta Jog on seeking instructions from him assured this Court that he will forthwith discontinue this practice of passing orders in printed form and further assured the court that certified copies of the order would be forthwith furnished to the person or his Advocate, who are appearing in his court and in future he will take all the necessary precautions to see that there is no violation of any right statutory or procedural of a citizen who is facing any proceedings in his court. We hope that such assurance given to the court would be followed in letter and spirit not only the by the Special Executive Magistrate of Kotwali Division but all divisions in the city of Nagpur so that miscarriage of justice is avoided and persons are not left at the mercy of the whims and caprice of the Police Officers, who are conducting chapter proceedings as Special Executive Magistrates.

18. In so far as grievance of Advocate Mr.Nayak is concerned, we have taken serious note of the same. We would like to bring it to the notice of the State the concept, object and scope of life and personal liberty as enshrined in Article 21 of the Constitution of India by quoting the observation of Shri K.Ramaswamy, J. in the case of Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, . His Lordship while dealing with the constitutional validity of the draconian law i.e. Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act, 1987 observed as under - .The right to life with human dignity of person is a fundamental right of every citizen for pursuit of happiness and excellence. Personal freedom is a basic condition for full development of human personality. Article 21 of the Constitution protects right to life which is the most precious right in a civilised society. The trinity i.e. liberty, equality and fraternity always blossoms and enlivens the flower of human dignity. One of the gifts of democracy to mankind is the right to personal liberty. Life and personal freedom are the prized jewels under Article 19 conjointly assured by Arts. 20(3), 21 and 22 of the Constitution and Article 19 ensures freedom of movement. Liberty aims at freedom not only from arbitrary restraint but also to secure such conditions which are essential for the full development of human personality. Liberty is the essential concomitant for other rights without which a man cannot be at his best. The essence of all civil liberties is to keep alive the freedom of the individual subject to the limitations of social control envisaged in diverse articles in the chapter of Fundamental Rights Part III in harmony with social good envisaged in the Directive Principles in Part IV of the Constitution. Freedom cannot last long unless it is coupled with order. Freedom can never exist without order. Freedom and order may coexist. It is essential that freedom should be exercised under authority and order should be enforced by authority which is vested solely in the executive. Fundamental rights are the means and the directive principles are essential ends in a welfare state. The evolution of the State from Police State to a Welfare State is the ultimate measure and accepted standard of democratic society which is an avowed constitutional mandate. Though one of the main functions of the democratic Government is to safeguard liberty of the individual, unless its exercise is subject to social control, it becomes anti-social or undermines the security of the State. The Indian democracy wedded to rule of law aims not only to protect the fundamental rights of its citizens but also to establish an egalitarian social order. The individual has to grow within the social confines preventing his unsocial or unbridled growth which could be done by reconciling individual liberty with social control. Liberty must be controlled in the interest of the society but the social interest must never be overbearing to justify total deprivation of individual liberty. Liberty cannot stand alone but must be paired with a companion virtue; virtue and morality; liberty and law; liberty and justice; liberty and common good; liberty and responsibility which are concomitants for orderly progress and social stability. Man being a rationale individual has to live in harmony with equal rights of others and more differently for the attainment of antithetic desires. This intertwined network is difficult to delineate within defined spheres of conduct within which freedom of action may be confined. Therefore, liberty would not always be an absolute licence but must arm itself within the confines of law. In other words there can be no liberty without social restraint. Liberty, therefore, as a social conception is a right to be assured to all members of a society. Unless restraint is enforced on and accepted by all members of the society, the liberty of some must involve the oppression of others. If liberty be regarded a social order, the problem of establishing liberty must be a problem of organising restraint which society controls over the individual. Therefore, liberty of each citizen is borne of and must be subordinated to the liberty of the greatest number, in other words common happiness as an end of the society, lest lawlessness and anarchy will tamper social weal and harmony and powerful courses or forces would be at work to determine social welfare and order. Thus, the essence of civil liberty is to keep alive the freedom of the individual subject to the limitation of social control which could be adjusted according to the needs of the dynamic social evolution. The modern social evolution is the growing need to keep individual to be as free as possible, consistent with his correlative obligation to the society. According to Dr. Ambedkar in his closing speech in the Constituent Assembly, the principles of liberty, equality and fraternity are not to be treated as separate entities but in a trinity. They form the union or trinity in the sense that to divorce one from the other is to defeat the very purpose of democracy. Liberty cannot be divorced from equality. Equality cannot be divorced by liberty. Nor can equality and liberty be divorced from fraternity. Without equality, liberty would not produce supremacy of law. Equality without liberty would kill individual initiative. Without fraternity, liberty and equality would not become a natural course of things. Courts, as sentinel on the qui vive, therefore must strike a balance between the changing needs o the society for peaceful transformation with orders and protection of the rights of the citizen. One of the functions of the State is to maintain peace and order in the society. As its part, State is not only the prosecutor of the offender but also the investigator of crime. To facilitate such investigation police has been given wide powers to arrest the suspect without warrant, interrogate him in custody search and seize incriminating material, to collect the evidence and to prosecute the offender. Deprivation of dignity of person, self-respect and inviolable right to life, would only be within the prescribed limits set down by laws; assiduously supervised by courts; and executive excesses strictly be limited. Excessive authority without liberty is intolerable. Equally excessive liberty without authority and without responsibility soon becomes intolerable. Lest the freedoms and fundamental rights become sacrificial objects at the altar of expediency. Unrestricted liberty makes life too easy for criminal and too difficult for law-abiding citizens. In a free society too many crooks blatantly break the law, blight young lives, traffic in drugs and freely indulge in smuggling and claim fundamental rights to exploit weak links of law, indulge in violence and commercial camouflage. Our values are drastically eroded because many a man with no more moral backbone than a chocolate eclair claim the freedom and free action which results inevitably in increasing the members of violent criminals. In the midst of clash of interest, the individual interest would be subservient to social interest, yet so long as jubi jus, ibi remedium is available the procedure prescribed and the actions taken thereon by then law-enforcement authority must be the test of the constitutional mandates.

19. We hope this is sufficient to remind the State of the sacrosanct fundamental rights particularly under Article 21 of Constitution of India and that it will take all steps to protect it and would take all necessary preventive steps so that life and personal liberty of a citizen is not trampled by the Police Officers, who are vested with powers of Special Executive Magistrate/Executive Magistrate to conduct proceedings under Chapter VIII of the Code. Further, we may add the observations of Hidayatullah, J in respect of another right vested in a citizen under Article 22(1) of the Constitution of India by quoting His Lordship's observation in the case of State of M.P. v. Shobharam, wherein His Lordship has observed -

When our Constitution lays down in absolute terms a right to be defended by one's own counsel, it cannot be taken away by ordinary law and it is not sufficient to say that the accused who was so deprived of this right, did not stand in danger of losing his personal liberty. If he was exposed to penalty, he had a right to be defended by counsel. If this were not so then instead of providing for punishment of imprisonment, penal laws might provide for unlimited fines and it would be easy to leave the man free but a pauper. And to this end without a right to be defended by counsel. If this proposition were accepted as true we might be in the Middle Age. The Criminal Procedure Code allows the right to be defended by Counsel but that is not a guaranteed right. The framers of the constitution have well thought of this right and by including the prescription in the Constitution have put it beyond the power of any authority to alter it without the Constitution being altered. A law which provides differently must necessarily be obnoxious to the guarantee of the Constitution. There is nothing in the worth of the Constitution which permits any authority to alter this condition even on grounds of public interest as is the case with the guaranteed rights in Article 19. Not by a niggling argument be lessened the force of the declaration so explicit in its terms or whittle down its meaning by a specious attempt at supposed harmony between rights which are not interdependent. There are three rights and each stands by itself. The first is the right to be told the reason of the arrest as soon as an arrest is made, the second is the right to be produced before a Magistrate within twenty-four hours and the third is the right to be defended by a lawyer of one's choice. In addition there is the declaration that no person shall be deprived of his personal liberty except by procedure established by law. The declaration is general and insists on legality of the action. The rights given by Article 22(1) and 20 are absolute in themselves and do not depend on other laws. There is no force in the submission that if there is only a punishment of fine and there is no danger to personal liberty the protection of Article 22(1) is not available. Personal liberty is invaded by arrest and continues to be restrained during the period a person is on bail and it matters not whether there is or is not a possibility of imprisonment. A person arrested and put on his defence against a criminal charge, which may result in penalty, is entitled to the right to defend himself with the aid of counsel and any law that take away this right offends against the Constitution."

20. Advocate Mr.Nayak's grievance as highlighted in his petition is that his client was discouraged and deprived from engaging legal practitioner of his choice from appearing before the court of Special Executive Magistrate, Kotwali Division is a clear cut breach of Article 22(1) of the Constitution of India. The State and its functionaries should learn to respect an Advocate who represents his client to seek justice for him and to assist the Court in dispensing justice. If the courts of Special Executive Magistrate and its staff finds it inconvenient, if a person engages a legal practitioner of his choice, may be for various reasons and one of them which is spelt out in the petition i.e. to come in the way of the court and its staff extorting money from a person against whom proceedings are initiated, it not only obstructs the course of justice but also pollutes the same and is nothing short of contempt of court. In the enquiry conducted by Joint Commissioner of Police, as per report the Special Executive Magistrate and its staff stands exonerated of the allegations of extortion of money though the evidence given by Advocate Nayak and his client confirms to the allegations made in the petition that a sum of Rs. 2000/-were demanded from client of Advocate Nayak to settle the case rather than contest the proceedings initiated by him by engaging legal practitioner of his choice which was his legal right. The report cuts a very sorry figure in the manner in which proceedings are conducted in the court of Special Executive Magistrate. We are conscious of the fact that it is very difficult to prove these allegations but it is equally true that such allegations cannot be said to be unfounded.

21. Taking into consideration that the State and the Commissioner of Police has assured this Court that in future such occasion would not arise and they have taken necessary steps to prevent such practices, we find that almost all the prayers made by the petitioners are complied with and so far as claim of compensation made by the petitioner for the ill-treatment meted out to him by respondent No. 3 it can be left open and if the petitioner feels it proper, he may take appropriate steps, as observed by this Court in the case of Deelip Bhikaji v. State of Maharashtra and Ors. 2003(2) Mh.L.J.629.

22. In so far as the reliefs claimed in Criminal Writ Petition No. 293 of 2003 are concerned, the petitioners had already approached the court of Chief Judicial Magistrate, Amravati under Section 123(2) and (3) of Criminal Procedure Code which granted them relief of reducing the quantum of bond from Rs. 25000/-to Rs. 15000/-, probably by this time the proceedings must have come to an end and, therefore, the petition has become infructuous. Therefore, in our view no relief can be granted as sought for. These two petitions , therefore, stand disposed of. Rule is made absolute accordingly.

Cr. P.C. – Section 107 – Condition imposed by Magistrate that the sureties must be from particular faith/community and well educated is arbitrary – Proceedings quashed

JUDGMENT

1. Rule. - Respondent waives service. By consent Rule made returnable and heard forthwith.

2. The Petitioner in the present case has challenged a part of the show cause notice dated 10th October, 1998 wherein the Petitioner has been called upon to furnish two sureties of respectable people from the locality. The further condition imposed is that the sureties must be well educated citizens, one practicing the Hindu faith and the other Muslim. The third condition is that the sureties must be from the same locality and the fourth that they are well educated.

It is the contention of the Petitioner that the order of the Special Executive Magistrate imposing conditions calling on the Petitioner to furnish sureties of well educated persons, one practicing the Hindu faith and the other Muslim is not sustainable. Such an order it is pointed out would be contrary to and in violation of Articles 14 and 21 of the Constitution of India. Article 21 sets out that no person shall be deprived of his life or personal liberty except according to the procedure, established by law. It is therefore, contended that by imposing a condition as imposed by the learned Special Executive Magistrate the Petitioner's personal liberty is violated under Article 21 apart from action of the Magistrate being arbitrary in as much as it is volatile of Article 14 of the Constitution of India.

3. Learned Additional Public Prosecutor on behalf of the State points out that the area is a communally sensitive area and therefore the actions of the Magistrate are bona fide taking into consideration the situation in the locality. It is, therefore, contended that this cannot be said to be an arbitrary or capricious exercise of power. Such a condition it is contended will not be violative of Article 14 nor for that matter will offend Article 21 of the Constitution of India.

4. One of the conditions imposed by the impugned order requires the Petitioner herein to furnish sureties one each from a person practicing the Hindu and Muslim faith respectively. In other words, the sureties are identified based on their religion. The other condition is that the person must be respectable. The third condition is that the persons must be well educated and the fourth is that they should be from the same locality.

In so far as the condition that the sureties must be respectable people the condition perhaps cannot be faulted as the whole purpose is to maintain peace in the area. It is true that the perception as to who is respectable may change from person to person. Generally speaking a person from the locality, normally not involved in offences involving moral turpitude or for that matter other such offences which may attract provisions of the Indian Penal Code or any special legislation excluding acts where a person is charged for bona fide political activities or like manner. This requirement, therefore, by the Magistrate that the sureties must be respectable persons cannot be found fault with if this broader aspect of the expression is understood.

Similarly, will be the case of the requirement that sureties must be from the same locality. It is true that Krishna Iyer, J. in matters of bail application has held that it is not a requirement that sureties in so far as the bail is concerned, must be from the same locality. Many a time it may be impossible for a person arrested in a particular case if he does not have roots in that community or place to furnish surety from the said place. In the instant case, however, sureties have been called upon from the Petitioner for the purpose of securing peace in the area. In other words, the man is from the locality. It is under these circumstances that the condition of person being from the locality has to be understood. I, therefore, can find no exception in the said condition.

5. That leaves us with two other conditions imposed viz. that sureties must be persons belonging to particular religious faiths and well educated persons. It is the basic principle of our Constitution that there can be no discrimination. Classification is however possible provided it has reasonable nexus with the object to be achieved. In the instant case the object is to maintain peace in a communally sensitive area. Can communal peace be maintained only if sureties are people professing two different faiths. Can sureties be classified based on the religion they profess. The Constitution in respect of certain matters has recognized and granted special protection to religious and linguistic minorities pertaining to their religious beliefs and/or setting up and establishing educational institutions or in matters of their language. Apart from that is it possible to classify the citizens of this country based on their religious group to maintain peace and order. That would be against the very basic philosophy of our Constitution which recognize only citizens of India. Classification based on faith to promote the objective of achieving peace may be laudable but in the end self defeating. What happens say if in a communally tense area people professing one religion do not come forward as sureties for a person professing a faith different from them and unfortunately in the present scenario this cannot be ruled out. Does this mean that their freedom is dependent on the faith they profess. This will be totally repugnant to the secular character of our Constitution. Article 15 of the Constitution, sets out that the State shall not discriminate against any citizen on ground only on religion, caste, sex or place of birth or any of them. This is an indication that citizens cannot be discriminated based on their faith, though Article 15 is based on different precept.

6. The notice has been issued under Section 107. The conditions imposed by the notice must therefore satisfy the requirement of Article 14 i.e. that it is not arbitrary in other words should not be against our constitutional philosophy and such a condition should not be violative of a citizen's right to life and liberty granted by Article 21 of the Constitution. Liberty of an individual can only be restricted or affected by due process of law. In the instant case, the due process of law could be by issuance of notice under Section 107. However, the conditions in the notice must be non-arbitrary and non-discriminatory. A condition that sureties must be from two different religion denominations would clearly be arbitrary. This is nothing but a hangover of the colonial past. It is not in consonance with the Constitution which we gave to ourselves nor in consonance with the constitutional spirit as reflected in the preamble to the Constitution of India. The condition, therefore, is clearly arbitrary.

7. The other condition is that sureties must be well educated citizen. National statistics on education itself reveals as to what is the percentage of citizens of this country who are educated, and where not even 50% of our citizens have had access to primary education. What the Magistrate requires is a well educated citizen. What happens to the liberty of a citizen if only few available in the area for some personal reasons do not want to offer themselves as sureties. Must the life and liberty of citizens depend on the whims and fancies of well educated citizens. Even otherwise how is the object of maintaining peace, achieved by such a condition. Where in history or experience is there support for such a proposition that a citizen with a good education is necessarily a good citizen. What is well educated has also not been defined. Is it the requirement that the person must be a graduate, double graduate or holding a doctorate. Such a condition therefore is also clearly arbitrary.

8. In the light of that the following order:

(1) Condition that sureties must be from particular faith is arbitrary.

(2) Condition that the sureties must be well educated is also arbitrary.

(3) In the light of the above conditions in the show cause notice dated 10th October, 1998 are quashed and set aside…Rule made absolute in the aforesaid terms. In the circumstances of the case, there shall be no order as to costs.

U.S. 151 of cri. P.C. under directions of S.P Wardha Smt. Nilesh C. Ojha National President of Manav Adhikar Suraksha Parishad – Commission accepted the contention of the petitioner and directed Home secretary to take action against Smt. Ashwati Dorje, S.P. Wardha Shri. Deepak Karande, Tahsildar, Wardha and Shri V.D. Boite Jail Supreintendant, Wardha. The petitioner filed Writ petition challenging the legality of the order - It has been held by High court that the order is legal and does not require interference.

JUDGEMENT

(1.) Heard learned counsel for the petitioner. The petitioner has challenged order of the Maharashtra State Human Rights Commission, Mumbai recommending that the disciplinary authority shall hold Departmental Enquiry into conduct of the petitioner and two others, in accordance with law, and complete the same as early as possible and preferably within three months. The learned counsel for the petitioner submitted that the order of the State Human Rights Commission is vitiated since admittedly, as recorded by the Commission itself, the petitioner was not heard. Learned counsel for the petitioner further submits that the Commission was bound to hear the petitioner before directing the initiation of enquiry since the proceedings before the Commission are judicial proceedings.

(2.) The Maharashtra State Human Rights Commission (hereinafter referred to as "the Commission") took cognizance of the complaint of one Nilesh Ojha, President of Mahav Adhikar Suraksha Parishad, Pusad, who complained about the custodial death of one Shankar Ghume, at Wardha District Prison while in illegal detention due to the negligence of three officers of the Police including the petitioner. It is not necessary to go into the details of the custodial death except to observe that the Commission found, after hearing the Collector, Superintendent of Police and Superintendent, District Prison, Wardha that many questions arise regarding action of the police and the Jail authority and that the police should have exercised their discretion to release the deceased on bail, which was granted to him by the Court. The Commission has observed that it is reasonable to believe that the petitioner mechanically passed the order under Section 151 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and illegally refused the bail. However, without giving any finding whether the petitioner and other Police officers are indeed responsible for the custodial death, the Commission found it appropriate to direct that an enquiry should be held against them in connection with the custodial death in the light of its observations, particularly since the officers, including the petitioner, have not been heard.

(3.) Having heard the matter, there is no reason for us to hold that the order of the Commission directing the disciplinary authority to enquire into the conduct of the petitioner is vitiated only because the petitioner was not heard. Section 18 of the Protection of Human Rights Act, 1993, which is relevant, reads as follows.

"18. Steps during and after inquiry.- The Commission may take any of the following steps during or upon the completion of an inquiry held under this Act, namely:- (a) where the inquiry discloses the commission of violation of human rights or negligence in the prevention of violation of human rights or abetment thereof by a public servant, it may recommend to the concerned Government or authority - (i) to make payment of compensation or damages to the complainant or to the victim or the members of his family as the Commission may consider necessary; (ii) to initiate proceedings for prosecution or such other suitable action as the Commission may deem fit against the concerned person or persons; (iii) to take such further action as it may think fit; (b) approach the Supreme Court or the High Court concerned for such directions, orders or writs as the Court may deem necessary; (c) recommend to the concerned Government or authority at any stage of the inquiry for the grant of such immediate interim relief to the victim or the members of his family as the Commission may consider necessary; (d) subject to the provisions of clause (e), provide a copy of the inquiry report to the petitioner or his representative; (e) the Commission shall send a copy of its inquiry report together with the recommendations to the concerned Government or authority and the concerned Government or authority shall, within a period of one month, or such further time as the Commission may allow, forward its comments on the report, including the action taken or proposed to be taken thereon, to the Commission; (f) the Commission shall publish its inquiry report together with the comments of the concerned Government or authority, if any, and the action taken or proposed to be taken by the concerned Government or authority on the recommendations of the Commission."

It is obvious from Sub-Section (ii) above that upon completion of the enquiry before the Commission, which in this case has undoubtedly been completed, the Commission has discretion to recommend the Government or the concerned authority for prosecution or such other action as the Commission may deem fit. The words "such other suitable action" in (a) (ii) above, would clearly cover the holding of Departmental Enquiry.

(4.) The order of the State Human Rights Commission does not hold the petitioner guilty of custodial death but merely directs an enquiry into the matter. In this view of the matter, we see no reason to interfere with the impugned order. The writ petition is, therefore, dismissed. No order as to costs.

JUDGEMENT

(1.) RULE. Learned APP waives service for respondents. Taken up for hearing.

(2.) THE challenge in this petition under Article 227 of the Constitution of india and section 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 (hereinafter referred to as "the said Code") is to a show cause notice issued by the second respondent in purported exercise of power under section 111 of the said Code. By the said notice, the petitioner has been called upon to show cause as to why proceedings in accordance with section 110 (e), (g) of the said Code should not be initiated and the petitioner should not be directed to furnish bond in the sum of rs. 10,000/ -. By the said notice the petitioner was also called upon to show cause as to why interim bond should not be taken from him pending the proceedings.

(3.) THE submission of the learned counsel appearing for the petitioner was that an order under section 111 of the said Code has not been passed which is a condition precedent for initiating an action. Therefore, I had called upon the learned APP to produce the record of the chapter proceedings. Accordingly, the record has been produced. The record shows that a proposal for initiating the proceedings under Chapter-VIII of the said Code was submitted by the Senior inspector of Police of Worli Police Station, Mumbai. On the said proposal there is a short and cryptic order passed by the second respondent running into six lines. The order merely states that on perusal of the papers received from the senior Inspector of Police, he is satisfied that in future there is likely to a breach of peace on account of the activities of the petitioner and, therefore, it is necessary to take bond from the petitioner.

(4.) THE learned APP on instructions of the second respondent submitted that what has been issued to the petitioner is only a show cause notice and it is not a summons issued under section 113 of the said Code and, therefore, it was not necessary to pass an order under section 111 of the said Code.

(5.) WITH a view to appreciate the aforesaid submission of the learned APP, it will be necessary to refer to the relevant provisions of Chapter-VII of the said code. Section 110 empowers an Executive Magistrate to require a person against whom allegations mentioned in clauses (a) to (g) are attracted, to show cause as to why he should not be ordered to execute a bond with sureties for his good behaviour for such period not exceeding three years, as the Magistrate thinks fit. It must be stated here that the section specifically states that "such Magistrate may, in the manner hereinafter provided, require such person to show cause". Thus, the procedure to be followed is provided in subsequent sections. The procedure to be followed before requiring a person to show cause has been incorporated in section 111 onwards of the said Chapter VIII. Section 111 reads thus:-

"111. When a Magistrate acting under section 107, section 108, section 109 or section 110, deems it necessary to require any person to show cause under such section, he shall make an order in writing, setting forth the substance of the information received, the amount of the bond to be executed, the term for which it is to be in force, and the number, character and class of sureties (if any) required. "

Therefore, the condition precedent before an Executive Magistrate requires any person to show cause under section 110 is that he is required to make an order in writing setting forth the substance of the information received, the amount of bond to be executed and it's term. Therefore, on plain reading of sections 110 and 111 of the said Code, it is obvious that before an Executive Magistrate calls upon a person to show cause as to why he should not be ordered to execute a bond, as a condition precedent, the Magistrate is required to pass an order under section 111 of the said Code. Section 112 states that if the person in respect of whom such an order under section 111 is made is present, the Magistrate shall read over the said order to him and if he so desires the substance thereof shall be explained to him. If such person is not present, the Magistrate is required to issue a summons or a warrant as provided under section 113 of the said Code. If summons or warrant is issued, section 114 mandates that a copy of the order passed under section 111 shall be accompanied with the summons or warrant.

(6.) LA the present case, the proposal was submitted by the Senior Inspector of Police on 31st December, 2008 and a cryptic order on the said proposal has been passed on the same day. The proceedings were initiated on the same day i. e. on 31st December 2008. The Roznama of the proceedings shows that on that day the petitioner was not present before the learned Magistrate. Therefore, the learned Magistrate was under an obligation to issue a summons as required by section 113 enclosing therewith an order passed under section 111 of the said code. The order passed by the learned Magistrate below the proposal submitted by the Senior Inspector of Police does not set forth the substance of the information received. The said order which is a cryptic order running only in six lines by no stretch of imagination can be read as an order validly made under section 111 of the said Code. Thus, this is a case where an order purportedly passed under section 111 of the said Code is illegal and therefore, the very initiation of the proceedings is illegal. Moreover, a summons enclosing the said order was not issued to the petitioner.

(7.) THIS aspect that the initiation of the proceedings was itself illegal was noticed by this Court yesterday when the file of the proceedings was perused by this Court. This aspect was brought to the notice of the learned APP by this Court with a hope that the show cause notice will be withdrawn by the concerned officer. However, the show cause notice has not been withdrawn.

(8.) THE illegality committed by respondent No. 2 does not rest here. The roznama of the proceedings shows that the returnable date of the show cause notice was 5th January, 2009. The Roznama records that on that day an advocate filed Vakalatnama on behalf of the petitioner. The Roznama records that the show cause notice was read over to the petitioner. The Roznama further records that the petitioner was called upon to fill in a questionnaire. The Roznama further records that the petitioner was directed to furnish an interim bond. It is stated that at that stage the advocate for the petitioner pointed out to the learned Magistrate that such an order cannot be passed in view of the decisions of higher Courts. Therefore, time was granted to produce the decisions. Thereafter, the matter was adjourned from time to time as this petition was pending before this Court. Nevertheless, the Roznama dated 5th January, 2009 records a direction was issued by the Executive Magistrate to the petitioner to furnish an interim bond. Under sub-section (3) of section 116 of the Code, the Magistrate is empowered to direct a person to furnish an interim bond. However, sub-section (3) of section 116 provides that the said power of directing a person to furnish interim bond can be exercised if the learned Magistrate considers that immediate measures are necessary for prevention of breach of peace or disturbance of public tranquility or commission of any offence. Sub-section (3) of section 116 specifically requires that the learned Magistrate is required to record reasons in writing for directing a party to furnish an interim bond. A perusal of the Roznama shows that no reasons were assigned by the learned Magistrate and it is merely stated in the Roznama that the petitioner was called upon to furnish an interim bond.

(9.) THE perusal of the file shows that the express statutory provisions are completely ignored by the learned Magistrate and the entire proceedings have been conducted contrary to the provisions of the said Code. Therefore, the only option left for this Court is to quash and set aside the impugned notice and all further proceedings initiated on the basis of said show cause notice.

(10.) HENCE, I pass following order :-

(a) Rule is made absolute in terms of prayer clause (b); (b) All further proceedings on the basis of impugned notice are quashed and set aside. Order accordingly.

Cr. P.C. – Section 107 – Interim bond – Held in proceedings u.s. 107 there can be no insistence to execute a interim bond – Order illegal – Liable to be quashed.

JUDGEMENT

(1.) SINCE common questions of law and facts arise in both these petitions, they were heard together and are being disposed of by this common order.

(2.) HEARD. Rule. By consent, the rule is made returnable forthwith.

(3.) THE petitioners challenge the impugned order passed by the authorities below in the proceedings under section 111 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 for execution of the interim bonds and further for quashing of such bonds obtained upon passing of such orders. The reliance is placed in that regard in the decision of the learned Single Judge of this Court in The State of Maharashtra and anr. vs. Mangali Dewaivva Pupalla, reported in 1994 (1) Mh. L.J.. 483 = 1993 (1) Bom. C. R. 115 as also the decision of the Apex Court in the matter of madhu Limaye and anr. vs. Sub Divisional Magistrate. Monghvr and ors. , reported in 1971 Cri. L.J.. 1720.

(4.) IT is not in dispute that pursuant to the issuance of and service of the show cause notices dated 16th August, 2004 under section 107 of the Code of Criminal procedure, 1973, the respondents insisted for execution of the interim bonds and obtained the same on the very day i. e. on 16th August, 2004 itself allegedly for the purpose of maintaining peace in the locality under section 116 (3) of the Code of criminal Procedure, during the pendency of the proceedings.

(5.) THE provisions of law comprised under section 116 (3) of the Code of criminal Procedure clearly read thus :

"116 (3) After the commencement, and before the completion of the inquiry under sub-section (1), the Magistrate, if he considers that immediate measures are necessary of the prevention ot a breach of the peace or disturbance of the public tranquility or the commission of any offence of for the public safety, may, for reasons to be record in writing, direct the person in respect of whom the order under section 111 has been made to execute a bond, with or without sureties, for keeping the peace or maintaining good behaviour until the conclusion of the inquiry, and may detain him in custody until such bond is executed or, in default of execution, until the inquiry is concluded : provided that (a) no person against whom proceedings are not being taken under section 108, section 109 or section 110 shall be directed to execute a bond for maintaining good behaviour; (b) the condition of such bond, whether as to the amount thereof or as to the provision of sureties or the number thereof or the pecuniary extent of their liability, shall not be more onerous than those specified in the order under section 111.

(6.) APPARENTLY, the proviso (a) to Sub-section (3) of section 116 of the Code of Criminal Procedure clearly provides that the interim bond cannot be insisted upon in the proceedings other than those under sections 108, 109 and 110. Admittedly, in the matter in hand, the proceedings were initiated consequent to the allegations against the petitioners of likelihood of breach of peace and the act on the part of the petitioners. Obviously, therefore, those proceedings are in terms of section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Being so, considering the provisions of law comprised under the proviso (a) to sub-section (3) of section 116 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the respondents could not have insisted for execution of the interim bonds by the petitioners in the proceedings initiated against them. On that count itself, the orders directing the petitioners to execute interim bonds and further the interim bonds obtained consequently from the petitioners are liable to be quashed.

(7.) THE learned Single Judge of this Court while dealing with the similar issue had held that "the correct interpretation of Clause (a) of the proviso to subsection (3) of section 116 of the Code is that the power of the Magistrate to direct a person to execute a Bond for keeping the peace or maintaining of good behaviour until the conclusion of the inquiry is restricted only to cases arising under sections 108, 109 or 110 of the Code. " We are in respectful agreement with the said ruling of the learned Single Judge in the matter of Mangali Dewaivva pupalla's case (supra). Being so, the impugned orders directing the petitioners to execute interim bonds are liable to be set aside and the interim bonds obtained from the petitioners are liable to be quashed.

(8.) AS regards the grievance of the petitioners for quashing and setting aside the impugned notices under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the learned Advocate for the petitioners fairly submitted that if the petitioners are given sufficient time to file necessary reply to the said notices, the petitioners would file the same before the authorities below, while reserving the petitioners' right to approach this Court in case any final order to be passed happens to be contrary to the interest of the petitioners.

(9.) IN the result, therefore, the petitions succeed. The impugned orders dated 16th August, 2004 directing the petitioners to execute interim bonds and further the interim bonds obtained from the petitioners are hereby quashed and set aside. The petitioners to file reply to the said impugned notices dated 16th August, 2004 within a period of two weeks from today to the concerned authorities and the concerned authorities, after hearing the petitioners, to pass an appropriate order in accordance with the provisions of law. The rule is made absolute accordingly with no order as to costs. It is made clear that this Court has not expressed any opinion on the merits of the case. Petition allowed.

Cr. P.c. S. 110 – Police has no power to arrest a persion against whom proceeding u.s. 110 is initiated – The Magistrate if thinks proper can issue a production warrant – Similarly the action of the Magistrate in calling upon the peititioner to execute a bond even though the enquiry had not commenced is without jurisdiction.

(1.) This is an application under Section 482, Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 (hereinafter referred to as the "Cr. P.C.") to release the delinquent who is being proceeded against in a proceeding under Section 110, Cr. P.C., now pending in the Court of the Executive Magistrate, Cuttack, in Criminal Misc. Case No. 709/98.

(2.) In the present order I shall only deal with the action of the police and the magistrate in arresting the petitioner and keeping him under detention until such petitioner was released on bail under orders of this Court.

(3.) It appears that the proceeding under Section 110, Cr. P.C. was initiated on the basis of Non-F.I.R. No. 76/98 submitted by the Officer-in-Charge of Cantonment Police Station. It appears that the petitioner was arrested by the I.I.C., Cantonment P.S. and produced along with the Non-F.I.R. No. 76/98 on 17-8-1998 before the Executive Magistrate, Cuttack, who passed the following order :-

"17-8-98. Delinquent Sk. Janu alias Abdul Naim, S/O Abdul Alim of Pension Lane, P.S. Cantonment, Dist-Cuttack produced from Police custody being arrested by I.I.C. Cantonment P.S. Non-F.I.R. No. 76/98 u/S. 110, Cr. P.C. He complains no ill-treatment by the Police. The substance of the P.R. are read over and explained to the delinquent and he is called upon to show cause why he should not execute a bond of Rs. 15,000/- with two local satisfactory sureties for the like amount to be of good behaviour for a period of six months. But the allegation is derived,. Delinquent neither prays to release him good behaviour no interim bond. Hence he is remanded to jail custody till 1-9-98. Later - Advocate J. Pal and others appear for the delinquent. Put up on date fixed."

(4.) The question arises whether the police had the power to arrest the petitioner while initiating the proceeding under Section 110, Cr.P.C. and further as to whether the Executive Magistrate had the power to detain the petitioner in jail custody. For the aforesaid purpose, it is necessary to notice the relevant provisions of the Cr.P.C.

(5.) Chapter-VIII of the Code of Criminal Procedure contains several provisions relating to security for keeping the peace and for good behaviour. Section 106 relates to security for keeping the peace on conviction. Section 107 relates to security for keeping the peace in other cases, namely, where the Magistrate receives information that any person is likely to commit breach of the peace, or disturb the public tranquillity, or do any wrongful act which may occasion a breach of the peace and disturb the public tranquillity. Section 108 relates to security for good behaviour from persons disseminating seditious matters and

Section 109 relates to security for good behaviour from suspected persons. Admittedly, Sections 106 to 109 are not applicable. As a matter of fact, the police and the Magistrate have purported to proceed under Section 110. As per the provision of Section 110, Cr. P.C., if the Executive magistrate receives information that there is a person within his jurisdiction who comes within the purview of the various clauses, namely clauses (a) to (g) indicated in Section 110, "the Magistrate may, in the manner hereinafter provided, require such person to show cause why he should not be ordered to execute a bond, with sureties, for his good behaviour for such period, not exceeding three years, as the Magistrate thinks fit". In other words, before taking any action under Section 110, the Magistrate is required to issue notice to the delinquent to show cause. Section 111 which is applicable to provisions under Sections 107, 108, 109 and 110, Cr. P.C. lays down that the Magistrate acting under any of the above sections, shall make an order in writing setting-forth the information received, the amount of the bond to be executed, the term for which it is to be in force and the number, character and class of sureties, if any, required. Section 112 lays down the procedure in respect of the person present in Court and Section 113 provides that summons of warrant may be issued to the person not present in Court. If a person is not present in Court, the Magistrate is to issue summons requiring him to appear and if such person is already in custody, the Magistrate is required to issue a production warrant directing the officer to bring the delinquent to the Court. The Proviso to Section 113 indicates that whenever the Magistrate has reason to fear the commission of a breach of the peace and it appears to the Magistrate that such breach of the peace cannot be prevented otherwise than by the immediate arrest of such person, the Magistrate may at any time issue warrant for arrest of the delinquent.

(6.) In the present case, admittedly no such warrant had been issued by the Magistrate and the police had on its own arrested the petitioner and produced the petitioner along with the report on the basis of which the proceeding was initiated. While issuing summons or warrant under Section 113, the order made under Section 111 has to be sent. Section 115 contemplates that the Magistrate has the power to dispense with the personal attendance of a person called upon to show cause. Section 116 contemplates an enquiry as to the truth of the information and sub-section (3) of Section 116 contemplates that after commencement and before the completion of the enquiry under sub-section (1), the Magistrate may for reasons to be recorded in writing, direct for execution of the bond which is otherwise commonly termed as "interim bond".

(7.) In the above background of the provisions, it is apparent that the action of the police in arresting the petitioner was wholly unjustified and without jurisdiction. Similarly, the action of the Magistrate in calling upon the petitioner to execute a bond even though the enquiry had not commenced and keeping the petitioner in custody for non-execution of the bond was also equally without jurisdiction. The learned counsel appearing for the State has not been able to justify the arrest of the petitioner and the subsequent action of the Magistrate. It is apparent that the Magistrate has proceeded to take stringent action against the petitioner even without bothering to examine the limits of his jurisdiction under Chapter-VIII.For the aforesaid reasons, the direction of the Magistrate remanding the petitioner to jail custody is found to be illegal and without jurisdiction. However, since in the meantime, the petitioner has been asked to show cause, it is directed that the proceeding, if not already completed, should be completed within a reasonable period. Since the arrest of the petitioner was without jurisdiction, the bail furnished by the petitioner stands discharged. It is, however, made clear that if the proceeding is still continuing, the petitioner should attend the same on each date unless otherwise directed by the Magistrate.

(8.) Subject to the aforesaid observations and directions, the Criminal Misc. Case is disposed of. Order accordingly.

JUDGEMENT

(1.) RULE. The learned A. P. P. waives service for the Respondent No. 1. Service on Respondent No. 2 is dispensed with. Taken up for hearing forthwith. I have heard the learned Counsel for the Petitioner and the learned Associate Advocate General for the state.

(2.) THE challenge in this petition under article 227 of the Constitution of India read with section 482 of the Code of Criminal procedure, 1973 (hereinafter referred to as "the said Code") is to the show cause notice dated 26th April, 2005 issued by the Special Executive magistrate, Mulund Division, Mulund, under section 111 of the said Code.

(3.) THE learned Counsel for the petitioner submitted that the notice under section 111 of the said Code is contrary to law. He pointed out that the notice recites that there was a dispute between the Petitioner and the witness No. 1 over the business of cable network business. It is alleged that the petitioner hurled abuses at the witness No. 1 and therefore, a N. C. complaint has been registered against the Petitioner for commission of offence under sections 323 and 504 of the indian Penal Code. It is alleged that on 26th april, 2005 at about 9. 45 a. m. the Petitioner threatened the witness No. 1 and warned him to withdraw the N. C. complaint by warning him that in Mumbai number of accidents take place. By the said show-cause notice, the petitioner was called upon to show-cause as to why he should not be directed to furnish a bond for good behaviour for one year with one surety in the sum of Rs. 5,000/- of a respectable person. The Petitioner was called upon to remain present on 10th May, 2005 in the office of the Special Executive Magistrate. It is alleged that on 10th May, 2005, when the petitioner met Assistant Police Inspector Shri. Rapade, who asked the Petitioner whether he was willing to settle the dispute by paying cash or whether he was willing to provide a cable line connection. It is alleged that it is the said shri. Rapade who served show cause notice on the Petitioner. On 10th May, 2005, the petitioner narrated all this to the Assistant commissioner of Police, under whose signature the notice was issued. Thereafter API Shri. Rapade and a Constable Shri. Sapkal started demanding money for themselves. On the next date fixed i. e. on 14th June, 2005, the Petitioner attended the office of the Special Executive magistrate along with his Advocate. His advocate submitted an application on that day with a prayer to furnish copies of the complaint lodged with the Police Station to enable the petitioner to submit a reply. An adjournment was sought for a period of one month. The allegation in the petition is that the Application made by the Advocate was not accepted and the Petitioner was forced to execute a bond.

(4.) WHEN this petition came up before this Court on the earlier date, the learned A. P. P. produced a copy of the order dated 14th June, 2005 passed by the Special Executive magistrate under section 107 of the said Code directing the Petitioner to furnish a bond in the sum of Rs. 5,000/ -. Therefore, the Petitioner was permitted to amend the said petition for challenging the said order. Accordingly amendment was carried out for incorporating the challenge to the said order.

(5.) ON 6th September, 2005, this court passed the following order:

"1. My attention has been invited by the learned A. P. P. to circular dated 3rd september, 2005 issued by the Home ministry. A copy of the circular is taken on record. The learned Counsel for the petitioner has placed on record a copy of the decision of the Division Bench of this Court reported in 2001 ALL MR (Cri.) page 2079 (Surendra s/o. Ramchandra Taori Vs. State of maharashtra and ors.). In paragraph 19 thereof, this Court observed that vesting of powers of Special Executive magistrates in Police Officers of whatever rank has resulted in blatant misuse of the said powers to the detriment of the Fundamental Rights of the citizens as enshrined in the Article 21 of the Constitution of India. 2. The Division Bench has recommended that the State should take recourse to the Section 478 of the Code of Criminal procedure, 1973 by vesting the powers of Special Executive Magistrate in the judicial Magistrate First Class or the metropolitan Magistrate. 3. The learned A. P. P. seeks time to take instructions as regards the aforesaid aspect. Stand over for two weeks for further orders. " On the last date the learned Associate Advocate general produced copies of the Circulars dated 3rd September, 2005 and 28th April, 2003. The learned Associate Advocate General also produced a copy of the affidavit filed on behalf of the State Government in Criminal Writ petition No. 173 of 2002 filed in the Nagpur bench of this Court as well as the order passed by the Bench at Nagpur in the said case.

(6.) THE learned Counsel for the petitioner submitted that the Special Executive magistrate did not follow the procedure prescribed by the said Code and on 14th June, 2005 without giving any opportunity of being heard to the Petitioner forced the Petitioner to execute a bond. He submitted that the State government has refused to abide by the directions given by this Court in the said decision reported in 2001 ALL MR (Cri.) page 2079 (Surendra s/o. Ramchandra Taori Vs. State of Maharashtra and ors.). He submitted that the Division Bench of this Court recommended that the State Government should consider of exercising powers under section 478 of the said Code by vesting the powers of the Executive Magistrates in the judicial Magistrate First Class or the metropolitan Magistrate. He pointed out the roznama of the proceedings and stated that the case has been conducted in a high handed manner contrary to the procedure prescribed by the said Code. He pointed out that the order dated 14th June, 2005 is a cyclostyled order and it shows non application of mind inasmuch as the said order records that the Petitioner accepted the allegations made against him and tendered apology. He pointed out that the petitioner never accepted the allegations and never tendered apology.

(7.) THE learned Associate Advocate general has fairly argued the matter and has assisted this Court. He has placed reliance on the Circulars dated 28th April, 2003 and 3rd september, 2005 issued by the Home Ministry for the guidance of the Special Executive, magistrates. He pointed out that the Circular dated 3rd September, 2005 has been issued after the procedural lapses on the part of the special Executive Magistrate in this case were brought to the notice of the State Government. He submitted that for the reasons which are recorded in the affidavit filed in Writ Petition no. 173 of 2002, the State Government has expressed inability to accept the recommendations made by the Division Bench of this Court in the Surendra's case (supra). He submitted that the State Government has made in-depth consideration of the recommendation of this Court.

(8.) I have considered the submissions. With a view to decide the controversy involved in this petition, it will be necessary to refer to the provisions of section 107 which reads thus:

"107. Security for keeping the peace in other cases.- (1) When an Executive magistrate receives information that any person is likely to commit a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquility or to do any wrongful act that may probably occasion a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquility and is of opinion that there is sufficient ground for proceeding, he may in the manner hereinafter provided, require such person to show cause why he should not be ordered to execute a bond with or without sureties for keeping the peace for such period, not exceeding one year, as the Magistrate thinks fit. (2) Proceeding under this section may be taken before any Executive Magistrate when either the place where the breach of the peace or disturbance is apprehended is within his local jurisdiction or there is within such jurisdiction a person who is likely to commit a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquility or to do any wrongful act as aforesaid beyond such jurisdiction. "

Sections 111 to 116 are also relevant for the purpose of this petition, which read as under:

"111. Order to be made.- When a magistrate acting under section 107, section 108, section 109 or section 110, deems it necessary to require any person to show cause under such section he shall make an order in writing, setting forth the substance of the information received, the amount of the bond to be executed, the term for which it is to be in force, and the number, character and class of sureties (if any)required. "

"112. Procedure in respect of person present in Court.- If the person in respect of whom such order is made is present in court, it shall be read over to him, if he so desires, the substance thereof shall be explained to him. "

"113. Summons or warrant in case of person not so present.- If such person is not present in Court, the Magistrate shall issue a summons requiring him to appear, or, when such person is in custody, a warrant directing the officer in whose custody he is to bring him before the Court; provided that whenever it appears to such magistrate, upon the report of a police officer or upon other information (the substance of which report or information shall be recorded by the Magistrate), that there is reason to fear the commission of a breach of the peace, and that such breach of the peace cannot be prevented otherwise than by the immediate arrest of such person, the Magistrate may at any time issue a warrant for his arrest. "

"114. Copy of order to accompany summons or warrant.- Every summons or warrant issued under section 113 shall be accompanied by a copy of the order made under section 111, and such copy shall be delivered by the officer servingor executing such summons or warrant to the person served with, or arrested under, the same.

"115. Power to dispense with personal attendance.- The Magistrate may, if he sees sufficient cause, dispense with the personal attendance of any person called upon to show cause why he should not be ordered to execute a bond for keeping the peace or for good behaviour and may permit him to appear by a pleader. "

"116. Inquiry as to truth of information.- (1) When an order under section 111 has been read or explained under section 112 to a person in Court, or when any person appears or is brought before a Magistrate in compliance with, or in execution of, a summons or warrant, issued under section 113, the Magistrate shall proceed to inquire into the truth of the information upon which action has been taken, and to take such further evidence as may appear necessary. "

(2) Such inquiry shall be made, as nearly as may be practicable, in the manner hereinafter prescribed for conducting trial and recording evidence in summons-cases.

(3) After the commencement, and before the completion, of the inquiry under sub-section (1), the Magistrate, if he considers that immediate measures are necessary for the prevention of a breach of the peace or disturbance of the public tranquillity or the commission of any offence or for the public safety, may, for reason to be recorded in writing, direct the person in respect of whom the order under section 111 has been made to execute a bond, with or without sureties, for keeping the peace or maintaining good behaviour until the conclusion of the inquiry and may detain him in custody until such bond is executed or, in default of execution, until the inquiry is concluded: provided that - (a) no person against whom proceedings are not being taken over under section 108, section 109, or section 110 shall be directed to execute a bond for maintaining good behaviour. (b) the condition of such bond, whether as to the amount thereof or as to the provision of sureties or the number thereof or the pecuniary extent of their liability, shall not be more onerous than those specified in the order under section 111.

(4) For the purposes of this section the fact that a person is a habitual offender or is so desperate and dangerous as to render his being at large without security hazardous to the community may be provided by evidence of general repute or otherwise.

(5) Where two or more persons have been associated together in the matter under inquiry, they may be dealt within the same or separate inquiries as the Magistrate shall think just.

(6) The inquiry under this section shall be completed within a period of six months from the date of its commencement, and if such inquiry is not so completed, the proceedings under this Chapter shall, on the expiry of the said period, stand terminated unless, for special reasons to be recorded in writing, the Magistrate otherwise directs: provided that where any person has been kept in detention pending such inquiry, the proceeding against that person, unless terminated earlier, shall stand terminated on the expiry of a period of six months of such detention.

(7) Where any direction is made under subsection (6) permitting the continuance of proceedings, the Sessions Judge may, on an application made to him by the aggrieved party, vacate such direction if he is satisfied that it was not based on any special reason or was perverse. "

(9.) THE power under section 107 can be exercised when the Special Executive magistrate receives an information that any person is likely to commit a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquility or to do any wrongful act that may probably occasions a breach of peace or disturb the public tranquility. The said section further provides that if the executive Magistrate is of the opinion that there is sufficient ground for proceeding, he may in the manner provided in the Code require such person to show cause why he should not be ordered to execute a bond (with or without sureties) for keeping peace for such period, not exceeding one year, as the Magistrate deems fit. Section 111 of the said Code mandates that when a Magistrate acting under section 107 deems it necessary to require any person to show cause, he shall make an order in writing setting forth the substance of the information received, the amount of the bond to be executed, the term for which it is to be in force. Section 113 provides that if such person to whom notice is intended to be issued is not present in Court, the Magistrate shall issue a summons requiring him to appear. In exceptional circumstances, the said section gives powers to the learned Magistrate to issue warrant of arrest. Section 114 mandates that every summons issued under section 113 shall be accompanied by a copy of the order made under section 111 and such copy shall be delivered by the officer serving or executing such summons or warrant to the person served with or arrested under the same. Section 116 lays down the procedure for holding the inquiry. Under section 116, the Executive Magistrate is under an obligation to make enquiry into the truth of the information upon which action has been taken and for that purpose he has to take such further evidence as may be necessary. Sub-section (2) of section 116 mandates that such an enquiry shall be made as nearly as may be practicable in the manner prescribed for conducting the trial and recording evidence in summons cases. Sub-section (3) provides that if the Magistrate considers that immediate measures are necessary for the prevention of a breach of the peace or disturbance of the public tranquility or the commission of any offence or for the public safety, he may after commencement but before completion of the enquiry, for reasons to be recorded in writing direct the person in respect of whom the order section 111 has been made to execute a bond with or without surety for keeping peace or maintaining good behaviour until conclusion of the inquiry and may detain him in custody until such bond is executed or in default of execution, until the inquiry is concluded.

(10.) IN the present case a perusal of the case file which was produced before this court shows that a copy of the order passed under section 111 was not forwarded with the summons issued to the Petitioner under section 113 of the said Code. In fact the Roznama of the proceedings does not record that a separate order as contemplated by section 111 is passed setting forth the substance of the information received. The roznama of the proceedings records that on 10th May, 2005, the Petitioner remained present and he submitted a reply to the show-cause notice. Roznama dated 18th may, 2005 records that witness No. 1 was present and he was heard. On that day the petitioner sought time. The next date was fixed as 26th May, 2005 on which adjournment was granted to the Petitioner. On the next day, the hearing could not take place as the concerned officer was not available. Roznama dated 7th june, 2005 records that after commencement of the proceedings, there are complaints filed against each other by the Petitioner and the witness No. 1. The case was adjourned to 14th june, 2005. Roznama dared 14th June, 2005 records what transpired on that day. The english translation thereof is as under: "opponent present for hearing. Witness No. 1. present for hearing. Enquiry was made with the opponent herein whether he was prepared to execute a bond, the opponent made a request to accept personal bond. Therefore, the request of the opponent was accepted. The contents of the show-cause notice were read over and explained to the opponent. A personal bond for maintaining peace and keeping good behaviour in the sum of Rs. 5,000/- for a period of one year was obtained in writing from the Opponent and the matter was disposed of. " the order passed on 14th June, 2005 appears to be in a printed or cyclostyled form. The printed portion of the order records that the petitioner accepted the allegations made against him and has prayed for acceptance of apology. The printed portion of the order further records that on the basis of the evidence produced by the Senior Inspector of Police, Mulund Police station, the Special Executive Magistrate has come to the conclusion that the Petitioner was having criminal tendancies and from the petitioner there was a likelihood of breach of peace and tranquility in the area and therefore, the order was passed directing him to furnish bond. In the printed format of order, only the name of the Petitioner, his address and the bond amount has been filled in by hand. It is pertinent to note that the Roznama dared 14th June, 2005 does not record that the Petitioner accepted the correctness of the allegations made against him and tendered apology. What is recorded in the roznama is that the Special Executive magistrate asked the Petitioner whether he was willing to furnish a bond and the Petitioner requested that he may be allowed to furnish a personal bond. There is no reference to any separate order passed by the Executive magistrate on 14th June, 2005. There is no reference in the Roznama to evidence produced by the Senior Inspector of Police. After perusing the file, I found that no such evidence by the Senior Inspector of Police is on record. Thus the order dated 14th June, 2005 shows a complete non-application of mind. Though there is nothing on record to show that the petitioner accepted the allegations made against him and tendered an apology, the order records the acceptance of allegations by the Petitioner and apology.

(11.) GOING by the Roznama of the proceedings, it appears that a reply was filed by the Petitioner on the earlier date. The provisions of section 116 of the said Code mandate that as far as possible, the procedure for summons case shall be adopted in conducting the inquiry. Section 251 of the said code which deals with the procedure of summons case provides that the particulars of the offence alleged against the Accused shall be stated to him and shall be asked whether he pleads guilty or has any defence to make. Section 252 further provides that if the accused pleads guilty, the Magistrate is required to record his plea. The Roznama records that the Special Executive Magistrate asked the petitioner whether he was willing to furnish bond. The Petitioner had filed a reply contesting the show-cause notice and therefore, there was no occasion for the learned Magistrate to ask the question which is recorded in the Roznama. When the Petitioner had filed a reply to the show-cause notice, it is very difficult to accept that the Petitioner made a prayer for seeking permission to give personal bond. It is pertinent to note that the Roznama does not record that the Petitioner pleaded guilty or that he tendered apology. As stated earlier, it is impossible to accept that the Petitioner voluntarily offered to give personal bond. As the Petitioner did not accept the allegations made against him in the show-cause notice and even assuming that interim order as contemplated by sub-section (3) of section 116 of the said Code was required to be passed, the learned Magistrate was bound to record reasons in writing. In the present case, the order dated 14th June, 2005 is the final order which proceeds on an erroneous assumption that the Petitioner accepted the correctness of the allegations made against him and tendered apology. The order is erroneous for the reason that it relies upon the non-existing evidence allegedly produced by the Senior inspector of Police. There is complete non-application of mind on the part of the officer concerned. It is obvious that the procedure which is followed by him is unjust, unfair and contrary to law.

(12.) IT will be necessary to refer to the decision of the learned Single Judge of this court reported in 1993 Mh. L. J. page 1409 (Smt. Christalin Costa and others Vs. State of Goa and others). In paragraph 7 this Court observed thus:

"7 In my view all these submissions of shri. Nadkarni seems to be sound and deserve acceptance. As far as the last grievance is concerned a bare perusal of section 107 of Criminal Procedure Code read with section 111 shows that such proceedings are to be instituted only in respect of information received by the magistrate if he is satisfied that there is any danger or likelihood of somebody committing breach of the peace and disturbing public tranquility. Obviously when there are quarrels between two private individuals it appears that this situation is not contemplated by these legal provisions. Quarrels between individuals are not normally creating any problem of public order and at the most it may lead to a problem of law and order to be dealt with by the appropriate penal law. Proceedings under section 107 are always dealing with preventive measures to be taken by the magistrate in order to pre-empt any possibility of breach of peace and disturbance of public tranquility. In the case of Jayant D. Shah and 4 others Vs. State of maharashtra, 1986 (1) Crimes 305, this court has held that the provisions of sections 107 to 110 cannot be used or exercised for satisfying private vendetta of a querulous person and the exercise of powers by the Magistrate under the aforesaid sections on the basis of incidents involving trivial quarrels without application of mind would amount to gross abuse of the process of law. "

(Emphasis supplied). In paragraph 8 the learned Single Judge after considering the provisions of section 107 and 111 of the Code proceeded to hold thus:

"8. . . . . The harmonious construction of these two provisions clearly suggests that no order requiring any person against whom proceedings under section 107 of Criminal procedure Code have been instituted can be passed by the Magistrate to execute a bond for maintaining peace unless a notice is issued to him to show cause as to why he should not be ordered to execute such a bond and this notice is to be given to him only after an order in writing is made by the Magistrate setting forth the substance of the information and among others details of the bond to be executed by the said person. It follows therefore that the magistrate is expected to apply his mind on the material placed before him by the police along with his report and on giving an opportunity to the opposite party to have a say on the question of executing a bond issue appropriate orders in this respect. The execution of the bond appears therefore to be an independent facet of the inquiry which the Magistrate is entitled to hold on the basis of the report forwarded to him by the police. Such inquiry as to the truth of the information forwarded to him in the report by the police is contemplated in section 116 of Criminal Procedure Code. It is true that its sub-section (3) provides that the Magistrate, if he considers that immediate measures are necessary for the prevention of a breach of the peace or disturbance of the public tranquility or the commission of any offence or for the public safety, may direct the person against whom proceedings have been instituted under section 107 and an order under section 111 has been made to execute a bond. But this power of the Magistrate can be exercised by him only after the commencement and before the completion of the inquiry. "

(Emphasis supplied).

(13.) IN the present case the show-cause notice issued under section 111 and the order dated 14th June, 2005 are required to be quashed and set aside only on the ground that there is no separate order passed by the learned magistrate as contemplated by section 111 of the said Code. Passing of such an order is a condition precedent for initiating proceedings. Apart from this ground, there is a complete non-application of mind and the procedure followed by the learned Executive Magistrate is contrary to law. At this stage it will be necessary to refer to the circular dated 28th april, 2003 issued by the Home Ministry. Certain guide-lines have been issued by the home Ministry to the Special Executive magistrates. In Circular dated 3rd September, 2005, the State Government has directed that the cyclostyled orders under section 107 should not be issued and the order should not be passed without recording reasons as the orders are quashed generally on these grounds.

(14.) RELIANCE is placed by the learned counsel for the Petitioner on the recommendation of this Court made in the case of Surendra Taori (supra). In paragraph 19 of the said Judgment, the Division Bench of this Court observed thus:

"19. . . . . Therefore, in our humble opinion, it is high time that the State, which is duty bound to protect the fundamental right of its citizen and particularly relating to their liberty, should resort to section 478 of the Code of Criminal Procedure which vests in the State powers to order functions allocated to Executive Magistrates and such powers vested in favour of police officers as Special Executive Magistrate particularly in reference to Chapter VIII proceedings as they are commonly known and relate to sections 108 to 110 as well as sections 145 and 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code to be made over to Judicial Magistrate of the first Class or Metropolitan Magistrate, as the case may be. "

My attention has been invited to the reply filed by the State in Criminal Writ Petition No. 173 of 2002 before the Nagpur Bench of this Court. In the said reply reasons have been given by the State for not accepting the recommendations of the Division Bench. In the said affidavit, it is stated thus:

"7. I respectfully say and submit that the government has given anxious consideration to the observations made by this Hon'ble Court. Considering the present scenario and the law and order situation, the State Government is of the opinion that it may not be advisable to revert back to pre-1980 position and entrust this power to the Judicial Magistrates or Metropolitan magistrates as observed by this Hon'ble court. In my respectful submission, therefore, it is not necessary to withdraw the functions allotted to the Executive magistrates relating to scrutiny for keeping peace and for good behaviour provided under Chapter VIII and maintenance of public order and tranquility provided under chapter X of the Code of Criminal procedure. "

In my view no grievance can be made by the petitioner as regards failure of the State to accept the recommendation of this Court.

(15.) HENCE the petition succeeds. The state Government is expected to issue necessary direction to ensure that the provisions of the said Code are scrupulously followed and complied with by the Special Executive magistrates. Hence the following order is passed:

i) The impugned order dated 14th June, 2005 is quashed and set aside and the proceedings initiated on the basis of the impugned show cause notice are quashed, ii) The Principal Secretary to the Home department, State of Maharashtra, is directed to circulate a copy of this judgment to all the Special Executive magistrates to ensure that the proceedings under Chapter VIII of the code are conducted strictly in accordance with law.

iii) The parties to act on an authenticated copy of this order. Petition allowed.

JUDGEMENT

(1.) THIS is an application under section 482, Cr. P. C. for quashing the order dated 24-10-2007 and the notice dated 18-12-2007 issued against the applicant in Case No. 01 of 2008 -State v. Har Charan under Section 110 (g), Cr. P. C. , police Station Barsana, district Mathura, pending in the Court of Sub divisional Magistrate, Chhata, District Mathura.

(2.) HEARD the learned counsel for the applicant, as well as learned A. G. A. for the state at the stage of hearing on admission of this application. Since the point involved in the matter is legal one I am deciding it at this stage on merits with the consent of the parties without calling for any counter affidavit or rejoinder affidavit. Since these proceedings have been drawn on the report of the S. O. of P. S. Barsana, District Mathura against the applicant and since Smt. Babita opposite party No, 2 is not a party in the above case, no notice is being issued to her,

(3.) THE facts relevant for disposal of this application are that on 18-12-2007, Smt. Ritu Sharma, Sub Divisional Magistrate, chhata, Distrclt Mathura issued a notice under Section 111, Cr. P. C. for drawing proceedings against the applicant under Section 110 (g), cr. P. C. It is a notice issued on a cyclostyled proforma and in its para 1, the contents of Section 110 (g), Cr. P. C. have been reproduced. There is reference of the report of S. O. of P. S. Barsana dated 24-10-2007 against applicant Har Charan at its top, and then it has been stated in this cyclostyled notice that Har Charan is criminal and he is involved in antisocial activities and on account of his fear and terror nobody was ready to adduce evidence against him. He can do any untoward incident which may result into breach of peace. So a notice was given to him to appear before the Court on 28-1 -2008 and show cause as to why he should not be required to execute a personal bond of Rs. 1,00,000/- with two surety bonds of the like amount for maintaining peace for three years. The grounds on the basis of which the above conclusion was drawn that he was so desperate and dangerous as to render his being at large without security is hazardous to the community have not been mentioned in this notice and there is only a reference of the report of the S. O. , P. S. , Barsana, dated 24-10-2007 in support of the above allegation.

(4.) A copy of the above report dated 24-10-2007 has been filed as annexure 6 to the application and there is again a repetition of the requirements of Section 110 (g), Cr. P. C. and at its bottom in the column of criminal history of the applicant, there is reference of Case Crime No. 264 of 2007 under Sections 323, 504, 506, 324, 452, i. P. C. P. S. Barsana against the applicant.

(5.) LEARNED counsel for the applicant has submitted that in the aforesaid case crime 264 of 2007, originally N. C. R. No. 54 of 2007 was registered on the report of Smt. Babita against Vijay Singh, Gopi Chandra, smt. Leela and Smt, Somwati under Sections 323, 504 and 506, I. P. C. in respect of the incident which had allegedly taken place on 29-6-2007 at 3. 30 p. m. This N. C. R. was registered against the above-named accused of that case on 29-6-2007 at 6,30 p. m. Learned counsel for the applicant pointed out that the name of present applicant Har Charan does not find place in this N, C R, as an accused, and the allegation in the above F. I. R, is that Smt, Babita had gone to these accused persons to acquire about her husband, and then all these above named four accused persons had beaten her by kicks, fists, lathi, Danda, and had abused her.

(6.) IT further appears that after the lapse of four days, Smt. Babita moved another application before the S. O. , Barsana on 3-7-2007 in which she stated that on 29-6-2007 an incident of Maar Peet had taken place with her but in that incident Vijai Singh, gopi Chandra, Smt. Leela and Smt. Somwati (named in the above F. I. R.) had not participated, and she had lodged this wrong report against them on account of being perplexed. She stated that actually Har Charan, mahesh, Veer Pal and Prem Pal had committed maar Peet with her after entering her house, and then on the basis of this application n. C. R. No. 54 of 2007 was converted into Case Crime No. 264 of 2007 adding offences under Sections 324 and 452, I. P. C. against the above-named newly added accused persons.

(7.) LEARNED Counsel for the applicant submitted that thus a perusal of the record of the case upon which the S. O. , Barsana has placed reliance for taking action against the applicant under Section 110 (g), Cr. P. C. goes to show that the applicant was not named in the original F. I. R. dated 29-6-2007 which was lodged soon after the incident, and the subsequent addition of the name of the applicant Har charan and three others as participants in place of those named in the original N. C. R. after the lapse of four days goes to show that the entire case against Har charan is false, and so the proceedings should be quashed.

(8.) THE learned A. G. A. submitted in his reply that only a show cause notice was issued to the applicant and he had the efficacious remedy to challenge the proceedings by filing reply to the notice, and the present application under Section 482, Cr. P. C. is not maintainable. In reply, the learned counsel for the applicant submitted that in this case, the record shows that the learned magistrate has simply signed a cyclostyled notice without application of mind because if she had gone through the record of Case crime No. 264 of 2007 referred in the report of the S. O. , P. S. Barsana, she would have come to know that the applicant was not named as an accused person in the N. C. R. and his name was added as an accused after expiry of four days from the incident, and that, besides implication of the applicant as accused in that case at such a later stage, no material was referred to in that report to show that the applicant was terrorist and dangerous person and that his being at large without security was hazardous to the community. He has further pointed out that on this report of the S. O. the rubber stamp "awalokit notice under S. 111, cr. P. C. ke antargat jari hai", was affixed and the learned S. D. M. without application of mind has simply initiated it at the relevant place of the rubber stamp. It was further pointed out that the notice under section 111 Cr. P. C. is also a cyclostyled notice and Har Charan's particulars only have been mentioned in it with a reference of the report of the S. O. Barsana dated 24-10-2007 without mentioning the facts as to how the applicant was desperate and dangerous to the community. He submitted when an order is passed and a notice is issued without application of mind, as has been done in the present case, the same can be challenged under Section 482, Cr. P. C. as issuance of such an order and notice amounts to abuse of the process of the Court.

(9.) I agree with the above contention of the learned counsel for the applicant because there is nothing in the report of the s. O. , P. S. Barsana, District Mathura dated 24-10-2007 to show as to how the applicant was so desparate and dangerous as to render his being at large without security hazardous to the community. The notice issued on the basis of such a vague report and the proceedings drawn on the basis of such a vague notice amount to abuse of the process of the Court and so they can be challenged by filing an application under Section 482, Cr. P. C.

(10.) THE application under Section 482, cr. P. C. therefore deserves to be allowed and the order of learned Magistrate for issuance of notice to the applicant passed on the above report dated 24-10-2007 and the notice dated 18-12-2007 issued in pursuance thereof deserve to be set aside. The state shall however be at liberty to draw afresh proceedings against the applicant under Section 110 (g), Cr. P. C. in accordance with law giving particulars of all that material in the notice in case there is sufficient material before it for drawing proceedings against the applicant.

(11.) HENCE the application under Section 482, Cr. P. C. is allowed and the order passed by the learned Magistrate on the report dated 24-10-2007 of the S. O. , P. S. Barsana, district Mathura and the notice dated 18-12-2007 issued by the S. D. M. Chhata, District mathura are set aside and the proceedings drawn against the applicant on the basis of the above order and notice are hereby quashed. The State is however at liberty to draw a fresh proceedings against the applicant in accordance with the provisions of law as discussed above. Application allowed.

Cr. P.C. – Section 107, 151 – Dispute between two parties – Complaint disclosed no Cognizable offence – Police Officer to help the criminals detained the petitioner U.S. 151 of Cr. P.C. – Held, proceeding against petitioner is illegal and unlawful – Proceeding quashed – Petitioner gratned with a token compensation of Rs. 50,000/- for illegally detaining him – Commissioner directed to initiate proceeding against erring police personels.

JUDGEMENT

(1.) THIS Writ Petition under Article 226 and Articles 14,21 and 22 of the Constitution of India read with Section 482 Cr. P. C. For appropriate directions of enquiry into the acts of the police officials in illegally detaining the Petitioner and sending him to Tihar Jail invoking Section 107/151 cr. P. C. on a false complaint of one Ashok Kumar Munna (Respondent No. 5), a Bad character of the area and for quashing the proceedings.

(2.) PETITIONER has stated that he was a businessman and living at flat No. C-48, Karampura, Moti Nagar, New Delhi at first floor. Respondent No. 5, Ashok Kumar Munna was a known Bad Character of the area of Police Station moti Nagar. He contested the elections for the area Councilor and MLA. He was agent of local leaders and local police in illegal recovery of money from the traders and innocent people. He flourished under the patronage of local leaders and police and also was indulging in grabbing and encroaching public land. He alleged that Respondent No. 5 made unauthorized encroachment covering open public place towards rear portion of the flat and raised a construction upto the second floor, in this process, he closed the window/ventilation of Petitioner's only toilet-cum-bathroom. Against this illegal action, Petitioner had made complaints to MCD and also filed a Civil Suit No. 471/04 seeking demolition of the unauthorized construction and his right to ventilation. The Civil Suit was still pending. He submitted that on 16th July, 2006 at the instance of respondent No. 5 he was taken to Police Station and put behind bars. He was threatened by Respondent No. 2, Sub-Inspector Sudesh Ranga that unless he withdraws his complaints against Ashok Kumar Munna and expresses sorry to him and also withdraws his Court case, he would not be let off and would be harassed like that. On 16th July, 2006 he was not allowed to go home and kept illegally in Police Station. On 17th July, 2006, when respectable persons of the area went to the Police Station to give surety for the Petitioner, they were threatened by SI Sudesh Ranga and Ashok Kumar Munna, who told that he would ensure that the Petitioner was not bailed out for a week. Petitioner was produced before ACP (SEM) and was sent to Tihar Jail on 17th July, 2006. The acp did not listen to the requests and pleas of the Petitioner or his Advocate or other persons of the locality, who had come to stand surety to him. His surety was not accepted and he was sent to Judicial Custody. He was released from the Tihar Jail in the evening of 18th July, 2006. It is stated that later on Petitioner obtained certified copies of the Kalandra proceedings against him, he found that proceedings under Section 107/151 Cr. P. C were initiated against him at the instance of Ashok Kumar Munna, who had been threatening him earlier and the Petitioner had made complaints against him to police several times.

(3.) ACCORDING to the Status Report filed by the police, the stand of the police is that on 16th July, 2006, a complaint was lodged at the Police station by Ashok Kumar Munna. On receiving this complaint, Sudesh Ranga, SI (Respondent No. 2) went to the house of Petitioner and on seeing police, petitioner started abusing Respondent No. 5 and stated in the fit of rage that he would not get the toilet repaired and started shouting. As there was every apprehension of commission of some cognizable offence, Petitioner was arrested u/s 107/151 Cr. P. C. It would be worthwhile to reproduce the complaint of Ashok kumar Munna (Respondent No. 5) on the basis of which proceedings were initiated against the Petitioner. The complaint is without date. There is no stamp of receipt of it at Police Station. The complaint is addressed to SHO PS. Moti nagar and reads as under: it is prayed that I, Ashok Kumar Munna S/o Late Shri Har Sahai, I am resident of c-43 Karam Pura. My neighbour is Keshav Kumar S/o Shri Narayan Singh from whose toilet water always seeps into our house. Due to this, the entire wall has become damp and we get foul smell into our entire room. I had tried to make him understand about this problem but no solution has been found. Today when I again wanted to talk to him over this topic, he refused to talk and told that he would not get this repaired whatever I may do. He quarreled with me and did 'maarpeet', therefore I have come to Police Station for registration of report. Appropriate proceedings be initiated against him.

(4.) A perusal of above complaint would show that the complaint disclosed no cognizable offence, no medical of Ashok Kumar Munna was got done by police. A civil case was already going on between the parties. As per petitioner, Ashok Kumar Munna himself had made unauthorized construction abutting toilet of the house of the Petitioner thus closing all ventilation of the toilet. A civil case in respect of removal of this unauthorized construction was also going on. It is very surprising that on the basis of this complaint which does not disclose any cognizable offence and only disclosed a civil dispute, police officials went to the house of Petitioner, arrested him and thereafter registered proceedings under Section 107/151 Cr. P. C. alleging petitioner's shouting and collection of people there. Sections 107, 108 and 109 are to maintain public tranquility and to prevent a wrongful act that may occasion a breach of peace or disturb public tranquility. The Section cannot be invoked when there is a civil dispute between the two neighbours in respect of unauthorized construction. Police cannot act as an agent of those, who do unauthorized construction and cannot be an accomplice of those, who try to swallow their neighbours' rights. The proceedings initiated against the petitioner at the instance of Ashok Kumar Munna only re-confirm the league between the criminals and the police and also shows how the life and liberty of innocent persons is at stake at the hands of such police officials. It is apparent that Petitioner was taken into custody by police on 16th July, 2006 itself without any rhyme and reason. The undated complaint was obtained later on to justify the action and high handedness. He was produced before ACP (SEM)on next day, who sent him to Tihar Jail without application of mind and without seeing if there was a case worth proceeding under Section 107 or 151 Cr. P. C. ACP while acting under Section 107/151 Crp. C. acts as a Special Executive magistrate and performs quasi-judicial functions. He is supposed to apply his mind which GOD has given to him and not to act blindly on the report of his subordinates and juniors. No reason has been given in the Status Report as to why the sureties produced by the Petitioner on 17. 7. 2006 were not taken on record and accepted on the same day and why he was sent to Tihar Jail.

(5.) IT is apparent that the proceedings against the Petitioner were unlawful and illegal. The Petitioner was detained by police illegally from 16th july 2006 to 18th July, 2006 when he was released after his surety bond was accepted by the ACP on 18th July, 2006. The petition of the Petitioner is allowed. The proceedings under Section 107/151 Cr. P. C. are quashed. Respondent no. 1 is directed to pay a token compensation of Rs. 50,000/- to the Petitioner for illegally detaining him in custody for two days. The Commissioner of Police is also directed to initiate departmental proceedings against the erring police officials being Respondents No. 2 to 4, who acted in gross contravention of law and who were in league with the area criminals. The Petitioner would be at liberty to claim appropriate compensation under law.

JUDGEMENT

(1.) THIS Writ Petition under Article 226/227 of the Constitution of india read with Section 482 Cr. P. C. has been filed by the Petitioner with following prayers:

(a) issue an appropriate writ, order or direction to the respondents no. 2 and 3 not to Pobstruct/restrain the petitioner from visiting flat no. 53, Swastik kunj, Plot No. 29, Sector-13, Rohini, Delhi;

(b) issue appropriate writ, order or direction to the respondents no. 2 and 3 to register the complaint dated 7. 9. 2007 of the petitioner addressed to dcp (North West);

(c) issue appropriate writ, order or direction by quashing the proceedings under Sections 107/151 of the Code of Criminal Procedure initiated against the petitioner at the instance of respondents no. 4 and 5;

(d) issue appropriate writ, order or direction against respondents 1 to 3 to award damages to the petitioner for having been illegally sent to jail at the instance of respondents no. 4 and 5;

(e) Award costs in favour of the petitioner and against the respondents; and

(f) Pass such other and further order (s) as this Hon'ble Court may deem fit and proper in the facts and circumstances of the case.

(2.) THE Petitioner has contended that he knew one Mr. Raj Kumar bansal and his wife Urvashi Bansal (Respondent No. 4). Mr. Raj Kumar Bansal requested him for financial help and the Petitioner extended all financial help to him from time to time. Mr. Raj Kumar Bansal used to repay the loan to the petitioner. Mr. Raj Kumar Bansal and Urvashi Bansal had no child and they adopted a baby girl Neelambri Bansal. They invested money to purchase three flats numbers 1, 53 and 198 in Swastik Kunj, Sector-13, Rohini, Delhi between 10. 3. 1995 to 29. 12. 1995. The Petitioner had started the business of construction and developing of buildings by that time and he renovated and decorated Flat No. 1, Swastik Kunj at the request of Mr. Raj Kumar Bansal. Quarrels started between Mr. Raj Kumar Bansal and his wife Urvashi Bansal. The petitioner in order to help them, renovated the second flat no. 198, Swastik kunj so as to rent it out and have some running income. The flat was let out to one Shri Ramesh Kumar at the monthly rent of Rs. 7,000/- per month.

(3.) IN March 2000, due to the strained relations, Urvashi Bansal was turned out by her husband Mr. Raj Kumar Bansal from flat no. 1, Swastik Kunj and she started living with her mother. After being turned out she approached the petitioner and requested for financial assistance. Petitioner claims that he advanced a loan of Rs. 5 lac to her for renovation of 3rd flat i. e. flat no. 53, swastik Kunj. She spent about Rs. 2. 5 lac on the renovation of that flat and started living there. Thereafter, she started seeking financial help from the petitioner from time to time. Petitioner used to treat her as his sister. He advanced a fresh loan of Rs. 10 lac to her and assisted her in the legal battle against her husband and also assisted her in continuation of studies of her adopted daughter. Since she could not repay the loan availed from the petitioner, she executed a Power of Attorney in Petitioner's favour in respect of flats no. 1 and 198, Swastik Kunj, Sector-13, Rohini and confirmed that so long as the loan taken by her was not returned, the Petitioner could retain the power of Attorney of the two flats. She handed over the vacant physical possession of flat no. 198, Swastik Kunj to the Petitioner. She then asked the petitioner to shift to flat no. 53, Swastik Kunj and both started living in same flat. The Petitioner claims that he disposed of his father's flat no. B-144, karam Pura, Delhi and started living with Respondent No. 4 at 53, Swastik Kunj since May, 2003. He also advanced another loan of Rs. 8 lac to her and in lieu of that Respondent No. 4 handed over all the original documents pertaining to flat no. 53, Swastik Kunj to him and also executed an undertaking in his favour affirming that she will repay the loan amount along with interest within a span of five years and in case she failed to repay the amount, the Petitioner would become the owner of the said flat. Petitioner further claims that in October, 2005 he again advanced another loan of Rs. 10 lac to her. In lieu of the said loan she gave him two post dated cheques of Rs. 5 lac each. These two cheques later got dis-honoured on presentation. On 24. 11. 2006, Mr. Raj Kumar Bansal, husband of Urvashi Bansal died and on this she and her daughter shifted to flat no. 1, Swastik Kunj, where Mr. Raj Kumar Bansal used to live, and started living there. Petitioner continued living at flat no. 53 exclusively.

(4.) ON 25. 8. 2007, Petitioner found a change in the attitude of urvashi Bansal/respondent No. 4. Respondent No. 4 along with her sister Upma bhagoria (Respondent No. 5) visited flat no. 198, Swastik Kunj and broke open the locks of the said flat. On this, Petitioner made a call at 100 and brought all these facts to the notice of the police. A PCR Van visited the flat and took the Petitioner, Respondent No. 4 and her sister to the Police Station. At Police station, Petitioner was made to sit outside and a complaint was got registered by Respondent No. 4 in connivance with police officials against the Petitioner. He alleged that the police officials were in collusion and connivance with respondent No. 4 and registered a false case against the Petitioner instead of registering a complaint of the Petitioner regarding breaking open of lock. Petitioner was falsely implicated in proceedings under Section 107/151 Cr. P. C. and was taken into custody. Respondent No. 4, with the help and connivance of police took forcible possession of flat no. 198, Swastik Kunj, Rohini. Petitioner furnished surety bond before Special Executive Magistrate on 29. 8. 2007 and was released from the jail on 30. 8. 2007. After his release from jail, when he reached his flat no. 53, Swastik Kunj, where he was living for past 8 years, he noticed that outer lock of the door had been broken and respondent No. 4 had removed all belongings of the Petitioner. Petitioner approached the concerned Police Station and brought these facts to the notice of the SHO. Instead of registering his complaint, police officials threatened him that in case he visited the flat again another proceedings under Section 107/151 cr. P. C. shall be initiated against him. Petitioner made complaint to the higher police officials but in vain. On 22. 9. 2007, Respondent No. 4 called upon the petitioner to return all original documents of the flats and threatened that in case those are not returned, she would get the Petitioner eliminated. Petitioner stated that he was forced to live in a 'dharamshala' as he was not in a position to live in flat no. 53 and also had no other house. The Petitioner then sent a complaint to the Chief Justice of Delhi High Court with copy to the commissioner of Police. He has challenged the action of the police on various grounds.

(5.) A perusal of proceedings under Section 107/151 Cr. P. C. would show that on receipt of DD No. 10a ASI Sultan Singh went to the spot where he found Petitioner in drunken condition and abusing Urvashi Bansal and the labourers, who were working in the flat no. 198, Swastik Kunj. He was ready to beat the labourers and said that this was his house. Respondent No. 4 made a complaint to him that after her husband death, Petitioner pretended to be her brother. They had also lived together even during the lifetime of her husband in flat no. 53, Swastik Kunj, but separately. After death of her husband petitioner wanted to capture her flats. She had three flats, which were her property. She went to the flat for some labour work and the Petitioner obstructed and was ready to beat the labours. ASI Sultan Singh in his report observed that there was a quarrel for possession of property and some crime might take place. However, proceedings under Section 107/151 Cr. P. C. were initiated against the Petitioner and he was taken in custody.

(6.) SECTION 145 Cr. P. C. is a specific provision to be invoked if a dispute is in respect of immovable property and it reads as under:

145. Procedure where dispute concerning land or water is likely to cause breach of peace " (1) Whenever an Executive Magistrate is satisfied from a report of a police officer or upon other information that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists concerning any land or water or the boundaries thereof, within his local jurisdiction, he shall make an order in writing, stating the grounds of his being so satisfied, and requiring the parties concerned in such dispute to attend his Court in person or by pleader, on a specified date and time and to put in written statements of their respective claims as respects the fact of actual possession of the subject of dispute.

(2) For the purposes of this section, the expression "land or water" includes buildings, markets, fisheries, crops or other produce of land, and the rents or profits of any such property.

(3) A copy of the order shall be served in the manner provided by the Code for the service of a summons upon such person or persons as the Magistrate may direct, and at least one copy shall be published by being affixed to some conspicuous place at or near the subject of dispute.

(4) The Magistrate shall then, without reference to the merits or the claims of any of the parties, to a right to possess the subject of dispute, peruse the statements so put in, hear the parties, receive all such evidence as may be produced by them, take such further evidence, if any as he thinks necessary, and, if possible, decide whether and which of the parties was, at the date of the order made by him under sub-section (1), in possession of the subject of dispute: provided that if it appears to the Magistrate that any party has been forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed within two months next before the date on which the report of a police officer or other information was received by the magistrate, or after that date and before the date of his order under sub-section (1), he may treat the party so dispossessed as if that party had been in possession on the date of his order under sub-section (1).

(5) Nothing in this section shall preclude any party so required to attend, or any other person interested, from showing that no such dispute as aforesaid exists or has existed; and in such case the Magistrate shall cancel his said order, and all further proceedings thereon shall be stayed, but, subject to such cancellation, the order of the Magistrate under sub-section (1)shall be final.

(6) (a) If the Magistrate decides that one of the parties was, or should under the proviso to sub-section (4) be treated as being, in such possession of the said subject, he shall issue an order declaring such party to be entitled to possession thereof until evicted therefrom in due course of law, and forbidding all disturbances of such possession until such eviction; and when he proceeds under the proviso to sub-section (4), may restore to possession the party forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed.

(b) The order made under this sub-section shall be served and published in the manner laid down in sub-section (3).

(7) When any party to any such proceeding dies, the Magistrate may cause the legal representative of the deceased party to be made a party to the proceeding and shall thereupon continue the inquiry, and if any question arises as to who the legal representative of a deceased party for the purposes of such proceeding is, all persons, claiming to be representatives of the deceased party shall be made parties thereto.

(8) If the Magistrate is of opinion that any crop or other produce of the property, the subject of dispute in a proceeding under this section pending before him, is subject to speedy and natural decay, he may make an order for the proper custody or sale of such property, and, upon the completion of the inquiry, shall make such order for the disposal of such property, or the sale-proceeds thereof, as he thinks fit.

(9) The Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, at any stage of the proceeding under this section, on the application of either party, issue a summons to any witness directing him to attend or to produce any document or thing.

(10) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to be in derogation of the powers of the Magistrate to proceed under Section 107.

(7.) FROM the report of Sultan Singh, ASI it is clear that the dispute between Petitioner and Respondent No. 4 was in respect of possession of the property. Petitioner was claiming to be in possession of flat no. 198, swastik Kunj on the basis of Power of Attorney and an agreement, while respondent No. 4 was claiming it to be in her possession. Even if the property belonged to Respondent No. 4, she had admitted that Petitioner had lived in flat no. 53, Swastik Kunj with her even when her husband was alive. It is also evident that original documents and agreement was in custody of Petitioner. Respondent No. 4 was not living at flat no. 198, Swastik Kunj but had gone there with so called labours and the Petitioner found that his lock had been broken. It is also undisputed from the documents placed on record that it was petitioner, who gave a call at '100' to police and made a complaint about breaking open the lock by Respondent No. 4. Thus, clearly the proceedings should have been initiated against Petitioner and Respondents under Section 145 cr. P. C. Though police has power to initiate proceedings under Section 107 cr. P. C. as well, but one is bound to consider if on being threatened of forcible dispossession, a person calls police, does he commit breach of peace. If informing authorities is breach of peace, then better people settle their dispute without seeking police help. Moreover, it was Respondent No. 4, who had gone to the flat and broken the lock. She was not booked under Section 107/151 cr. P. C. and only Petitioner was booked under Section 107/151 Cr. P. C. It is evident that the Petitioner was wrongly arrested and booked under Section 107/151 Cr. P. C. and was wrongly sent to jail. The detention of the Petitioner was illegal. In view of specific provisions of Section 145 Cr. P. C. , the police should have initiated proceedings against both under Section 145 Cr. P. C. and if required under Section 107 Cr. P. C. The attitude of police only fortifies the claim of the Petitioner that the police was in league with Respondent No. 4 and was helping Respondent No. 4 to recover possession from the Petitioner, forcibly.

(8.) THE Petition of the Petitioner is allowed and the proceedings under Section 107/151 Cr. P. C. against him are quashed. The Commissioner of police/respondent No. 2 is directed to initiate proceedings against the erring police officials, who deliberately invoked Section 107/151 Cr. P. C. in an illegal manner in a property dispute where Section 145 Cr. P. C. was to be invoked and wrongly confined Petitioner first in the Police Station and then in the jail. Since, Petitioner was wrongly sent to jail under Section 107/151 Cr. P. C. , I consider that Petitioner is entitled to damages. The Petitioner may claim damages by filing a suit for tortuous liability against the police, however, a token damage of Rs. 50,000/- is awarded to the Petitioner for wrongful confinement of the Petitioner under Section 107/151 Cr. P. C.

(9.) AS far as other reliefs sought by the Petitioner are concerned, the Petitioner is at liberty to take appropriate legal action before the appropriate Court for recovery of possession of the properties, if he has any kind of right and title over the properties. In Writ Petition, the Court cannot entertain the matter with disputed facts. With these directions, the Writ petition stands disposed of.

Judgement

M. K. MUKHERJEE, J. :- This appeal under Section 19 of the Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act, 1987 ('TADA' for short) is directed against the judgment and order dated July 22, 1997 of the Designated Court II, Delhi convicting the appellant for an offence under Section 5 of TADA and sentencing him to suffer rigorous imprisonment for 5 years and to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000/-, and in default of payment of fine to undergo rigorous imprisonment for 2 months more.

2. According to the prosecution case, in the afternoon of March 8, 1990, Sub-Inspector Gopi Chand (P.W. 6) of I.S.B.T. (Inter State Bus Terminus) police post along with Assistant Sub-Inspector Chander Bhan (P.W. 5) and other police personnel was on patrolling duty at the inner gate of I.S.B.T. When they were checking the luggage of passengers they saw the appellant alighting from a bus with a rexin bag. Seeing them he tried to move away briskly . P.W. 6 apprehended him on suspicion and found, on search of his bag, 3 country-made pistols and 12 cartridges. He seized those articles under a memo and put them in separate sealed packets. Along with those articles he forwarded a report to the Kashmere Gate Police Station for registration of a case against the appellant and took up investigation. The seized articles were thereafter sent for examination by the Central Forensic Science Laboratory, which reported that the pistols were in working order and the cartridges were alive. On receipt of that report P.W. 6 filed charge-sheet against the appellant with the requisite sanction of the Deputy Commissioner of Police, North District, New Delhi under Section 39 of the Arms Act, 1959.

3. The appellant pleaded not guilty to the charges levelled against him; and his specific defence was that in the evening of March 6, 1990 when he got down at I.S.B.T. from the bus he boarded at Meerut the police apprehended him, and after detaining him for three days in the police post foisted a false case against him. He asserted that no country-made fire-arms nor cartridges were recovered from him.

4. In support of its case the prosecution examined 7 witnesses of whom P.Ws. 5 and 6 were the witnesses to the recovery and seizure of the fire-arms and ammunitions. The appellant, however, did not examine any witness in his defence but produced before the Court certified copy of a telegram sent by his father to the higher authorities on March 8, 1990, wherein he complained that his son Zahid (the appellant) was arrested by the Police Post, I.S.B.T. on March 6, 1990 and an application that he (the father) moved before a Metropolitan Magistrate, New Delhi on the same day making identical complaint.

5. The Designated Court held that the evidence of P.Ws. 5 and 6 was reliable and could be made the basis for conviction, notwithstanding the fact that no independent witness was examined to corroborate their evidence as the explanation offered by P.Ws. 5 and 6 that none of the members of the public present at the bus terminus agreed to join the search was reasonable. In disbelieving the case made out by the appellant the Designated Court observed that if really he was arrested by the police on March 6, 1990 it was expected of the father of the appellant to send the telegram on that date itself and not on March 8, 1990 at 5.00 P.M. as the telegram indicates. According to the Designated Court, since the appellant was apprehended by the police at 5.30 P.M. on March 8, 1990 it was very likely that the said telegram was sent by his father immediately after his apprehension, to make out a defence.

6. Though, apparently, there is no reason as to why P.Ws. 5 and 6 would implicate the appellant falsely, a closer look into the materials brought on record clearly indicates that it is the defence version which is true and not that of the prosecution, as given out by the above two witnesses. From the application that Kadir Ahmad, father of the appellant, filed before the Metropolitan Magistrate, IV Court, Delhi on March 8, 1990 we find that his allegation therein was that his son was arrested by some officers of I.S.B.T. police post of Kashmere Gate Police Station, Delhi on March 6, 1990 at or about 7.00 P.M. and since then he was in their custody. His further allegation was that even though his son was arrested on that day he was not produced in any Court till then, i.e. March 8, 1990. Accordingly, he prayed that his son be immediately released from custody or in the alternative be produced in Court. On that application the Magistrate passed an order directing the Station House Officer to report by the following day, i.e. March 9, 1990. It further appears that on that very day, (March 8, 1990), the Station House Officer of Kashmere Gate Police Station passed on the said direction of the Magistrate to the Head Constable of I.S.B.T. police post. Though the appellant did not examine his father or any other witness to prove at which hour of the day the above application was filed and moved, it can be safely presumed that it was filed and order of the Magistrate obtained thereon, during Court hours, which ended at 5.00 P.M. Since, according to the prosecution, the appellant was arrested at 5.30 P.M. the above circumstances undoubtedly makes the defence version probable.

7. To confirm whether we would be justified in basing our conclusion on the above circumstance, we called for the Daily Diary Book of the police post containing entry No. 33 dated March 8, 1990, a copy of which (Ext. PW4/A) was exhibited by Head Constable Premvir Singh (P.W. 4) to prove that the patrolling party left the police post at 5.00 P.M. On a careful look of the original entry we, however, find that the time at which the party left, stands interpolated; and even by naked eyes it can be seen that the time of departure of the party which was earlier shown as 6 P.M., was changed to 5 P.M. We further find that to keep the sequence of entries in order, similar interpolations had been made in the earlier two entries: while entry No. 31 which was initially shown to have been made at 5.30 P.M. was subsequently changed to 4.52 P.M. and entry No. 32 earlier made at 5.35 P.M. was changed to 4.55 P.M. P.W. 4, who exhibited a plain copy of D.D. No. 33, testified that he could not produce the original as the same had been destroyed. It is now manifest that the above statement was falsely made by P.W. 4, lest the production of the original diary entry exposed the concerned police officers about the interpolation made. The reasons for the interpolation is not far to seek. If P.Ws. 5 and 6 had left the police post at 6.00 P.M. (as originally shown in the Daily Diary Book entry No. 33) they could not have apprehended the appellant at 5.30 P.M. as testified by them nor could they have prepared the seizure list at the same time (as shown).

8. From the materials on record we have, therefore, no hesitation in concluding that it was only on receipt of the order of the Magistrate as communicated through the Station House Officer of Kashmere Gate Police Station that P.Ws. 5 and 6 along with other police personnel felt it absolutely necessary to justify the detention of the appellant and with that ulterior object cooked up the story of his apprehension at 5.30 P.M. on March 8, 1990 with unauthorised fire arms and ammunitions. Unfortunately, these aspects of the matter were completely overlooked by the Designated Court while accepting the case of the prosecution in preference to that of the defence.

9. We, therefore, allow this appeal and set aside the conviction and sentence of the appellant and acquit him. The appellant who is in jail, be released forthwith.

10. Since the appellant has been made a victim of prolonged illegal incarceration due to machination of P.Ws. 5 and 6 and other police personnel of I.S.B.T. police post we direct the Delhi Government to pay him a sum of Rs. 50,000/- as compensation. The payment should be made within two months from the date of receipt of the order. The State Government will, however, be at liberty to recover the said amount from the erring police officers.

11. From the materials on record, discussed above, we are also of the opinion that it is expedient in the interest of justice that an enquiry should be made in accordance with sub-section (1) of Section 340, Cr.P.C. into commission of offences under Sections 193, 195 and 211, I.P.C. by Sub-Inspector Gopi Chand (P.W. 6), and under Sections 193 and 195, I.P.C. by Assistant Sub-Inspector Chander Bhan (P.W. 5) and Head Constable Premvir Singh (P.W. 4). We, therefore, in exercise of the powers conferred by sub-section (2) of Section 340, Cr.P.C., call upon the above three persons to show cause, on or before July 17, 1998, why a complaint should not be made against them for the aforesaid offences. Let a copy of the judgment along with this order be served upon them through the Commissioner of Police, Delhi. Registry is directed to keep the Daily Diary Book in a sealed cover until further orders of this Court.

Appeal allowed.

Police Atrocities – Police falsely implicated a Journalist who published certain articles against some police officer working in the Traffic Department of the Police at Solapur – Police cooked up a false story of offering of bribe by the applicant and offence u.s. 12, 7 of the prevention of corruption Act was registered against him – Noticing from the nature of allegations the police custody of the accused was not at all necessary – The case was not handed over to Anti-Corruption bureu – It is a glaring example wherein police machinery has attempted to take vengeance against the petitioner – The commissioner of Police shown undue interest in the matter and has acted in contravention of practice of transferring the investigation to Anti Corruption Bureu – Held – Show cause notice issued to Shri. Himmatrao Deshbhratar, Commissioner of Police, Solapur as to why action should not be taken against him for acting contrary to the law and causing undue hardship to a citizen thereby depriving him of his personal liberty as guaranteed under Article 21 of the constitution of India – Notice also issued to Shri. Shirish S. Tandalekar A.C.P. and Shri. Vikas R. Ramugade P.I. who sought police custody of the petitioner as to why action should not also be taken against them for abuse of the powers vested in them.

1. The patent case is a glaring example wherein the police machinery has attempted to take vengeance against the petitioner merely because the petitioner who happens to be a journalist has published certain articles against some police officers working in the Traffic Department of the Police at Solapur.

2. Noticing that from the nature of allegations the police custody of the accused was not at all necessary, the Court had directed the Inspector who is the first informant as also the Investigating Officer who sought police custody of the accused to remain present in this Court today. Accordingly, Shri Shirish Tandalekar, the Assistant Commissioner of Police (Traffic), Solapur and Shri Vikas R. Ramugade, the Senior Inspector of Police attached to Vijapur Naka Police Station are personally present in the Court.

3. In the affidavit filed by Shri Shirish S. Tandalekar, it is stated that on the basis of the complaint lodged by the complainant Vikas Ramugade for the offence punishable under Sections 353 read with Section 34 of IPC and under Section 12, 7 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 was registered at Vijapur Naka Police Station. It is stated that bribe amount was immediately recovered in presence of two panchas.

4. In paragraph 9 certain allegations have been made that the applicant was acting at the behest of Rakesh Tolle, the Editor of Daily Surajya who was interested in grabbing the plot.

5. Prima-facie, I am unable to understand as to how the present applicant can be booked for the offence punishable under Prevention of Corruption Act. Recourse to Section 12 atleast prima-facie would not be available inasmuch as the same pertains to abatement and unless there was a main accused who could be charged under Section 7 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, the present applicant could not have been proceeded by aid of Section 12 of the said Act.

6. Be that as it may, insofar as Prevention of corruption matters are concerned, there is a separate bureau under the Director General of Police, Anti Corruption. The entire matters in the State pertaining to prevention of Corruption are being investigated by the various officers working in the said bureau. It is not in dispute that insofar as Solapur is concerned, there is anti corruption bureau which is manned under the leadership of Dy. Superintendent of Police, Anti Corruption Bureau. In normal circumstances after registering a crime under the Prevention of Corruption Act, the investigation ought to have been handed over by the concerned police officers to the Anti Corruption Bureau.

7. Since in the present case after the complaint was registered at Vijapur Naka police station, the investigation was transferred to Shirish S. Tandalekar who is Assistant Commissioner of Police attached to Traffic Branch, a specific query was made to Shri Tandalekar as to how he came in the picture. He makes a statement in the Court that he was directed by the Commissioner of Police to investigate in the matter.

8. It, therefore, appears that Commissioner of Police has also shown undue interest in the matter and has acted in contravention of practice of transferring the investigation to the Anti Corruption Bureau.

9. Issue notice to Shri Himmatrao Deshbhratar presently working as Commissioner of Police, Solapur as to why an action should not be taken against him for acting contrary to the law and causing undue hardship to a citizen thereby depriving him of his personal liberty as guaranteed under Article 21 of the Constitution of India. The notice be made returnable on 19th July, 2011. The learned APP to communicate the order to the concerned police officer.

10. Notice is also issued to Shri Shirish S. Tandalekar, Asst. Commissioner of Police and Shir Vikas R. Ramugade as to why an action should not also be taken against them for abuse of the powers vested in them. The said officers who are personally present in the Court accept the notice. The notice to them is also made returnable on 19th July, 2011.

Judgement

N. K. JAIN, J. :- The petitioner, mother of two detenus herein, has filed this petition alleging that her sons viz. Raja Reddy and Narayanan alias Narayana Reddy have been detained in Sub Jail, Tiruvellore illegally and prays to produce them before this Court and set them at liberty.

2. It is alleged that the petitioner's son Raja Reddy got married one Malliswari alias Sujata, who left the house on 12-4-1998 on her own, and subsequently, a complaint was lodged with Edurukuppam Police Station, Chittoor District, Andhra Pradesh state, in Cr. No. 33 of 1998 for an offence under Section 498-A, I.P.C. and 'women missing'. It is alleged that on 29-4-1998, the Village Administrative Officer of Tiruttani taluk approached the Sub Inspector of Police, Pallipet Police Station and informed about the finding of the half burnt body of a woman in the forest area and the Sub Inspector of Police, after verification registered a case in Cr. No. 216 of 1998 under Section 302, I.P.C. and informed the same to the second respondent herein. It is further stated that the said Malliswari was seen alive on 26-5-1998 at Tirupati and she had been handed over to the Karvet Nagar Police Station and in her statement under Section 164, Cr. P.C. she had stated that the detenus were in no way responsible for her leaving the matrimonial home. A news item was published in English daily on 1-6-1998 and the petitioner sent telegrams to the Chief Justice of India, New Delhi and to the Chief Justice, High Court, Madras on 5-6-1998, regarding the illegal detention of the detenus and about the fact of the victim girl seem alive. Still the petitioner's sons are in illegal detention. In this H.C.P. the petitioner prays to produce the detenus before this Court and to set them at liberty and also claims compensation.

3. A detailed counter-affidavit has been filed. It is stated in the counter-affidavit that on the information of the Village Administrative Officer, a case was registered and investigation took place. It has been stated that Raja Reddy, one of the detenus herein, gave a voluntary statement and a knife, a gunny bag and a motor cycle were seized, that on the basis of the voluntary statement of Raja Reddy, his brother Narayanan alias Narayana Reddy was interrogated and both the detenus were arrested on 24-5-1998 and produced before Judicial Magistrate No. 1, Tiruttani for remand, and they were remanded till 15-6-1998. It has been further stated that Sengaya Reddy, the father of Malliswari, has further stated that the girl should have been murdered by her husband, Raja Reddy and his family members. Malliswari and Raja Reddy were seen together at 8.00 p.m. on Sunday on 16-5-1998. Other witnesses also reiterated the same statement. It is further stated in the counter-affidavit that on 9-6-1998, when it came to the notice that the said Malliswari is not dead, but alive, she was enquired. It is also stated that Malliswari had stated that unable to bear the ill-treatment and the harassment at the hands of the detenus, she left the matrimonial home. On 10-6-1998, a report had been filed before the Judicial Magistrate No. I, Tiruttani requesting to drop the proceedings and accordingly actions were dropped against the detenus and bail was granted to the detenus in Crl. O.P. No. 8447 of 1998 on 11-6-1998.

4. Learned counsel for the petitioner submitted that on the basis of the voluntary statements given by the detenus, they have been falsely implicated in the commission of the offence of murder and they have been in illegal custody for about 45 days and as such, they are entitled to get compensation. Learned counsel relies on the decisions in Nilabati Behera v. State of Orissa, 1993 SCC (Cri) 527 : (1993 Cri LJ 2899), Punjab and Haryana High Court Bar Association v. State of Punjab, 1996 SCC (Cri) 858; D. K. Basu v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1997 SC 610 : (1997 Cri LJ 743) and in Chandra, B. v. State (1996) 1 LW (Cri) 110 in support of his contention.

5. Nilabati Behera v. State of Orissa (1993 SCC (Cri) 527 : (1993 Cri LJ 2899) is a case relating to a custodial death. In that case, the deceased was taken into police custody, and on the next day the dead body of the deceased with a handcuff and multiple injuries was found by some railway men lying on the railway track. The explanation of the State was that the deceased managed to escape from police custody by chewing off the rope with which he has tied, and that the dead body of the deceased was found on the railway track with multiple injuries which indicated that he was run over by a passing train. The Apex Court did not accept the explanation of the State and held that the Court can direct the State to pay compensation to the victim or his heir by way of 'monetary amends' and redressal. It has also held that the State has strict duty to ensure that a citizen in custody of police or prison is not deprived of his right under Article 21, except in accordance with law. In Punjab and Haryana High Court Bar Association v. State of Punjab, 1996 SCC (Cri) 858 in a case of abduction and alleged murder of an advocate his wife and minor child, the Apex Court considered various decisions and Art. 9(5) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, 1966 that 'anyone who has been the victim of unlawful arrest or detention shall have an enforceable right to compensation' and awarded compensation. In Chandra v. State (1996) 1 LW (Cri) 110 on an earlier occasion, in H.C.P. this Court directed that the detenus would have to seek their remedy in a proper Court of law. It was agitated before Supreme Court. The Supreme Court sent back the matter holding 'that if it is found that the said Balaraman had been illegally detained during this period as claimed by the appellant, the High Court may give appropriate relief in the said proceedings'. Then this Court found that the detenu was in illegal detention and awarded compensation. In D. K. Basu v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1997 SC 610 : (1997 Cri LJ 743) in a case of torture and cruel inhuman or degrading treatment, Their Lordships issued the requirement to be followed in cases of arrest or detention till legal provisions are made in that behalf as preventive measures. Their Lordships observed that any form of torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment would fall within the inhibition of Art. 21 of the Constitution whether it occurs during investigation, interrogation or otherwise. Their Lordships further observed that "it is now a well accepted proposition in most of the jurisdiction, that monetary or pecuniary compensation is an appropriate and indeed an effective and sometimes perhaps the only suitable remedy for redressal of the established infringement of the fundamental right to life of a citizen by the public servants and the State is vicariously liable for their acts'. On the basis of these decisions, the learned counsel for the petitioner prayed for the award of compensation.

6. Learned Additional Public Prosecutor has not disputed the principle laid down in the above cases, but submitted that the above mentioned cases will not be helpful and useful to decide the controversy of compensation in the instant case, as those cases arose on account of custodial death, abduction and murder, torture, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment etc. whereas in this case, on a reasonable suspicion existed and on the basis of the evidence of the witnesses and also on the identification made by the father of Malliswari and villagers only, the detenus were arrested. Learned Additional Public Prosecutor further submitted that the investigating Officer had acted in good faith only. He relied on the decisions in Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, 1994 SCC (Cri) 899 : (1994 Cri LJ 3139) while considering the vires of 3 Acts, and upholding the said Acts, it has been held that the classifications have rational nexus with the object sought to be achieved by the TADA Act and Special Court Act and consequently there is no violation of Art. 14 and that where two procedures exist for two classes of persons both must satisfy the test of Arts. 14 and 21 of the Constitution. It is also observed that if one process is harsh, oppressive, unconscientious, unfair, unjust and unreasonable the same would be unconstitutional". In Kabir Chawla v. State of U. P., 1994 SCC (Cri) 577 the detention order was passed on 9-2-1993 under the National Security Act and the order of detention was not confirmed by order dated 18-2-1993. But, inspite of the said order of the State Government, the petitioner was not released immediately and was kept in illegal detention till 22-2-1993. The Apex Court, without expressing any opinion on the merits of the claim left the petitioner to take recourse to the appropriate remedy available to him in law for redress of this grievance. In State of Tamil Nadu v. R. Arasu, 1998 SCC (Cri.) 847, in a preventive detention case, compensation was awarded on coming to the conclusion that "the sponsoring authority was responsible in not furnishing all the relevant materials before the detaining authority but furnished incorrect (if not false) information to the detaining authority on the basis of which the order of detention had been passed. The Apex Court agreed with that contention. Learned Additional Public Prosecutor, in support of the cases mentioned above, prays for the dismissal of this petition.

7. We have given our careful consideration to the arguments advanced by the learned counsel for the petitioner and the learned Additional Public Prosecutor. We have perused the materials on record. We have gone through the case laws cited by the learned Counsel appearing on either side.

8. So far as the legal position is concerned, there is no doubt that this Court has got power to grant compensation on the public law, in addition to private law. In an appropriate case, compensation can be awarded by this Court. But, each case depends upon the facts of its own.

9. So far as the power of the investigating officer is concerned, investigating officer is duty bound to investigate and to find out the real culprit and on the basis of the evidence so collected and on reasonable suspicion existed he can arrest a person. This is also not in dispute. In the backdrop of these, it is to be seen whether investigation has been conducted in a fair and bona fide manner. According to learned Additional Public Prosecutor, the accused/detenus have been arrested as there was information that Malliswari was missing, that a partly burnt body of a woman found in the forest area, was identified by the father of the said Malliswari and villagers and the bangles and cloth seized from the body of that partly burnt woman was identified as that of Malliswari, by seeing the photograph of that partly burnt woman. There is also evidence that the said Malliswari was last seen with her husband Raja Reddy. To this extent, the arrest of Raja Reddy, on a reasonable suspicion, at the most, can be considered to be a bona fide one. But as per the counter-affidavit of the second respondent, Raja Reddy gave a voluntary statement to the effect that he, with the help of his brother Narayana Reddy, murdered his wife, by stabbing her with a knife, buried in a pit in Kandavanapalli village and later exhumed the body and put it in a gunny bag and carried it to Kanavaymedu village and set fire, and on that basis, the said knife, a gunny bag and motor cycle said to have been used for the commission of that offence, were seized. It is also seen in the counter affidavit, that Narayana Reddy, in his statement has stated that Raja Reddy and he murdered Malliswari. It is settled that confession is an admission of a guilt as the person making said against him. No doubt, the voluntary statement given before Police is not admissible in law, and the admissibility and the relevancy of the material so seized, will ultimately be decided by the Court. The question as to whether the investigation conducted is proper and bona fide, has to be tested on the facts, the victim girl who has been alleged to have been murdered was really found alive later. As culled out, these accused have been arrested for the offence of committing a murder, as stated above, alleging that the body of a partly burnt woman was seen in the forest area and it was identified, on seeing photograph, by Sengaya Naidu and others, as that of Malliswari. But, one thing is clear. Arrest of the detenus, on the basis of the investigation conducted in this case is not fair. The Police have not investigated as to who was the partly burnt woman found in the forest area of the second respondent and so also the real culprit in that case. Had the said Malliswari not been arrived at a later point of time, the position of the accused would have been different. In any case, the real culprit who was responsible for the partly burnt woman, had gone scot free. As investigation played its part, in the absence of Malliswari's presence, prima facie it would proceed to prove the charge framed against the accused. Since Malliswari, who was alleged to have been murdered, was seen alive, it is clear that the so called voluntary statement to the extent stated above, are not recorded with free will and atmosphere. Such type of interrogation in the facts of the case excites suspicion on its voluntariness. It clearly reveals that the voluntary statement from Raja Reddy, and also from Narayana Reddy, was extorted by resorting torture and threat. Even though the detenus have never raised objections regarding the non-compliance of the provisions while arresting the detenus and also not said at any point of time that the girl was alive, it will not help the case of the prosecution in connecting the accused to the crime, on the basis of voluntary statement, more particularly when Malliswari was alive. The act of connecting Narayana Reddy to the crime, on the basis of voluntary statement obtained from Raja Reddy, is not convincing and the possibility to hold that the brother of Raja Reddy has also been falsely implicated in the crime is not ruled out. It is also seen that the investigation was not supervised properly.

10. No doubt, the paper news, by itself, is not admissible, but the fact remains that the victim Malliswari was ultimately found alive. A cursory perusal of the news report and the copies of the telegrams would reveal that the petitioner, a hapless woman, had gone pillar to the post and knocked the doors of the temple of justice with tears and helplessness. Even though as per paper news, everything came to light much earlier, the detenus were granted bail only on 11-6-1998. So we have no hesitation to hold that because of the inaction of the police, such miserable thing had happened. On considering the overall facts and the legal position, we are fully convinced that this is a fit case where personal liberty of two persons, has been deprived of by the carelessness, inaction and unfair investigation of the police, which cannot be said to be bona fide even no bias has been pleaded. In the facts and circumstances of the instant case and even in the absence of any specific allegation of mala fide, the petitioner cannot be deprived of from getting compensation. The decisions cited by the learned Additional Public Prosecutor are not helpful to the facts of the present case. Therefore, the detenus are entitled to get monetary compensation, to compensate their redress.

11. As stated earlier, the State is liable to pay compensation to the detenus, who are the sons of the petitioner herein, in view of the above discussion and the decision of Basu's case (1997 Cri LJ 743) (cited supra). We are of the view that ends of justice would be met if we grant compensation to each of the detenus, a sum of Rs. 50,000/- (Rupees Fifty thousand only) each. The State is free to take action against the Officers/Officials concerned, so that Police personnel will discharge duty/obligation in right direction and without involving innocent persons in grave crimes, as in this case, and will bring transparency and accountability so that the confidence of the public be reposed on police.

12. A copy of this order be sent to Chief Secretary, Government of Tamil Nadu, Madras and Director General of Police, Madras for necessary action.

13. The H.C.P. is ordered accordingly. The detenus are directed to be set at free. The bail bonds executed by the detenus shall stand discharged. The payment of compensation to be made to the detenus directly, within two month from the date of receipt of a copy of this order. Order accordingly.

Mr.K. A. Panchapakesan, for M/s. S. Sadasharan and S. Nagarajan, for Petitioner; Mr. R. Shanmughasundaram, Addl. P.P. on behalf of State.

Judgement

ORDER:- Crl. M. P. No. 8989 of 1989 is a petition u/S. 482, Cr. P.c., filed by the accused in Crime No. 284 of 1989, on the file of the Sub-Inspector of Police, Madurantakam, within the jurisdiction of the Judicial Magistrate, Madurantakam. The petitioner seeks to invoke the inherent powers of this court, to call for the records in Crime No. 284 of 1989 on the file of the respondent-Police Station and quash the first information report and further proceedings in pursuance of the said first information report, as an abuse of process of court.

2. Crl. M.P. No. 8990 ofl989is a petition for stay filed by the accused, pending disposal of Crl. M.P. No. 8989 of l989.

3. Bhaskaran, .J. admitted Crl. M. P. No.8989 of I 989 on 8-8-1 989 and on the same day directed interim stay of further proceedings in Crime No. 284 of l989on the file of the respondent, for two weeks. The stay ordered was continued for three more weeks on 22-8-1989and thereafter it does not appear, that the stay has been extended.

4. Crl. M.P. No. 15798of1989 has been filed by the State represented by the learned Public Prosecutor u/S. 482, Cr. P.C. to vacate the order of stay made in Crl. M.P. No.8989 of 1989 and permit further investigation in Crime NO. 284 of 1989.

5. To arrive at a decision in all these petitions, it may be necessary to deal with certain salient facts. The accused, Ashok Kumar, is a resident of Madurantakam and appears to be a dealer in precious stones. The first informant V. Venkatachalam is a resident of Dharmapuri situated approximately 200 miles away from Madurantakam. It is not disputed that the accused Ashok Kumar and the first informant, Venkatachalam, had business transactions for some length of time. The first information report will also disclose that there had been money dealings as well between the first informant and the accused.

6. The first information report addressed to the Deputy Inspector General of Police, Chengai Anna District, Teynampet, Madras, appears to have been forwarded to the Madurantakam Police Station on 3-7-1989. On the same date the Sub-Inspector of Police, Madurantakam (Law and Order) had obtained an opinion from the Assistant Public Prosecutor II in charge of Madurantakam, that an offence punishable u/S.420, I.P.C. was disclosed, on the averments found in the first information. On 4-7-1989 the complaint of Venkatachalam, the first informant, was registered at I p.m., as Crime No.284 of 1989 and investigation taken up.

7. The date and time of occurrence have been stated to be approximately 3 years prior to 4-7-1989, the date of registration of the crime. The first information report reads as follows in first person:

"I am dealing in precious stones which are used in jewellery. by buying and selling them at different places. In the course of such trade, I had business contacts with Madurantakam Ashok Kumar (accused) and in pursuance thereof, we had money transactions. In the course of such trade relationship, Ashok Kumar told me three years ago, that he would take my Fiat Car M.E.D. 5814, a 1979 Model vehicle, for Rs. 53,000/- and that he himself would discharge Rs. 22,000/- due on a hire purchase for the car, entered into at Bangalore, and for the balance sale consideration, he would give me precious stones. Ashok Kumar stated so before two witnesses, who are respectively T. N. Arjuna Pillai, resident of 39,1. O.M. Street, Saidapet, Vellore and Kandaswamy, Karukuppettai Village, Kancheepuram, Ashok Kumar told before them that he would take the car. He took the car three years ago in 1986 from Dharmapuri to Madurantakam. Meanwhile, Ashok Kumar, alleging that in the business dealing between me and him, I had cheated to the tune of Rs. 10,000, given a false complaint with the influence of his elder brother Ukkam Chand, the ax-Chairman of the Madras Water and Sewerage Board and the case arising out of the said complaint is pending trial at Madurantakam. Now Ashok Kumar is using my Fiat Car M. E. D.5814 with a fake registration certificate book. The original R.C. Book has been deposited by me with the Financier Sohan Finance, 170, VIth Cross, Santhi Nagar, Bangalore, Telephones Nos. 70825 and 28751. I did not take any action against Ashok Kumar till now, since his elder brother had influence in the earlier Government. Hoping that 1 will get justice now, I am preferring this complaint. I request that my Fiat Car M.E.D. 5814 may be seized from Ashok Kumar and restored to my possession."

8. It is on this first information report, that very prompt investigation was initiated on 4-7-1989 and the accused was arrested on 5-7-1989 at 8-20 p.m. and produced before the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Chengalpattu and remanded to Judicial custody. The house of the petitioner in Crl. M.P. No. 8989 of 1989 was searched on 8-7-1989; but nothing incriminating was seized. However, the respondent noticed a light green Fiat Car bearing registration No. M. S. W.8458 in the garage of the petitioner's house, bearing chassis No. P.N. 41471, Engine head No. 1362 GI 1172 and Engine NTo.15549. The two back wheels of the Fiat Car were not to be seen. This car was not seized by the respondent; but the particulars from the R.C. Book were noted.

9. On 12-7- 1989 the court of Session, Chengalpattu directed the enlargement of the petitioner on bail on certain conditions, which were relaxed by this court on 17-7-1989.

10. Mr. K.A. Panchapakesan, learned counsel appearing for the petitioner, while referring to the averments in the first information report, relating to the prosecution launched against the first informant by the petitioner, brought to my notice that the said complaint was registered on 2-9-1985 and Venkatachalam was arrested and released soon thereafter and the case is now pending trial, before the Judicial Magistrate, Madurantakam. The cheating referred to in that complaint was on 15-8-1985. After meticulously taking me through the contents of the impugned first information report, he contended that it does not disclose any cognizable offence, which alone would, in law, permit the police to proceed with the investigation of the case. If no cognizable offence is disclosed, it is his submission, that the police would not have any authority to take up investigation and on that sole ground the impugned first information report will have to be quashed. He further contended that the contents of the first information report, disclose that the car was taken three years ago in or about 1986 from Dharmapuri and, therefore, the Madurantakam Police will have no jurisdiction to investigate, on the impugned first information report, u/S. 156, Cr. P.C. which empowers any officer in charge of the police station to investigate any cognizable case, without the order of the Magistrate having jurisdiction over the local area within the limits of such station. It is, therefore, his argument that the investigation by Madurantakam Police is without jurisdiction. The complaint, if it discloses a cognizable offence, must have been forwarded by Madurantakam Police to the concerned jurisdiction Police Station, for investigation and report. He also contended that the petitioner, Ashok Kumar, had filed a private complaint against the District Superintendent of Police, Chengalpattu, which has been taken on file as C.C. No. 75 of 1989 by the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Chengalpattu, and was posted for enquiry on 6-7-1989. To prevent his appearance before the Chief Judicial Magistrate, in the guise of an investigation on a three year belated complaint, which did not disclose any offence, with a view to harass the petitioner, these proceedings have been initiated which, on the face of it, portray an abuse of process of court. In passing, he would submit that the complaint of the petitioner against Venkatachalam preferred on 2-9- 1985 and referred to in the impugned FIR would show that even from 1-9-1984, the relationship between the petitioner and Venkatachalam had not been smooth, and that on an earlier complaint lodged in or about February, 1985 by the petitioner against Venkatachalam, the latter promised to pay the money he owed to the petitioner, in the precious stones trade, after adjustment of the monies seized from him by the police? on such complaint. Therefore, according to the counsel the alleged car transaction is a myth.

11. Per contra, Thiru, R. Shanmughasundaram, the learned Additional Public Prosecutor vehemently contended, that the investigation could not be proceeded with in view of the stay granted by this Court. The investigation done so far revealed vital clues to attract the offence u/S. 420, IPC. The investigation is at a standstill now and if investigation was not to be permitted, it would lead to accumulation of cases without proper disposal. According to him, it is not the stage when this Court could stifle the investigation, when, according to him, the averments in the complaint prima facie disclose an offence u/S.420, IPC. He would further contend that at the time of search of the residence of the petitioner, a Fiat Car bearing registration No. M.S.W. 8458 was found in the Car shed. The entry in the R. C. Book relating. to that car indicated that one Ganesan was the owner of the Car. The registration certificate showed that it belonged to a goods vehicle and not to a Fiat Car. Therefore, there was reasonable suspicion that the Fiat Car seen in the Car shed of the petitioner may be connected with the Fiat Car M.E.D. 5814, which is the subject matter of the crime. He would also contend that quashing of a first information report will be an extraordinary remedy and the petitioner, if aggrieved, could always invoke the inherent powers of this court after filing of the final report. He would also urge that the aspect of mala fides should not be gone into at this stage. The prosecution has not denied the pendency of a case against Venkatachalam and the Deputy Superintendent of Police, Chengalpattu, initiated at the instance of the accused, Ashok Kumar.

12. In view of nature of contentions urged by either counsel, I directed the production of the investigation record, to find out the material collected during investigation, till it was stayed by this court, on 8-8-1989. Though after the middle of September, there has been no stay of investigation, investigation had not been carried out and the prosecution had come out with a petition to vacate the stay. This petition to vacate the stay was filed early in Nov.1989 and ultimately the main petition itself is being disposed of now.

13. Normally, at this stage, where a complaint has been made and investigation has just been initiated, it may not be expedient to go into the question of mala fides, put forth by the learned counsel for the petitioner. However, certain basic facts, as they appear in the records, will have to be stated. The effect of those materials without adding or subtracting or appreciating the truth or otherwise of such material, if it is possible to conclude that further continuation of investigation will be an abuse of process of law, such investigation could be quashed and there is no dearth of authority for such a proposition.

14. The first information report dated 13-6-1989, stated to have been sent by post from Dharmapuri to the Deputy Inspector General of Police, Chengai, Anna District, appears to bear an initial of the D.S.P., D.I.G., on the very same date. This has been forwarded on 28-6-1989 to the Deputy Superintendent of Police, Chengalpattu, who, in turn, had directed investigation and report by the Inspector of Police "H". On 4-7-1989 the Inspector of Police "H" had directed the S.I. H- I Crime to investigate and report. It is only thereafter the FIR was registered as a crime. In between, on 3-7-1989 the opinion of the Assistant Public Prosecutor had been obtained by the Sub Inspector of Police, (Law and Order). The record produced shows that on 8-7-1989, while the Sub-Inspector of Police. had searched the house of the petitioner, he had noted down the details of the Fiat Car bearing registration No. M.S.W. 8458 found in the garage of the petitioner-The contents of the R.C. Book relating to M.S.W. 8458 form part of the case diary. The record clearly indicates that M.S.W. 8458, which was originally a goods vehicle, was later altered into a motor car. Initially it was a closed van manufactured in 1961 run on diesel and it was later converted on 3-10-1986 into a motor car with a Fiat body with the necessary permission and such permission which had been sanctioned forms part of the entries, in the registration certificate. The vehicle, which was originally in the name of one Ganesan, has been transferred to the name of the petitioner on 26-3-1986. It is also seen from the case diary that after the registration of the complaint at I p.m. on 4-7-1989, the Sub-Inspector of Police went over to the residence of the petitioner and peeped into the car shed, which was locked, and found that there was a Fiat car inside, though clearly the details of the car were not visible. Therefore, he deemed it necessary to enquire the first informant. He proceeded to Dharmapuri and examined Venkatachalam and recorded his statement on 4-7- 1989. On the same day he went over to Vellore and examined witness Arjuna Pillai and later examined witness Kandaswamy at Conjeevaram. He halted at Conjeevaram on the night of 4th and on the morning of 5th reached Madurantakam and examined witnesses Shanmugham, Thamin, Ansari and Kumar. It was only late that evening at 6 p.m., the accused was arrested. Dharmapuri is approximately at a distance of over 200 miles, from Madras and Vellore is about 90 miles away from Madras. Conjeevaram is at a distance of 45 miles from Madras, while Madurantakam is exactly 50 miles from Madras. After the registration of the complaint at 1 p.m. at Madurantakam on 4-7-1989, it prima facie appears impossible to go over to Dharmapuri, examine the complainant, reach Vellore on the same night for Examination of witnesses and still find it possible to reach Conjeevaram the very night itself for examination of a witness at Conjeevaram, before returning to Madurantakam on the next morning. This appears to be stranger than fiction. It may be, that at this stage the Court cannot appreciate the scope and nature of investigation carried out by the agency entrusted with such task, but when an impracticable factor stares at the face, the Court cannot hide its head, as an ostrich and prefer to be in oblivion to basic circumstances. It is further seen from the material collected during investigation, that even in April, 1985, Venkatachalam and others had moved this court and obtained anticipatory bail on an alleged complaint by Ashok Kumar, the accused in this crime. This fact is clear from the petition filed by Venkatachalam and others u/S. 482, Cr. P.C., in Crl. M.P. No. 2974 of 1985 and the order of Singaravelu, J., directing the release of Venkatachalam and others on bail, in the event of arrest, on 24-4-1985, made in the said petition. It is also noticed from the records produced by the respondent that on the reverse of the sheet, where the statement of Kumar u/S.161, Cr. P.C. has been recorded in carbon on 5-7-1989, (there are two carbon copies of the statement of the witness apart from the original written in ink), an endorsement had been made (on the second carbon copy) as follows :

"Charge sheet stage. Draft Charge to be prepared. Since High Court stayed I. case.....suitable order awaiting."

This endorsement also shows that the investigation is almost over and only the draft charge sheet had to be prepared, before forwarding a final report to court.

15. Since I found that details, as recorded in the R.C. Book of the car M.S.W.8458, had been noted by the respondent, I called for the production of the registration certificate of the car M.S.W. 8458, by the petitioner through his counsel, and the same was produced in court. The learned Additional Public Prosecutor was permitted to peruse the registration certificate. I have also carefully gone into the contents of the registration certificate, which are as follows:-

"The registration certificate shows that the original owner of M.S.W. 8458, a goods vehicle was R. C. Ganesan of Madras. It was initially a closed standard ten van manufactured in 1961. The registration certificate was issued on 9-3-1962 Subsequently it was transferred with effect from 10-7-1969 to Major S.A. Hakim, Madras, and later with effect from 30-10-1972 in the name of W.S. Riaz Ahamed, Madras-21. With effect from 25-11-1985 the transferee was S.A. Ahmed of Madras. The petitioner became the owner of this vehicle from 26-3-1986. With effect from 19-5-1987 alterations were made in the vehicle by which the goods vehicle was changed into a motor car and the fuel fused was changed to petrol from diesel. There was a change in the engine number, but the chassis number remained the same. There was a slight difference in the unladen weight, after alteration."

16. The power to quash a criminal proceedings, where the first information report ex facie makes out no offence, has been considered by the Supreme Court in a series of cases starting from Kapur's case AIR 1960 SC 866: 1960 Cri LJ 1239. The latest decision of the Supreme Court is reported in 1989 SCC (Crl.) 713: 1989 Cri LJ 2301 decided by a Bench of three judges in State of U.P. v. R. K. Srivastava. The Supreme Court has observed that it was now a well settled principle of law, that if the allegations made in the FIR taken at their face value and accepted in their entirety do not constitute an offence, the criminal proceedings -instituted on the basis of such FIR should be quashed. In R.P. Kapur v. State of Punjab AIR 1960 SC 866: 1960 Cri LJ 1239 the Supreme Court held that the inherent jurisdiction of the High Court can be exercised to quash proceeding, in a proper case, either to prevent the abuse of the process of any Court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice. Ordinarily criminal proceedings instituted against an accused person must be tried under the provisions of the Code and the High Court would be reluctant to interfere with such proceedings at an interlocutory stage. It was not possible, desirable or expedient to lay down any inflexible rule which would govern the exercise of this inherent jurisdiction. Some of the categories of cases where inherent jurisdiction to quash proceedings can and should he exercised are (at page 1242 of 1960 Cri LJ):

(1) Where the allegations in the first information report or the complaint even if they are taken at their face value and accepted in their entirety, did not constitute the offence alleged, in such cases no question of appreciating evidence arises; it is a matter merely of looking at the complaint or the first information report to decide whether the offence alleged is disclosed or not;

(2) Where the allegations made against the accused persons do constitute an offence alleged, but there is either no legal evidence adduced in support of the case or the evidence adduced clearly or manifestly fails to prove the charge. A clear distinction between a case where there is no legal evidence or where there is evidence which is manifestly and clearly inconsistent with the accusation made and cases where there is legal evidence, which on its appreciation, may or may not support the accusation in question will have to be borne in mind; and

(3) Where there is a legal bar against the institution or continuance of the criminal proceeding in respect of the offence alleged.

17. It is now fairly settled, that the broad proposition, that the Court can in no case interfere with the investigation of the case, does not appear to be justified. At the same time it admits of no doubt as observed in Nazir Ahmed's case AIR 1945 PC 18: 1946 Cri LJ 413 that the power of investigation so far as it vests exclusively in the police or investigating agency is not to be interfered with, by the Courts and the investigating agency should be left to carry on investigation without any interference. This only postulates, that so long as the investigation is in accordance with law, it cannot be interfered with. That does not mean that immunity is given to investigation, which is not in consonance with the relevant provisions of law, governing the particular ease. In a nutshell, there cannot be a blanket bar against the quashing of a proceeding at the investigative stage. If the High Court is convinced that the first information report does not disclose a cognizable silence and that the continuation of an investigation, based on no foundation, would amount to an abuse of power of police, necessitating interference to secure the ends of justice the inherent power will have to be exercised. This statutory power u/S. 482, Cr. P.C. has to be exercised sparingly with circumspection, in the rarest of rare cases, to do real and substantive justice for the administration of which alone it exists or to prevent the abuse of the process of the court.

18. Even in Emperor v. Nazir Ahmad AIR 1945 PC 18: 1946 Cri LJ 413, it was observed as follows:-

"No doubt if no cognizable offence is disclosed, and still more if no offence of any kind is disclosed, the police would have no authority to undertake an investigation and for this reason Newsam J., may well have decided rightly in M.M.S.T. Chidambaram v. Shanmugam Pillai, AIR 1938 Mad 129 : 1939 Cri LJ 261. But that is not this case."

The observation of Newsam, J., can also be usefully extracted, though it related to a private complaint.
Since prevention is always better than cure, the obligation to prevent specious and spiteful criminal prosecutions for actions which, though strictly dishonourable, yet do not amount to crimes, is one that must never be shirked".
19. Before going into the arena of the law laid down by the Supreme Court and other High Courts on the pre-requisites, for quashing a first information report, a scan of S.154, Cr. P.C. indicates that on every information, relating to the commission of a cognizable offence, the power of the police to investigate sets in. In a non-cognizable case a police officer is barred from investigating without an order from the Magistrate. S. 156, Cr. P.C. furnishes the power to the Police Officer to investigate a cognizable case, without an order of the Magistrate, but it is confined to the local area within the limits of such station and within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate of the local area. S. 157, Cr. P.C. makes it abundantly clear that if, from information received or otherwise, an officer in charge of a police station has reason to suspect the commission of an offence which he is empowered to investigate u/S. 156, Cr. P.C. he shall forthwith send a report of the same to a Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of such offence upon a police report and shall proceed in person, or shall depute one of his subordinate officers, to proceed, to the spot, to investigate the facts and circumstances of the case…….Therefore, the statutory sanction, which can form the foundation for a lawful investigation by the Police will be a reasonable suspicion of the commission of a cognizable offence. If the information that the police officer does not disclose any cognizable offence, the statutory mandate to commence investigation would be absence and lacking. Even if the first information report, which cannot be treated as an encyclopaedia, contains only certain facts, which could genuinely lead to a reasonable belief that a cognizable offence had been committed, the High Court must be slow in exercising its inherent powers to quash the first information report and stifle the investigation. In other words, even if the first information report does not come within the ambit straightway of a cognizable offence, if the material collected subsequently disclose, the commission of a cognizable offence, the police cannot be halted in their tracks. If the first information report does not disclose a cognizable offence, the Court shall exercise its jurisdiction, once it is satisfied that even when challenged the investigating agency, on the basis of all the material collected, was unable to show any reasonable suspicion of the commission of a cognizable offence, and a patent harassment of the accused was obvious, amounting to clear abuse of power by the police. The salutary inherent power will then have to be necessarily exercised, as otherwise the contemplation to secure the ends of justice in S.482, Cr. P.C. would become a dead letter.
20. In S. N. Sharma v. Bipen Kumar Tiwari, AIR 1970 SC 786: 1970 Cri LJ 764, the Supreme Court observed (at page 767; 1970 Cri LJ):
"It appears to us that, though the Code of Criminal Procedure gives to the police unfettered power to investigate all cases where they suspect that a cognizable offence has been committed in appropriate cases, an aggrieved person can always seek a remedy by invoking the power of the High Court under Art.226 of the Constitution of India under which, if the High Court could be convinced that the power of investigation has been exercised by a police officer mala fide, the High Court can always issue a Writ of Mandamus restraining the police officer from misusing his legal powers."
21. The availability of power exercisable u/ S.482, Cr. P.C. in appropriate cases equally, as it could be done by the High Court acting under Art. 226 of the Constitution of India has been confirmed by the Supreme Court in AIR 1975 SC 495: 1975 Cri LJ 325

(Delhi Development Authority v. Smt. Lila D. Bhagat). In that case the Supreme Court laid down the law by stating that in an appropriate case it may be, rather, is, permissible to protect a person from illegal and vexatious prosecution by grant of an appropriate writ or, in exercise of the inherent or revisional powers of the High Court. It is, therefore, certain that there is express authority that a proceeding initiated under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, can be quashed by the High Court either under the extraordinary powers under Art.226 of the Constitution of India or under the inherent powers u/S.482, Cr. P.C. or under the revisional power u/S. 397, Cr. P.C.

22. As observed by the Orissa High Court in Suresh Chandra Swain v. State of Orissa, (1988 Cri. LJ 1175) there can be no logic to say that powers which are exercisable in respect of proceedings, cannot be applied in respect of investigations, particularly when S. 482, Cr. P.C. itself does not clamp any limitations therein as suggested, though however, it may be true that u/S.397 obviously an investigation cannot probably be quashed since that section empowers the High Court or the Sessions Judge, as the case may be, to call for and examine the records of any proceeding before any inferior criminal court only.

23. In Sejappan Madi Mallapon v. State of Mysore, AIR 1966 Mysore 152: 1966 Cri LJ 677 a Division Bench of the Mysore High Court, while considering the amplitude of the power of the High Court u/S.561(A), Cr.P.C. (corresponding to S.482, Cr. P.C.) held that the section was wide enough to enable it, in a proper case to stop the investigation which should never have commenced or to make which there was no power under the Criminal Procedure Code. It would, however be neither necessary nor possible to make an exhaustive examination of all those cases in which, the High Court could under the Section, exercise its inherent power with respect to an investigation commenced by the police. That power is always exercisable, where there is a misuse of power by the police, or there is the commencement of an investigation without the requisite authority and the High Court considered it necessary to exercise its inherent power, to secure the ends of justice. If, as noticed by the Supreme Court in S. N. Sharma's case an aggrieved person has a remedy by invoking Art. 226 of the Constitution, equally the enunciation of law by the Supreme Court in the State of Karnataka v. L. Muniswami, (AIR 1977 SC 1489: 1977 Cri LJ 1125), with regard to the power u/S.482, Cr. P.C. extracted hereunder cannot be overlooked (at page 1128; 1977 Cri LJ) :-

" In the exercise of this wholesome power, the High Court is entitled to quash a proceeding if it comes to the conclusion that allowing the proceeding to continue would be an abuse of the process of the Court or that the ends of justice require that the proceeding ought to be quashed. The saving of the High Court's inherent powers, both in civil and criminal matters, is designed to achieve a salutary public purpose which is that a court proceeding ought not to be permitted degenerate into a weapon of harassment or prosecution. In a criminal case, the veiled object behind a lame prosecution, the very nature of the material in which the structure of the prosecution rests and the like would justify the High Court in quashing the proceeding in the interest of justice. The ends of justice are higher than the ends of mere law though justice has got to be administered according to laws made by the legislature. The compelling necessity for making these observations is that without a proper realization of the object and purpose of the provision which seeks to save the inherent powers of the High Court to do justice between the State and its subjects, it would be impossible to appreciate the width and contours of that salient jurisdiction."

xx xx xx xx xx xx xx xx xx xx xx xx xx xx xx xx xx

And again,

..... Considerations justifying the exercise of inherent powers for securing the ends of justice naturally vary from case to case and a jurisdiction as wholesome as the one conferred by S.482 ought not to be encashed within the strait-jacket of a rigid formula."

24. A Full Bench of the Punjab and Haryana High Court in Vinod Kumar v. State of Punjab (AIR 1982 P and H 372), after extensively quoting the case law, held that, however, there was no reason why the identical relief which could be accorded to an aggrieved person under Art. 226 of the Constitution cannot be so accorded in the exercise of its inherent powers u/S.482, Cr. P.C., especially when the language of this provision was of a wider amplitude and has been authoritatively so held by the Supreme Court in the State of Karnataka v. L. Munuswamy, AIR 1977 SC 1489: 1977 Cri LJ 1125.

25. In the case of State of West Bengal v. Swapan Kumar Guha, AIR 1982 SC 949: 1982 Cri LJ 819, after referring to the earlier pronouncements, Chandrachud, C.J. observed as follows (at page 828; 1982 Cri LJ):

"The condition precedent to the commencement of investigation u/S.157 of the Code, is that the FIR must disclose, prima facie, that a cognizable offence has been committed. It is wrong to suppose that the police have an unfettered discretion to commence investigation u/S.157 of the Code. Their right of inquiry is conditional by the existence of reason to suspect the commission of cognizable offence and they cannot, reasonably, have reason so to suspect unless the FIR, prima facie, discloses the commission of such offence. If that condition is satisfied, the investigation must go on and the rule in Khwaja Nazir Ahmed will apply. The Court has then no power to stop the investigation, for to do so would be to trench upon the lawful power of the police to investigate into cognizable offences. On the other hand, if the FIR does not disclose the commission of a cognizable offences would be justified in quashing the investigation on the basis of the information as laid or received."

In the same case Amarendra Nath Sen, J. had the following observations to make:-

"In my opinion, the legal position is well settled. The legal position appears to be that if an offence is disclosed, the Court will not normally interfere with an investigation into the case and will permit investigation into the offence alleged to be completed; if, however, the materials do not disclose an offence, no investigation should normally be permitted. The observations of the Judicial Committee and the observations of this court in the various decisions which I have earlier quoted, make this position abundantly clear. The propositions enunciated by the Judicial Committee and this Court in the various decisions which I have earlier noted are based on sound principles of justice. Once an offence is disclosed an investigation into the offence must necessarily follow in the interests of justice. If, however, no offence is disclosed, an investigation cannot be permitted, as any investigation, in the absence of any offence being disclosed, will result in unnecessary harassment to a party, whose liberty and property may be put to jeopardy for nothing. The liberty and property of any individual are sacred and sacrosanct and the Court zealously guards them and protects them."

26. In the same case the view of the Supreme Court was, that the disclosure of an offence or otherwise in the first information report, would depend on the facts and circumstances of each particular case. In the course of such consideration the Court has mainly to take into consideration the complaint or the FIR and may in appropriate cases take into consideration the relevant facts and circumstances of the case. On a consideration of all the relevant materials, the court has to come to the conclusion whether the offence is disclosed or not. If, on a consideration of the relevant material, the Court is satisfied that no offence in disclosed, it will be the duty of the Court to interfere with any investigation and to stop the same, to prevent any kind of uncalled for and unnecessary harassment to an individual. This power under S. 482, Cr. P.C. cannot be exercised in a routine case, where information of an offence or offences had been lodged and the investigation had commenced, search and seizure followed and the suspects arrested. However, in exceptional cases where non-interference would result to miscarriage of justice. the Court and the judicial process, should interfere at the stage of investigation. It will be very relevant at this stage to quote the observations of the Supreme Court in Madhavrao Jiwajirao Scindia v. Sambhajirao Chandrojirao Angre, AIR 1988 SC 709 : 1988 Cri L J 853 (at page 855; 1988 Cri LJ) :

"The legal position is well settled that when a prosecution at the initial stage is asked to be quashed the test to be applied by the Court is as to whether the uncontroverted allegations as made prima facie establish the offence. It is also for the Court to take into consideration any special features which appear in a particular case to consider whether it is expedient and in the interest of justice to permit a prosecution to continue. This is so on the basis that the Court cannot be utilised for any oblique purposes and where in the opinion of the Court chances of penultimate conviction are bleak, and therefore, no useful purpose is likely to be served by allowing a criminal prosecution to continue, the Court may while talking into consideration the Special facts of a case also quash the proceeding even though it may be at a preliminary stage."

27. The authoritative enunciation of law having been narrated, let us now turn to the facts of the case at hand. The contents of the first information report extracted earlier in the order, show that the first informant and the accused (Petitioner) had business dealings in finance and precious stones and in the course of such business, about 3 years prior to 13-6-1989, the petitioner offered to take the Fiat Car MED 5814, belonging to the first informant, for a value of Rs. 53,000/- and towards the sale consideration, he agreed to discharge the hire purchase then in favour of a Financier at Bangalore and for the remaining, offered precious stones in the trade of which, both of them had incessant contacts in the past. The complaint does not speak about any deception practiced by the petitioner. Nothing is stated about the fraudulent or dishonest inducement practiced, to deliver any property or about the intentional inducement to do or omit to do anything which the first informant otherwise would not have done. I am unable to find the averments in the first information report, disclosing an offence u/S.420, IPC for which offence the Crime has been registered. Further on the face of the complaint, it is clear that the car was taken away by the petitioner, from the first informant, at Dharmapuri and driven to Madurantakam. Prima facie, this averment would indicate, that the commission of the offence, if any, at all was at Dharmapuri and not within the local jurisdiction of the Madurantakam police. However, if the allegations in the FIR are taken at their face value, it only discloses a transaction in the course of trade dealings, between both the parties which may, if true, give rise to a civil liability and cannot be christened as a Crime.

28. At a late stage the learned Additional Public Prosecutor contended that the statements recorded u/S. 161, Cr. P.C. will show that the initial talk was at Madurantakam between the first informant and the petitioner, and the car had been taken away on 10-4-1985 and not in 1986 as alleged in the complaint. This argument was countered, by contending that in fact the car had been taken away by the petitioner on 10-4-1985, the inaction of the first informant after 24-4-1985, when he was directed to be enlarged on bail, in the event of arrest was inexplicable. The complaint would then be belated by 4 years and 2 months.

29. The very pattern, in which the complaint received by post, had been taken emergent notice, of leading to an alleged impossible visit to Dharmapuri, Vellore and Conjeevaram on the same night and the subsequent arrest of the petitioner, a day prior to the hearing of his private complaint against the Deputy Superintendent of Police-in-charge of the District, within whose jurisdiction Madurantakam Police Station is situated, indisputably indicates that on a complaint, which does not disclose any cognizable offence, action had been taken, with an oblique motive. The manner in which similar complaints regarding cognizable offences of this nature are dealt with by the police, cannot escape judicial notice, and on facts if everything prior to the arrest of the petitioner had been so stage managed, the process of justice cannot but raise its eyebrows. That is not all. There cannot be even a reasonable suspicion of the commission of a cognizable offence, because the first information report itself discloses, that at the instance of the petitioner, the first informant was prosecuted and the proceedings were pending in Court.

30. The one other averment in the complaint that the petitioner was using the Fiat Car MED 5814 belonging to the first informant, with a fake R.C. book did entail anxious consideration, about the possibility of not halting investigation at this stage. I specifically questioned the learned Additional Public Prosecutor on this aspect and attempted to find out if the R.C. book concerning the other Fiat Car MSW 8458 had any bearing on this averment. After being instructed by the investigating officer, the learned Additional Public Prosecutor submitted that MSW 8458 was a goods vehicle and not a car and that is what had been alleged in the affidavit filed by the Sub Inspector of Police to vacate the order of stay of investigation made by this Court at the time of the admission of this petition, it will be very dangerous to arrive at a decision on the basis of the affidavit of the petitioner or the counter affidavit of the investigating officer, to consider about the scope of the exercise of the inherent power. Since I had noticed in the investigation record, entries regarding MSW 8458, which showed that the vehicle, which was a van originally, had teen converted into a car. I directed the learned counsel for the petitioner to produce the registration certificate of MSW 8458. A perusal of the contents of the registration certificate shows that the petitioner is the owner of this car with effect from 26-3-1986. The registration certificate also shows that alterations had been made to this van even in 1987 and all that form part of the entries in the said book. It is not as though the investigating officer was not aware of these details, for I find an entry in the record produced about the conversion of this goods vehicle into a car. Thus the two cars have no connecting link.

31. One other aspect, which the learned Additional Public Prosecutor submitted on the basis of the affidavit of the investigating officer is that the Financier did not produce the Registration Certificate of the Car MED 5814, in spite of several notices and even when the investigating Officer met the Financier in person on several occasions with a request to produce the R.C. Book. The notice to the Financier had been given on 31-7-1989, 9 days prior to the order of stay made by this Court and it passes one's comprehension, if the investigating agency was so helpless. in not being able to seize the registration book from the Financier if, in fact, there was any seriousness about this matter, after the arrest of the petitioner. There is not even an averment in the FIR that the Financier at Bangalore had complained of non-payment of hire charges, or was insisting the first informant to pay the dues. In the event of non-payment of hire charges, it will be rather add, that the Financier did not take efforts to seize the car., which was within his power under the hire purchase agreement. All these factors are stated, for if we look at from any angle, there cannot be any reasonable suspicion, in the mind of the police officer, about the commission of a cognizable offences. The case records produced show that the investigation was almost complete and a draft charge sheet was to be prepared and meanwhile, the High Court had stayed the proceedings. If that be so, it is very clear that there is no material whatsoever even to base a foundation, that the Car MED 5814 was being used by the petitioner with a fake R.C. book. The investigating officer, who must have noticed from the records produced the order of bail obtained by the first informant from this court, on a complaint made by the petitioner even in April. 1985, should have at least then indicated that there was no reason whatsoever to continue the investigation further, but an unfortunate stand has been taken, that vital clues were revealed in the investigation done so far, which is not at all reflected in the material produced before court.

32. The learned Additional Public Prosecutor submitted that the jurisdiction of the police officer to investigate could not be gone into at this stage, since the statement recorded u/S. 161, Cr. P.C. at Dharmapuri, from the first informant, disclosed that the initial talk by the petitioner, of taking the first informant's car, took place at Madurantakam, though the car was taken from the first informant's possession at Dharmapuri.

33. The Allahabad High Court in Bholanath v. State (1956 All LJ 700) held that u/S. 156, Cr. P.C. a police officer in charge of a police station can investigate only those cases which relate to the local area. Under this section the police officer is not empowered to investigate cases which do not relate to his circle. The detailed facts, as stated earlier, would inevitably show that there was an anxiety on the part of the Madurantakam police to clutch at jurisdiction, which they did not possess.

34. The observation of the Supreme Court in the State of West Bengal v. Swapan Kumar Guha, AIR 1982 SC 949: 1982 Cri LJ 819 certainly permits this Court in appropriate cases to take into consideration the relevant facts and circumstances, after mainly taking into consideration the complaint or the FIR. The Patna High Court in Subhash Agarwal v. State of Bihar (1989 Cri LJ 1752) has observed that the materials subsequently collected in the course of investigation, could also be taken note of, apart from the contents of the FIR to arrive at a conclusion whether the continuation of the investigation would amount to an abuse of power by the police, necessitating interference to secure the ends of justice. The Full Bench of Punjab and Haryana High Court in Vinod Kumar v. State (AIR 1982 P. and H. 372) took the view that the requisite pre-conditions for the exercise of the power would stand satisfied under the following circumstances without being exhaustive those were briefly summaried as under (at page 382 P. and H.; AIR 1982:-

(i) when the first information report, even if accepted as true, discloses no reasonable suspicion of the commission of a cognizable offence:

(ii) when the materials subsequently collected in the course of an investigation further disclose no such cognizable offence at all;

(iii) When the continuation of such investigation would amount to an abuse of power by the police thus necessitating interference in the ends of justice; and

(iv) that even if the first information report or its subsequent investigation purports to raise a suspicion of a cognizable offence, the High Court can still quash if it is convinced that the power of investigation has been exercised mala fide."

35. On a careful, deep and anxious consideration, after excluding the factual details, which cannot be gone into at this stage, the inescapable conclusions are:-

(a) The first information report does not disclose a cognizable offence;

(b) Even the material collected during investigation, which from the endorsement made, indicate that the investigation has reached the stage of drafting the charge sheet, does not disclose a reasonable suspicion of the commission of a cognizable offence.

(c) The very manner in which an unusually quick and spontaneous investigation had been commenced in the background of several infirmities pointed out, without any possible or attempted explanation, portrays abuse of police power; and

(iv) That even if the first information report purported to raise a suspicion of the commission of a cognizable offence of the user of a fake registration book, the subsequent investigation has negatived it and the power to quash has to be necessarily exercised, for the investigation commenced and pursued lacks bona fides.

This is one of those rarest of rare cases, where the liberty of an individual, so sacred and sacrosant has to be protected zealously by the court as observed by Amarendra Nath Sen, J., in the State of West Bengal v. Swapan Kumar Guha, AIR 1982 SC 949: 1982 Cri LJ 819.

36. In view of the discussion above, I am constrained to quash all the proceedings taken in pursuance of the first information report registered in Crime No. 284 of 1989, since there is no legal sanction either to initiate investigation or to further continue it. Crl. M. P. No. 8989/89 is allowed. No order is necessary in Crl. M.P. Nos.8990 and 15798 of 1989 in view of the orders passed in Crl. M.P. No. 8989 of 1989.

Order accordingly.

JUDGEMENT

(1.) Leave granted.

(2.) These appeals and other connected appeals have been preferred against the judgment and order dated 22.12.2009 of the High Court of Gujarat at Ahmedabad, passed in Special Criminal Application Nos. 1675/2008, 1679/2008 with Crl. Misc. Application Nos. 8249/2009, 8361/2009, 8363/2009 and 7687/2009.

(3.) Facts and circumstances giving rise to the present cases are that on 7.7.2008, some altercation took place between members of the Bharwad and the Koli Patel communities over the plying of rickshaws in the area surrounding Dhedhal village of Distt. Ahmedabad, Gujarat. The Bharwad community had been preventing the Koli Patels from running their rickshaws in the said area. On the next day, i.e. on 8.7.2008, case No. C.R.No.I- 154/2008, was registered at 17:30 hours in the Bavla Police Station under Sections 147, 148, 149, 302, 307, 332, 333, 436 and 427 of the Indian Penal Code, 1860 (hereinafter called as "IPC") read with Section 135 of the Bombay Police Act, 1951 (for short "BP Act") and Sections 3, 7 of Prevention of Damages of Public Property Act, 1984 (for short "1984 Act") for an incident which occurred at Village Dhedhal, wherein Mr. M.N. Pandya, Sub-Inspector of Police, Bavla Police Station has stated that while he was patrolling in Bavla Town, he received a message from H.C. Kanaiyalal, Police Station Officer, at 10.00 a.m. that some altercation/incident had taken place between the two communities at Dhedhal Cross Roads. On receiving the said information, he along with other police personnel, rushed to the place of incident, however, by that time the crowd had already dispersed. Thereafter, he received information that a clash was going on between the said two communities in Dhedhal village. Immediately, he contacted the Control Room, as well as the Deputy Superintendent of Police of Dholka, for further police support and rushed to the spot where he found about 2000-3000 persons from both the communities, all with sticks, dhariyas, swords etc., attacking each other. The police resorted to teargas shells as well as to lathi charges to disperse the crowd. Several rounds of firing were resorted to in order to disperse the mob. In the incident, more than 20 persons were injured and three houses of members of the Bharwad community were set on fire. One person, namely Ajitbhai Prahladbhai, also died. Several police personnel were also injured. No person was named in the said FIR.

(4.) Another FIR, being Case No. C.R.No. I-155 of 2008, was registered at Bavla Police Station on the same date i.e. 8.7.2008 at 22:35 hrs by Babubhai Popatbhai Koli Patel (appellant in SLP (Crl.) No.2077/2010 and respondent in SLP (Crl.) Nos. 3235-3240/2010) (hereinafter called as complainant), resident of village Vasna, Taluka Bavla, wherein he alleged that an incident took place on the same day at 9:15 hours near Dhedhal village in which he named 18 persons as accused. As per this FIR, an incident occurred on 7.7.2008 in the evening at about 6.30 p.m. His cousin Jayantibhai Gordhanbhai told him that when Budhabhai of their village and two rickshaw-walas were taking passengers at Dhedhal Chokdi, the Bharwads of Dhedhal village who were also plying rickshaws, chhakdas etc. told the Koli Patels not to take passengers from there and they took away the keys of the jeep, beat up the Koli Patel boys, abused and threatened them and told them not to bring jeeps and rickshaws to Dhedhal Chokdi. Babubhai Popatbhai Koli Patel, complainant reached Dhedhal Chokdi and met Budhabhai LaL.J.ibhai Koli Patel of his village and his brother Jayantibhai LaL.J.ibhai and enquired about the incident. They complained about browbeating and threatening by the Bharwads as the Bharwads wanted that no one else should bring jeeps and chhakdas to Dhedhal Chokdi. The informant/complainant stated that Kantibhai Ratanbhai Bharwad and other persons standing nearby told them to stop and threats were made by the Bharwads. On the date of the incident, when the informant was coming towards Dhedhal village from Vasna, his cousin Vadibhai Pakhabhai's tractor and one chhakda rickshaw were passing through the road. When they reached near Dhedhal village pond, the rickshaw and tractor were halted, his car was also stopped and he got down from the car and saw that 10 to 12 persons belonging to the Bharwad community were assaulting his cousin Vadibhai Pakhabhai and Amubhai Pakhabhai with sticks. They were also assaulting the chhakda rickshaw-walas. He saw Ganesh Jaksi of the Bharwad community of Dhedhal village having tamancha-like weapon in his hand and instigating the other persons to indulge in violence. He also saw Sanjay Chela Bharwad, Dhiru Matam Bharwad, Sura Raiji Bharwad of Dhedhal intercepting people going on the road and Karshan Chako Bharwad, Moman Natha Bharwad, Kalu Sedhu Bharwad, Kalu Hari Bharwad, Chinu Bhikhu Bharwad assaulting Vadibhai Pakhabhai and Amubhai as well as the chhakda rickshaw-wala saying that the road was not for them and thus, they should not pass through it. The complainant and Manubhai went to rescue Vadibhai. At that time, Jayantibhai LaL.J.ibhai Patel of their village and Matambhai Vadibhai Patel came on a motor cycle. They were also stopped and all the persons jumped on them and started assaulting and abusing them. He saw that Surabhai Raijibhai Bharwad had inflicted stick blows on Manubhai due to which he was injured and became unconscious. When the mob beat up Manubhai, at that time, other Bharwads from Dhedhal village had also arrived.

(5.) The Bharwads started beating passersby on vehicles, who had worn clothes like Koli Patels and causing injuries to them. The Bharwads made calls on mobile phones to call other Bharwads. The Bharwads assaulted and killed Manubhai Koli Patel and Ajitbhai Prahladbhai Koli Patel by assaulting them with deadly weapons like revolver, dhariyas and sticks and also caused serious injuries to Babubhai Popatbhai Koli Patel, informant/complainant on his head and hand. They also caused minor and major injuries to other persons.

(6.) On 9.7.2008, the inquest panchnama was carried out and three dead bodies were sent for post mortem. The report of the autopsy revealed a large number of injuries inflicted on the deceased persons. Statements of injured witnesses, who were admitted in Long Life Hospital, namely Dashratbhai Popatbhai Patel (PW.26), Hemubhai Babubhai Patel (PW.12), Jayantibhai LaL.J.ibhai (PW.14), Vadibhai Pakhabhai (PW.27) were recorded on 10.07.2008. Statements of injured witness Matambhai Vadibhai (PW.18) were recorded on 10.7.2008 and 21.7.2008.

(7.) The accused in both the cases filed Special Criminal Application No. 1675/2008 praying for investigation of CR No.I-154/2008 registered with Bavla Police Station by an independent agency like the CBI, Special Criminal Application No. 1679/2008 for quashing of C.R. No.I-154/2008 and C.R. No.I-155/2008 registered with Bavla Police Station. Three applications being Criminal Misc. Application Nos. 8249/2009, 8361/2009 and 8363/2009 to quash and set aside the proceedings undertaken by Sessions Court during the pendency of the applications filed earlier were made. Twenty two persons were arrested. On completion of investigation, the charge sheet was filed on 10.10.2008 against 12 accused persons and the case was committed to Sessions Court.

(8.) By judgment and final order dated 22.12.2009, the High Court quashed the FIR registered as CR No.I-155/2008 and clubbed the investigation of the FIR along with the investigation of the other FIR bearing CR No.I-154/2008 to the extent it was feasible. The court transferred the investigation to the State CID Crime Branch and directed the new Investigating Officer to investigate the Bavla Police Station C.R.No.I-154/2008 as it stood earlier prior to the deletion of Section 302 IPC with a further clarification that quashing of the FIR registered by Bavla Police Station i.e. C.R.No.I-155 of 2008 could not mean that accused in respect of the said FIR has been discharged of the offences as they would face the charges in C.R. No.I-154/2008 and the accused who stood arrested in connection with C.R.No.I-155 of 2008 would stand arrested in connection with case C.R. No.I-154/2008. Hence, these appeals.

(9.) Shri R.K. Abichandani, learned senior counsel appearing for the appellant/complainant in C.R. No.I-155/2008, and Shri Tushar Mehta, learned Additional Advocate General have submitted that the High Court quashed the FIR without appreciating that there are no common factors in both the FIRs so as to indicate that both FIRs had arisen out of the same transaction. Thus, the FIRs could not be clubbed; the incident recorded in CR No. I-155/08 occurred prior in point of time and facts recorded in both the FIRs make it evident that there had been two separate incidents at two different places and for distinct offences. In CR No. I-155/08, three persons belonging to Koli Patel community had died and 26 persons of the same community were injured at the hands of Bharwads, whereas no person from the Bharwad community suffered any injury. Both the FIRs had been lodged specifying that the FIR in CR No.I-155/08 has been in respect of the incident occurred at 9.15 am while the incident involved in CR No. I-154/08 has been in respect of incident occurred at 9.30 am. The incident first in time took place at Dhedhal Chokdi (Cross Roads) while the other incident occurred in village Dhedhal near the pond. The Court further erred in granting the relief to persons/applicants before it who had been absconding according to the Investigating Agency. Thus, their applications could not have been entertained. The appeals deserve to be allowed and the judgment and order of the High Court is liable to be set aside.

(10.) On the contrary, Shri U.U. Lalit, Shri C.A. Sundaram, Shri Rajeev Dhavan, and Shri P.S. Narsimha, learned senior counsel appearing for the respondents-accused in C.R. No.I-155/2008, have opposed the appeals contending that the High Court reached the correct conclusion that both the crimes were two parts of the same transaction. They occurred at the same place and the version given by Babubhai Popatbhai Koli Patel in C.R. No.I-155/2008 cannot be considered a counter version giving rise to a cross case. Thus, no interference with the impugned judgment and order of the High Court is required.

(11.) We have considered the rival submissions made by learned counsel for the parties and perused the record. Two FIRs.

(12.) In Ram Lal Narang Vs. Om Prakash Narang and Anr. AIR 1979 SC 1791, this Court considered a case wherein two FIRs had been lodged. The first one formed part of a subsequent larger conspiracy which came to the light on receipt of fresh information. Some of the conspirators were common in both the FIRs and the object of conspiracy in both the cases was not the same. This Court while considering the question as to whether investigation and further proceedings on the basis of both the FIRs was permissible held that no straitjacket formula can be laid down in this regard. The only test whether two FIRs can be permitted to exist was whether the two conspiracies were identical or not. After considering the facts of the said case, the Court came to the conclusion that both conspiracies were not identical. Therefore, lodging of two FIRs was held to be permissible.

(13.) In T.T. Antony Vs. State of Kerala and Ors. (2001) 6 SCC 181, this Court dealt with a case wherein in respect of the same cognizable offence and same occurrence two FIRs had been lodged and the Court held that there can be no second FIR and no fresh investigation on receipt of every subsequent information in respect of the same cognizable offence or same occurrence giving rise to one or more cognizable offences. The investigating agency has to proceed only on the information about commission of a cognizable offence which is first entered in the Police Station diary by the Officer In-charge under Section 158 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 (hereinafter called the Cr.P.C.) and all other subsequent information would be covered by Section 162 Cr.P.C. for the reason that it is the duty of the Investigating Officer not merely to investigate the cognizable offence report in the FIR but also other connected offences found to have been committed in the course of the same transaction or the same occurrence and the Investigating Officer has to file one or more reports under Section 173 Cr.P.C. Even after submission of the report under Section 173(2) Cr.P.C., if the Investigating Officer comes across any further information pertaining to the same incident, he can make further investigation, but it is desirable that he must take the leave of the court and forward the further evidence, if any, with further report or reports under Section 173(8) Cr.P.C. In case the officer receives more than one piece of information in respect of the same incident involving one or more than one cognizable offences such information cannot properly be treated as an FIR as it would, in effect, be a second FIR and the same is not in conformity with the scheme of the Cr.P.C. The Court further observed as under:

"A just balance between the fundamental rights of the citizens under Articles 19 and 21 of the Constitution and the expansive power of the police to investigate a cognizable offence has to be struck by the court. There cannot be any controversy that sub-section (8) of Section 173 CrPC empowers the police to make further investigation, obtain further evidence (both oral and documentary) and forward a further report or reports to the Magistrate..... However, the sweeping power of investigation does not warrant subjecting a citizen each time to fresh investigation by the police in respect of the same incident, giving rise to one or more cognizable offences, consequent upon filing of successive FIRs whether before or after filing the final report under Section 173(2) CrPC. It would clearly be beyond the purview of Sections 154 and 156 CrPC, nay, a case of abuse of the statutory power of investigation in a given case. In our view a case of fresh investigation based on the second or successive FIRs, not being a counter-case, filed in connection with the same or connected cognizable offence alleged to have been committed in the course of the same transaction and in respect of which pursuant to the first FIR either investigation is under way or final report under Section 173(2) has been forwarded to the Magistrate, may be a fit case for exercise of power under Section 482 CrPC or under Articles 226/227 of the Constitution."

(Emphasis added).

(14.) In Upkar Singh Vs. Ved Prakash and Ors. (2004) 13 SCC 292, this Court considered the judgment in T.T. Antony (supra) and explained that the judgment in the said case does not exclude the registration of a complaint in the nature of counter claim from the purview of the court. What had been laid down by this Court in the aforesaid case is that any further complaint by the same complainant against the same accused, subsequent to the registration of a case, is prohibited under the Cr.P.C. because an investigation in this regard would have already started and further the complaint against the same accused will amount to an improvement on the facts mentioned in the original complaint, hence, will be prohibited under section 162 Cr.P.C. However, this rule will not apply to a counter claim by the accused in the first complaint or on his behalf alleging a different version of the said incident. Thus, in case, there are rival versions in respect of the same episode, the Investigating Agency would take the same on two different FIRs and investigation can be carried under both of them by the same investigating agency and thus, filing an FIR pertaining to a counter claim in respect of the same incident having a different version of events, is permissible.

(15.) In Rameshchandra Nandlal Parikh Vs. State of Gujarat and Anr. (2006) 1 SCC 732, this Court reconsidered the earlier judgment including T.T. Antony (supra) and held that in case the FIRs are not in respect of the same cognizable offence or the same occurrence giving rise to one or more cognizable offences nor are they alleged to have been committed in the course of the same transaction or the same occurrence as the one alleged in the First FIR, there is no prohibition in accepting the second FIR.

(16.) In Nirmal Singh Kahlon Vs. State of Punjab and Ors. (2009) 1 SCC 441, this Court considered a case where an FIR had already been lodged on 14.6.2002 in respect of the offences committed by individuals. Subsequently, the matter was handed over to the Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI), which during investigation collected huge amount of material and also recorded statements of large number of persons and the CBI came to the conclusion that a scam was involved in the selection process of Panchayat Secretaries. The second FIR was lodged by the CBI. This Court after appreciating the evidence, came to the conclusion that matter investigated by the CBI dealt with a larger conspiracy. Therefore, this investigation has been on a much wider canvass and held that second FIR was permissible and required to be investigated. The Court held as under:

"The second FIR, in our opinion, would be maintainable not only because there were different versions but when new discovery is made on factual foundations. Discoveries may be made by the police authorities at a subsequent stage. Discovery about a larger conspiracy can also surface in another proceeding, as for example, in a case of this nature. If the police authorities did not make a fair investigation and left out conspiracy aspect of the matter from the purview of its investigation, in our opinion, as and when the same surfaced, it was open to the State and/or the High Court to direct investigation in respect of an offence which is distinct and separate from the one for which the FIR had already been lodged."

(Emphasis added).

(17.) Thus, in view of the above, the law on the subject emerges to the effect that an FIR under Section 154 Cr.P.C. is a very important document. It is the first information of a cognizable offence recorded by the Officer In-Charge of the Police Station. It sets the machinery of criminal law in motion and marks the commencement of the investigation which ends with the formation of an opinion under Section 169 or 170 Cr.P.C., as the case may be, and forwarding of a police report under Section 173 Cr.P.C. Thus, it is quite possible that more than one piece of information be given to the Police Officer In- charge of the Police Station in respect of the same incident involving one or more than one cognizable offences. In such a case, he need not enter each piece of information in the Diary. All other information given orally or in writing after the commencement of the investigation into the facts mentioned in the First Information Report will be statements falling under Section 162 Cr.P.C. In such a case the court has to examine the facts and circumstances giving rise to both the FIRs and the test of sameness is to be applied to find out whether both the FIRs relate to the same incident in respect of the same occurrence or are in regard to the incidents which are two or more parts of the same transaction. If the answer is affirmative, the second FIR is liable to be quashed. However, in case, the contrary is proved, where the version in the second FIR is different and they are in respect of the two different incidents/crimes, the second FIR is permissible. In case in respect of the same incident the accused in the first FIR comes forward with a different version or counter claim, investigation on both the FIRs has to be conducted.

(18.) The instant case is required to be examined in the light of the aforesaid settled legal propositions. If the two FIRs are read together, it becomes clear that the incident started in the morning as per both the FIRs. C.R. No.I-154/2008, lodged by Mr. M.N. Pandya, Sub Inspector of Police stated that he reached the place of occurrence after receiving the information from the police station and found that mob had already dispersed. The case of the prosecution is that when the police reached the place of occurrence of the first incident, the mob had already dispersed, could not be correct for the reason that some of the witnesses have stated that the clash was going on when the police arrived and police resorted to force to disperse the mob. In fact, it was the police who summoned the ambulances which took the injured persons to hospitals. In the first incident as per the said FIR the place of occurrence had been village Dhedhal near the pond. In the pond, the damaged tractor, motor cycle and chhakda were found. Mr. M.N. Pandya called the extra police force and went inside the village. He found 2000-4000 persons and witnessed a free fight between them. The Koli Patels had surrounded some of the houses of the Bharwads. Some persons had been locked inside their houses and they had also put their houses at fire. The superior officers also came there. Police has used force to disperse the mob in the said incident and there were heavy casualties and there was loss of lives also. If we examine minutely the FIR in C.R. No.I-155/2008, the incident also occurred near the pond in the village Dhedhal. The damaged tractor, motor cycle and chhakda were there in the pond. One person Ajitbhai Prahladbhai was killed in the incident. Babubhai Popatbhai Koli Patel also got injured. While comparing both the FIRs there is no doubt that both the incidents had occurred at the same place in close proximity of time, therefore, they are two parts of the same transaction. More so, the death of Ajitbhai Prahladbhai has been mentioned in both the FIRs. From the report for deletion of Section 302 IPC, it is apparent that it is not the case of the Investigating Officer that the death of Ajitbhai Prahladbhai had not occurred during the course of the incident in connection with which C.R. No.I-154 of 2008 came to be registered.

(19.) It is also evident that houses of the Bharwads were inside the village in contiguous areas and the offence had spread over the entire area as is evident from the panchnama of the scene of offence drawn in C.R. No.I-155 of 2008 as well as from the contents of the said FIR. Same situation regarding the place of occurrence appears from the panchnama of the scene of incident in C.R. No. I-154/2008. Panchnama of the scene of incident of C.R. No.I-154/2008 includes the scene of occurrence of C.R. No.I-155/2008 which makes it clear that both the FIRs pertain to the two crimes committed in the same transaction. The scene of offence panchnamas establish clearly that the incidents in both the cases could not be distinct and independent of each other. In fact, it is nobody's case that incident relating to CR No.I-155/08 occurred at Dhedhal Chokdi (Cross-Roads).

(20.) In view of the above, we are of the considered opinion that the High Court reached the correct conclusion and second FIR C.R. I-155/2008 was liable to be quashed. Tainted Investigation

(21.) In some of the applications before the High Court, allegations of bias malafide against the investigating agency had been made submitting that investigation had not been fair and impartial and therefore, it stood vitiated because of material irregularities and therefore, investigation be handed over to some independent agency like CBI. The Court examined the grievance of those applicants and recorded the following findings:- (i) In spite of the fact that serious allegations had been made as regards the manner in which investigation had been made in the affidavit in reply, such allegations had not been denied; (ii) The investigation has been one-sided. Statements of witnesses belonging to only one community had been recorded, and the members of the other community had been totally excluded from recording their statements, indicating bias in favour of one community and against the other; (iii) In CR No.I-154/2008 several Koli Patels had been arraigned as accused, many of them are not named by any witness in their statements annexed with the charge-sheet. Thus, it was not clear as to how the said persons have been implicated in the offences in question. Such accused would certainly go scot-free, which clearly indicates the nature of investigation which has been carried out in respect of one of the FIRs; (iv) Not a single witness named in the charge sheet belongs to the Bharwad community and despite the fact that statements of witnesses reveal that persons belonging to both the communities have sustained injures, in the charge sheet, as well as the statements placed on record by the prosecution, not a single person belonging to the Bharwad community is shown to have sustained injuries; (v) Though the witnesses refer to names of the Bharwads whose houses were set on fire after shutting them in, none of the persons belonging to the Bharwad community are cited as witnesses nor are their statements recorded. This is the nature of the investigation carried out in respect of C.R.No. I-154 of 2008; (vi) When in respect of the second FIR pertaining to the alleged first incident, the informant was in a position to name all the accused belonging to the Bharwad community along with their father's name and surname, it is surprising that in the investigation carried out by the Investigating Officer no statement of any person belonging to the Bharwad community naming any person belonging to the Koli Patel community as having taken part in the incident has been recorded; (vii) The offence has been bifurcated into two parts and one serious in nature and the other a much diluted one. Even in the diluted offence, some persons belonging to one community have been named as accused though no material has been collected to connect most of them with the offence in question. There is nothing to indicate as to how the said names came to be revealed. All the accused belonging to the same community, i.e., Koli Patels have been shown to be absconding accused in the charge-sheet filed against some of the accused belonging to the Bharwad community despite the fact that they are shown as witnesses in another FIR and their statements had been recorded by the Investigating Officer; (viii) Accused of one case have been shown by the prosecution in the charge sheet as absconding accused but they had been attending court proceedings in the company of the Investigating Officer in another case; (ix) There is over-action in relation to one FIR and complete inaction in so far as the another FIR is concerned. The resultant effect of the poor investigation carried out in connection with one FIR would be that all the accused of the said FIR would be acquitted and only the accused of another FIR which belongs to one community would have to face the prosecution; (x) In such a fact-situation, persons who would otherwise be co-accused, would be witness against them in the case arising out of the another FIR which would cause immense prejudice to them; (xi) Deletion of offence under section 302 IPC from the FIR CR No.I-154/2008 was totally unwarranted; and (xii) Charge-sheet against same set of 12 persons had been filed in relation to both the FIRs. However, there was no evidence against the said persons in connection with some of the offences and the prosecution was ready and preparing to get them discharged under section 169 Cr.P.C. On appreciation/consideration of the material available on record, the High Court recorded the aforesaid findings of fact and came to the following conclusion:

"The manner in which the investigation has been carried out as well as the manner in which these cases have been conducted before this Court, clearly indicate that the investigation is not fair and impartial and as such the investigating agency cannot be permitted to continue."

Thus, it is evident from the above that not only investigation in respect of both the FIRs had not been fair and has caused serious prejudice to one party but even before the High Court conduct of the party and investigating agency has not been fair.

(22.) None of the learned counsel appearing for the parties has raised any doubt about the correctness of those findings, rather all of them have fairly conceded that investigation was not conducted properly.

(23.) The High Court, in view of the fact that there has not been a fair investigation, transferred the case to State CBCID, however, it issued the following directions:

"The investigation in respect of the first information report registered vide Bavla Police Station I-C.R. No.154 of 2008 is transferred to the State CID Crime Branch. Both the Investigating Officers of the aforesaid FIRs shall hand over the investigation papers to the new investigating agency. The Investigating Officer who is entrusted with the investigation shall carry out further investigation in Bavla Police Station I-C.R. No.154 of 2008 as it stood earlier prior to the report for deletion of section 302 IPC. It is clarified that quashing of the first information report registered vide Bavla Police Station I-C.R. No.155 of 2008 does not mean that the accused in respect of the said FIR shall stand discharged of the offences. They shall now face the said charges in the first information report registered vide Bavla Police Station I-C.R. No.154 of 2008. The accused who are arrested in connection with Bavla Police Station I-C.R. No.155 of 2008 shall stand arrested in connection with Bavla Police Station I-C.R. No.154 of 2008."

(24.) We fail to understand that if the High Court has quashed the FIR in C.R.No. I-155/2008, how the charge sheet, which was filed after investigation of allegations made therein, could survive and be directed to be read in another case and other consequential orders be also read in another case. Further in case the High Court came to the conclusion that investigation was totally biased, unfair and tainted, the investigation had to be held to have stood vitiated and as a consequence thereof charge sheets filed in both the cases could have become inconsequential.

(25.) The investigation into a criminal offence must be free from objectionable features or infirmities which may legitimately lead to a grievance on the part of the accused that investigation was unfair and carried out with an ulterior motive. It is also the duty of the Investigating Officer to conduct the investigation avoiding any kind of mischief and harassment to any of the accused. The Investigating Officer should be fair and conscious so as to rule out any possibility of fabrication of evidence and his impartial conduct must dispel any suspicion as to its genuineness. The Investigating Officer "is not to bolster up a prosecution case with such evidence as may enable the court to record conviction but to bring out the real unvarnished truth". (Vide R.P. Kapur Vs. State of Punjab AIR 1960 SC 866; Jamuna Chaudhary and Ors. Vs. State of Bihar AIR 1974 SC 1822; and Mahmood Vs. State of U.P. AIR 1976 SC 69).

(26.) In State of Bihar Vs. P.P. Sharma AIR 1991 SC 1260, this Court has held as under:

"Investigation is a delicate painstaking and dextrous process. Ethical conduct is absolutely essential for investigative professionalism. ....Therefore, before countenancing such allegations of mala fides or bias it is salutary and an onerous duty and responsibility of the court, not only to insist upon making specific and definite allegations of personal animosity against the Investigating Officer at the start of the investigation but also must insist to establish and prove them from the facts and circumstances to the satisfaction of the court. ....Malice in law could be inferred from doing of wrongful act intentionally without any just cause or excuse or without there being reasonable relation to the purpose of the exercise of statutory power....The word 'personal liberty' (under Article 21 of the Constitution) is of the widest amplitude covering variety of rights which goes to constitute personal liberty of a citizen. Its deprivation shall be only as per procedure prescribed in the Code and the Evidence Act conformable to the mandate of the Supreme Law, the Constitution. The investigator must be alive to the mandate of Article 21 and is not empowered to trample upon the personal liberty arbitrarily..... An Investigating Officer who is not sensitive to the constitutional mandates may be prone to trample upon the personal liberty of a person when he is actuated by mala fides."

(27.) In Navinchandra N. Majithia Vs. State of Meghalaya and Ors. AIR 2000 SC 3275, this Court considered a large number of its earlier judgments to the effect that investigating agencies are guardians of the liberty of innocent citizens. Therefore, a heavy responsibility devolves on them of seeing that innocent persons are not charged on an irresponsible and false implication. There cannot be any kind of interference or influence on the investigating agency and no one should be put through the harassment of a criminal trial unless there are good and substantial reasons for holding it. Cr.P.C. does not recognize private investigating agency, though there is no bar for any person to hire a private agency and get the matter investigated at his own risk and cost. But such an investigation cannot be treated as investigation made under law, nor can the evidence collected in such private investigation be presented by Public Prosecutor in any criminal trial. Therefore, the court emphasised on independence of the investigating agency and deprecated any kind of interference observing as under:

"The above discussion was made for emphasising the need for official investigation to be totally extricated from any extraneous influence..... All complaints shall be investigated with equal alacrity and with equal fairness irrespective of the financial capacity of the person lodging the complaint. ....A vitiated investigation is the precursor for miscarriage of criminal justice."

(Emphasis added)

(28.) In Nirmal Singh Kahlon (supra), this Court held that a concept of fair investigation and fair trial are concomitant to preservation of the fundamental right of the accused under Article 21 of the Constitution of India.

(29.) In Manu Sharma Vs. State (NCT of Delhi) (2010) 6 SCC 1, one of us (Hon'ble P. Sathasivam, J.) has elaborately dealt with the requirement of fair investigation observing as under:-

"..... The criminal justice administration system in India places human rights and dignity for human life at a much higher pedestal. In our jurisprudence an accused is presumed to be innocent till proved guilty, the alleged accused is entitled to fairness and true investigation and fair trial and the prosecution is expected to play balanced role in the trial of a crime. The investigation should be judicious, fair, transparent and expeditious to ensure compliance with the basic rule of law. These are the fundamental canons of our criminal jurisprudence and they are quite in conformity with the constitutional mandate contained in Articles 20 and 21 of the Constitution of India.... It is not only the responsibility of the investigating agency but as well as that of the courts to ensure that investigation is fair and does not in any way hamper the freedom of an individual except in accordance with law. Equally enforceable canon of the criminal law is that the high responsibility lies upon the investigating agency not to conduct an investigation in tainted and unfair manner. The investigation should not prima facie be indicative of a biased mind and every effort should be made to bring the guilty to law as nobody stands above law dehors his position and influence in the society.... The Court is not to accept the report which is contra legem (sic) to conduct judicious and fair investigation.... The investigation should be conducted in a manner so as to draw a just balance between citizen's right under Articles 19 and 21 and expansive power of the police to make investigation.....".

(30.) This Court in K. Chandrasekhar Vs. State of Kerala and Ors. (1998) 5 SCC 223; Ramachandran Vs. R. Udhayakumar and Ors. (2008) 5 SCC 413; and Nirmal Singh Kahlon (supra); Mithabhai Pashabhai Patel and Ors. Vs. State of Gujarat (2009) 6 SCC 332; and Kishan Lal Vs. Dharmendra Bafna (2009) 7 SCC 685 has emphasised that where the court comes to the conclusion that there was a serious irregularity in the investigation that had taken place, the court may direct a further investigation under Section 173(8) Cr.P.C., even transferring the investigation to an independent agency, rather than directing a re-investigation. "Direction of a re-investigation, however, being forbidden in law, no superior court would ordinarily issue such a direction."

(31.) Unless an extra ordinary case of gross abuse of power is made out by those in charge of the investigation, the court should be quite loathe to interfere with the investigation, a field of activity reserved for the police and the executive. Thus, in case of a mala fide exercise of power by a police officer the court may interfere. (vide: S.N. Sharma Vs. Bipen Kumar Tiwari and Ors. AIR 1970 SC 786).

(32.) In Kashmeri Devi Vs. Delhi Administration and Anr. AIR 1988 SC 1323, this Court held that where the investigation has not been conducted in a proper and objective manner it may be necessary for the court to order for fresh investigation with the help of an independent agency for the ends of justice so that real truth may be revealed. In the said case, this court transferred the investigation to the CBI, after coming to the conclusion that investigation conducted earlier was not fair.

(33.) The above referred to judgments of this Court make it clear that scheme of investigation, particularly, Section 173(8) Cr.P.C. provides for further investigation and not of re- investigation. Therefore, if the Court, comes to the conclusion that the investigation has been done in a manner with an object of helping a party, the court may direct for further investigation and ordinarily not for re-investigation. The expression ordinarily means normally and it is used where there can be an exception. It means in the large majority of cases but not invariably. "Ordinarily" excludes "extra-ordinary" or "special circumstances". (vide: Kailash Chandra Vs. Union of India AIR 1961 SC 1346; Eicher Tractors Ltd., Haryana Vs. Commissioner of Customs, Bombay AIR 2001 SC 196; and State of A.P. Vs. Sarma Rao and Ors. AIR 2007 SC 137). Thus, it is evident that in exceptional circumstances, the court in order to prevent the miscarriage of criminal justice, if considers necessary, it may direct for investigation de novo wherein the case presents exceptional circumstances.

(34.) In the instant case, admittedly, the High Court has given detailed reasons for coming to the conclusion that the investigation has been totally one-sided, biased and mala fide. One party has been favoured by the investigating agency. The natural corollary to this finding is that the other party has been harassed in an unwarranted manner. Thus, the cause of the other party has been prejudiced. The charge sheets filed by the investigating agency in both the cases are against the same set of accused. A charge sheet is the outcome of an investigation. If the investigation has not been conducted fairly, we are of the view that such vitiated investigation cannot give rise to a valid charge sheet. Such investigation would ultimately prove to be precursor of miscarriage of criminal justice. In such a case the court would simply try to decipher the truth only on the basis of guess or conjunctures as the whole truth would not come before it. It will be difficult for the court to determine how the incident took place wherein three persons died and so many persons including the complainant and accused got injured. Not only the fair trial but fair investigation is also part of constitutional rights guaranteed under Articles 20 and 21 of the Constitution of India. Therefore, investigation must be fair, transparent and judicious as it is the minimum requirement of rule of law. Investigating agency cannot be permitted to conduct an investigation in tainted and biased manner. Where non- interference of the court would ultimately result in failure of justice, the court must interfere. In such a situation, it may be in the interest of justice that independent agency chosen by the High Court makes a fresh investigation. Thus, the order of the High Court requires modification to the extent that the charge sheets in both the cases and any order consequent thereto stand quashed. In case, any of the accused could not get bail because of the pendency of these appeals before this Court, it shall be open to him to apply for bail or any other relief before the appropriate forum. In case, such an application is filed, we request the appropriate court to decide the same expeditiously and in accordance with law. It is further clarified that those persons who were arrested in connection with CR No. I-155/08 would not stand arrested in connection with CR No. I-154/08. However, if during the fresh investigation, any incriminating material against any person is discovered, the Investigating Authority may proceed in accordance with law. It shall be open to the accused to approach the appropriate forum for any interim relief as per law.

(35.) In view of the above, the appeals are disposed of with the modification of the order of the High Court to the extent explained hereinabove.

[Note :- The same principle is reiterated by Hon'ble Supreme Court in the case of 2007 ALL MR (Cri) 555 (SC) where, it has been held that,

'Fair investigation is expected from the prosecution – It is to be carried out not only from the stand of the prosecution but also the defence because onus of proof may shift to the accused at a later stage.]

"Jugal Kishore v. State of M.P."

Misc. Cr. Case No. 432 of 1989, D/- 2 -11 -1989

A] One sided Investigation – Police is bound to investigate the plea of accused also – A dishonest, unfair or one sided investigation violate the constitutional guarantee and justify interference by Court of Law – Such proceeding has be quashed

B] To put an accused person to long lasting trial on an incomplete and one sided investigation and promise to consider full facts only when they are brought before the court at defence stage amounts to ignoring default of the I.O. and clothe him with the authority to harass accused. It may even amount to judicial sanction of substitution of rule of law by the Police Raj, and subversion of our constitutional ideals. These consequences deserve notice of the Session Judge while interpreting his own authority and jurisdiction in the matter.

Case Referred : Chronological Paras

Judgement

ORDER :- The applicants accused persons by this application u/s. 482, Cr. P.C. seek quashing of proceedings in Criminal Case No. 1119/88, pending before Shri R.K. Pandey, Judicial Magistrate, Class I, Sagar alleging that they are frivolous and vexatious and amount to abuse of the process of the said Court.

2. Facts appearing in case diary show that the applicants are alleged to have committed house trespass into the house bearing No. 258/3, Gujarati Bazar, Sagas and have thus committed the offence punishable u/s. 448/34, I.P.C. It also appears that one Rajendra Kumar Dubey claiming to be the owner of the said house, lodged a report at the City Kotwali, Sagar on the basis of which the F.I.R. was recorded. Statement of applicant Jugal Kishor was also recorded by the Investigating Officer during the course of investigation. The applicant Jugal Kishor told the Investigating Officer that he was tenant of the house in question since last about 48 years and was at the present paying rent of Rs. 12 per month to the Income-tax Department. He also stated that the house had been attached by the Income-tax Department in 1984 where he was directed to pay the rent to the said Department. He also stated that he was paying rent of the house to the Income-tax Department since then. The Investigating Officer did not follow the clue and did not verify the correctness of the said information from the Income-tax Department. The Investigating Officer; relying on the statement of witnesses of the complainant, filed the challan before the Judicial Magistrate who took cognizance of the same and issued process to the applicants. The applicants requested the learned Magistrate to discharge them as they could not, even prima facie, be treated to be trespassers. They filed documents showing attachment of the house by Income-tax Department and receipts of rent paid by them. The learned Magistrate was of the view that the defence of the applicants could not be consider at this stage. The matter was thereafter taken to the Court of 3rd Additional Sessions Judge, Sagar by filing a revision. According to the learned Judge, allegations against the applicants were supported by the F.I.R. and hence proceedings could not be quashed. That is how the matter is before this Court in this application u/s.482, Cr. P.C. invoking its extraordinary jurisdiction to prevent abuse of the process of the Court of Judicial Magistrate.

3. Perusal of the case diary leads this Court to hold that investigation of the case by the Investigating Officer was neither fair nor honest. Indeed it was one sided. It is, in the opinion of this Court, possible to hold that the Investigating Officer was influenced by the complainant and has therefore failed to carry out his legal duties and obligations. Section 136, Cr. P.C. confers authority on the Officer-in-charge of a Police Station to investigate a cognizable case either himself of by a subordinate Officer. Section 157, Cr. P.C. requires him to first consider whether there are sufficient grounds to undertake such investigation. Sections 160 and 161, Cr. P.C. give the Investigating Officer the authority to require attendance of witnesses and record their statement. Sections 169 and 170, Cr. P.C. establish that the Investigating Officer is required to evaluate evidence to ascertain whether it was sufficient or deficient. It is, therefore, plain that investigation of allegations made against a person is a serious and solemn exercise undertaken by the Police Officer as on the result of this investigation hanges the fate of 'personal liberty' of the person which is constitutionally guaranteed. A dishonest, unfair or one-sided investigation would therefore, violate the constitutional guarantee and justify interference by a court of law. Now, if the Investigating Officer was honest and impartial, he would have carried on the investigation with the Income-tax Department to ascertain whether the applicant Jugal Kishor was depositing rent as asserted by him and whether the house was under attachment. It requires no discussion to hold that if assertions of applicant Jugal Kishore were true, there would be no case, even prima facie of house trespass the applicants. No tenant can be prosecuted for the offence of house trespass on the allegation of entering into the tenanted premises. There is no explanation why the truth of the defence of applicant Jugal Kishor was not verified. In the absence of any explanation, there are sufficient reasons to doubt the honesty and bona fides of the Investigating Officer. Such officers and such one-sided investigations, in the opinion of this Court, not only miscarriage of justice but also hearing the police and their department into disrepute.

4. The learned Additional Sessions Judge seems to be of the opinion that F.I.R., by itself, is sufficient to frame charge against the applicants and put them on trial. He also feels that the defence of the applicants cannot be considered at this stage. While his view about defence may be sustainable, it is difficult to agree with his view that F.I.R., by itself, is sufficient to frame charge and put the applicants on trial. This report cannot be used as substantive or primary evidence of the truth of its contents and is, therefore, never treated as a substitute for evidence given on oath. It is also well settled that where there is no other evidence of facts mentioned in the F.I.R., the accused person cannot be convicted (see Nankhu Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1973 SC 491 : (1972 Cri LJ 1204), Damodar prasad v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1972 SC 622 : (1972 Cri LJ 451); A. Nagesia v. State of Bihar, AIR 1966 SC 119 : (1966 Cri LJ 100); State of Bombay v. Rusy Mistry, AIR 1960 SC 391 : (1960 Cri LJ 532); Mardansingh v. State of M.P., AIR 1963 Madh Pra 97 : (1963 (1) Cri LJ 272) and Umrao Singh v. State of M.P., AIR 1961 Madh Pra 45 : (1961 (1) Cri LJ 270). Then Ss.190 and 2044, Cr. P.C. which authorise the Magistrate to take cognizance of the offence and issue process, require consideration of facts constituting the alleged offence. The use of the words 'may take cognizance' in S.190 gives judicial discretion to the Magistrate in the matter. It is not always necessary for him to take cognizance and in the exercise of this power, he can even direct fresh investigations before deciding whether the facts placed before him disclose any cognizable offence. (A.C. Agrawal v. Kali Prasad, AIR 1968 SC 1 : (1968 Cri LJ 82) and State of Assam v. Abdul Noor, AIR 1970 SC 1365 : (1970 Cri LJ 1264). similarly S.204, Cr. P.C. requires the Magistrate to discover 'sufficient grounds' for proceeding further and for this purpose, be guided by his opinion. It is, therefore, obvious that though the results of investigation are of considerable importance, the Magistrate is not bound to accept the report in all cases and start proceeding against the accused person. There would be no justification, in the considered opinion of this Court, to exercise these powers in cases where there is only the FIR but no other evidence to prove facts stated therein. If the grievance of the applicants had been considered by the learned Additional Sessions Judge in this legal perspective, he may not have found any difficulty in exercising his revisional powers in their favour. Since unfair and one-sided investigation is likely to result in false and vexatious trial, the order of the Magistrate taking cognizance of the same and issuing process to the applicants could have been quashed. Revisional powers have always been exercised to prevent abuse of the process of the Court and avoid mis-carriage of justice. The learned Additional Judge does not seem to be informed of these duties and obligations under law and seems to have adopted a short cut to dismiss the applicant's prayer. This Court expected the senior judicial officers like the Additional Sessions Judge to be little more serious in the discharge of this duties and little more committed to the cause of justice.

5. To put an accused person to a long lasting trial on an incomplete and one-sided investigation and promise to consider full facts only when they are brought before the Court at the defence stage amounts to ignoring default of the investigating Officer and clothe him with the authority to harass such a person. It may even amount to judicial sanction of substitution of 'rule of law' by the police Raj and subversion of our constitutional ideals. These consequences deserved notice of the learned Additional Sessions Judge while interpreting his own authority and jurisdiction in the matter. Even if he had applied the widely used 'Golden rule of Statutory Interpretation.', he would have avoided these consequences which have the effect of defeating the object and purpose of S.397, Cr. P.C. That this rule is applied even to statutes dealing with Criminal matters should be clear from the Supreme Court decisions in State of U.P. v. C. Tobit, AIR 1958 SC 414 at p. 416 : (1958 Cri LJ 809 at p. 811) and Santa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1976 SC 2386 : (1976 Cri LJ 1875).

6. Whatever might be the constraints of the learned Additional Sessions Judge, this Court does not suffer from any such constraint, Section 482, Cr. P.C., which is in fact invoked by the applicants, casts an obligation on this Court and otherwise secure the ends of justice. Starting proceedings which are wanting in bona fides and are frivolous, vexatious or oppressive is, without doubt, abuse of the process of the court of the Judicial Magistrate. Simply because the Investigating Officer does not conduct full, fair and independent investigation, the applicants cannot be required to go through the formality of trial and get acquitted by putting the entire material on record by way of defence. Similarly the ends of justice require that this Court consider for itself, whether there is a prima facie case against the applicants to justify their trial. Contents of the documents filed before the revisional court prima facie show that the applicant Judgal Kishor was the tenant of the disputed premises and was paying rent to the Income-tax Department iii obedience of the order issued in that behalf. There is nothing on record to explain these circumstances. These circumstances sufficiently indicate that there is bound to be denial of justice to the applicant, if they are required to undergo the full trial and these circumstances are considered only by way of defence. This Court is, therefore, under a legal obligation to use these extraordinary powers, quash proceeding before the trial Magistrate and save the applicants from the harassment inherent in the trial, which apparently is frivolous and vexatious.

7. As a result of discussion aforesaid this application succeeds and is allowed. Proceeding in Criminal Case No. 1119/86 pending before Shri R.K. Pandey, Judicial Magistrate, Class I, Sagar are hereby quashed and applicants discharged. ..Petition allowed.

Criminal P.C.(1973), S.24-Duty of Prosecution – It is not the job of prosecution to try only for the convition of accused, but it is their duty to place all the facts on record- The proceedings before trial Court show that the prosecution has been not fair at all to the accused-prosecution and it has to be stated that the trial was not at all fair. Both the prosecution and trial court are to be blamed for this lapse-FOR all these reasons, this appeal is required to be allowed and the accused is entitled to be acquitted.

JUDGEMENT

1. HEARD Mr. Gavnekar, learned advocate appearing for the appellant/accused and dr. Shaikh, learned APP appearing for the respondent/state.
2. ACCUSED is a lady, convicted under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to suffer imprisonment for life by the 3rd Addl. Sessions Judge, Nasik. By this appeal, she has challenged her conviction.
The case, in brief, of the prosecution is that, this accused was the friend of deceased sunita. Deceased Sunita was staying in their rented tenement situated in Awasti Chawl on Jail road of Nashik Road. Sunita was living with her husband Shantaram Labhade. On 27. 1. 1989, this accused, being a friend of deceased Sunita, went to her house. She stayed with them, had supper with them and stayed in their house in that night. It is alleged by the prosecution that during night all three of them slept on one bed.
It is the case of the prosecution that during night time Sunita woke up and noticed that this accused and her husband were having physical intimacy. Sunita objected and told her husband that he should not have any such relations with the accused and, therefore, her husband got enraged and poured kerosene on the person of sunita while this accused caught Sunita with her both hands. Husband Shantaram brought burning chimany near and the clothes of Sunita caught fired. In the process, husband Shantaram and sunita got burnt. Then shouts for help were there. The owner of chawl Mewaram Awasti rushed. The door was broke open by another tenant by name shirsath. Husband Shantaram told that he would himself go to the police station and, accordingly he left the house. Then Mewaram went to the police station and lodged report at about 3. 30 a. m. on 28. 1. 1989 as per narration made to him by Sunita, which was reduced into writing as station diary entry No. 6. Sunita was taken to civil hospital by the police where her dying declaration was recorded by the Special Judicial magistrate Mr. Bawiskar. Statement of Shantaram was also recorded by the SEM and, after Sunita was succumbed to the injuries, offence of murder was registered.

3. IN the mean time, both Sunita and her husband Shantaram died in the hospital and, therefore, charge sheet was filed only against this accused.

During trial, the defence of accused was of total denial. According to her, she has been falsely implicated by Sunita. The trial Court, however, believed the dying declaration of Sunita and disbelieved the dying declaration given by her husband Shantaram and convicted the accused, as stated above. Hence this appeal.

4. LEARNED advocate Mr. Gavnekar, appearing for the accused, vehemently urged that firstly even if the prosecution story is accepted as it is, there is no evidence on record at all to show that this accused was having any kind of intimacy or illicit relations with deceased Shantaram, nor there was any evidence to show that this accused used to go to deceased Sunita and stay at her house along with her husband Shantaram. Mr. Gavnekar also contended that in the absence of any such evidence, it was most difficult to believe that there could be any kind of physical intimacy between the accused and Shantaram giving cause for Sunita to get enraged. He, therefore, contended that the accused, being a friend and having no kind of sexual relationship with shantaram, had no reason, whatsoever, to take this kind of revenge by burning Sunita alive. He also contended that if the prosecution itself had tendered on record two dying declarations, one given by Sunita and other given by her husband shantaram, then there was no reason to disbelieve the dying declaration of Shantaram.

Further, according to Mr. Gavnekar, the story given by deceased Sunita in her dying declaration that accused caught her and Shantaram poured kerosene on her person and both of them set her on fire by a chimani, is totally false. Because if husband Shantaram wanted to kill his wife Sunita in this manner, he would have, at least, taken care to see that he does not receive any injury. In any case, the injuries to shantaram would not have been to such an extent resulting in his immediate death in the hospital.

On the other hand, the learned APP tried to contend that there was no reason to disbelieve the dying declaration of Sunita. He, therefore, urged that there was no merit in this appeal.

5. WE find it difficult to digest the case of prosecution. Admittedly, there is absolutely nothing on record to show or suggest, even remote, that this accused had any illicit relation with Shantaram, nor there is any evidence to show that prior to the incident she repeatedly frequented the house of deceased sunita or, that Shantaram or accused were having intimacy or close relationship.

6. EVEN from the statement of Sunita (Exhibit 20) i. e. the dying declaration, this accused went to her house on that day being a friend of Sunita at 5. 00 p. m. They had food together. They slept together on cot. In such a situation, even if Sunita noticed that accused and Shantaram were having physical intimacy, the accused would not have gone to the extent of burning her friend Sunita in spur of moment, because the accused is not habitual criminal at all.

The proceedings before trial Court show that the prosecution has been not fair at all to the accused. It is not the job of prosecution to try only for the accused conviction, but it is their duty to place all the facts on record. However, the dying declaration of Shantaram even though it was recorded by the SEM was not brought on record and proved. Similarly the post mortem report of Shantaram was also not placed on record and proved. These two documents are in the miscellaneous File containing original police papers. The dying declaration of Shantaram shows that according to Shantaram on that night he was living with his wife and a lady guest i. e. the accused has come at 11. 00 in the night. Shantaram, his wife and the guest were sleeping on one cot. At about 12 in the midnight, his wife Sunita raised suspicion upon him and her friend. Therefore, there was quarrel and his wife poured kerosene upon herself and also upon shantaram and set her fire and then he also caught fired. This was an important piece of evidence collected during investigation and it was necessary for the prosecution as well as the court to get it on record and proved. Similarly the post mortem report of Shantaram shows that shantaram had received 66% of burns.

Not producing and proving these two documents creates strong suspicion about prosecution and it has to be stated that the trial was not at all fair. Both the prosecution and trial court are to be blamed for this lapse.

7. FOR all these reasons, this appeal is required to be allowed and the accused is entitled to be acquitted. We, therefore, pass the following order :-:order: the appeal is allowed. Conviction of the accused under Section 302 r/w 34 of IPC is set aside. She is acquitted. Accused is on bail. Her bail bond shall stand cancelled.

A. Constitution of India, Article 21—Fair Trial—Prosecution withholding statements of witness who do not support prosecution case- Held, prosecution cannot convert itself in to persecution- withholding statements of witness who do not support prosecution case would amount to jeopardize concept of fair trial- the investigating agency and the prosecution both represent the State. Every action of the State is legally required "to be fair, just and reasonable".

In case, the investigating agency and the prosecution withhold any evidence in favour of the accused from the accused, they are not being fair, just and reasonable with the accused. Therefore, their action would be in violation of Article 14 of the constitution of India. Article 21 of the Constitution of India also requires that the procedure established by law should be fair and reasonable. A procedure which permits the withholding of evidence which is in favour of the accused from the court and from the accused, cannot be termed as "fair and reasonable"- Furthermore, in every judicial proceeding the parties are expected to come with clean hands. By withholding the evidence without any legal justification, the prosecution would be hiding vital facts from the Court. It would, thus, come to the Court with unclean hands. The prosecution is expected to reveal the whole truth and nothing but the truth to the Court. Neither the investigating agency, nor the prosecution can be permitted to keep the Court in the dark. full agreement with the views expressed by the learned Judge of this Court in case of Ramesh wamanrao Babhulkar (supra), and the learned Single Judge of Rajasthan High Court, in case of Dhananjay Kumar Singh (supra). It is well settled principle of law, that the prosecution cannot convert itself into persecution. The fundamental right guarantied under Article 21 of the constitution of India would recognize the right of an accused for fair trial. If the prosecution is permitted to withhold statements, only on the ground that they do not support the prosecution case, then the very concept of fair trial would be jeopardized.

Final Verdict :- Criminal Application allowed

Advocates :- E.P.Sawant , Joydeep Chatterji , S.D.Kaldate

JUDGEMENT

1. RULE. Rule made returnable forthwith. Heard by consent.

2. BY way of present application, the applicant challenges the order passed by the learned Ad hoc additional Sessions Judge, Gangakhed, dated 4th September 2006, below Exhibit 51 in Sessions Trial No. 6/2006, thereby rejecting the application of the applicants / accused for direction to the prosecution to produce statements of Dadarao Marotrao Kadam, Bapurao Dnyandeo kadam, Kusumbai Bapurao Kadam and Dadarao Limbaji Kadam, recorded under Section 161 of the Criminal Procedure, 1973.

The factual background, in short, giving rise to the present petition is as under :-The applicants are facing trial in Sessions trial No. 6/2006 before the Ad hoc Additional Sessions judge, Gangakhed, for the offence punishable under sections 498-A, 304-B read with Section 34 of the Indian penal Code, arising out of Crime No. 66/2005 registered at

Police Station, Palam (Taluka Palam, District Parbhani). During the course of trial, the prosecution examined Police Inspector, Mukund Kewle, who is the investigating Officer, as prosecution witness no. 6. In his cross examination, he has deposed thus :

"i recorded statements of dattarao Kadam, Bapurao Kadam, kusum Kadam and Dadarao Limbaji kadam. On going through record, i say that their statements were not filed in court along with charge sheet. It is true to say that statements of these persons were not filed in court along with charge sheet because they did not support prosecutions case. "

After the evidence of PW 6 was recorded, the Counsel for the applicants filed an application below Exhibit 41 seeking a direction to the Investigating Officer to produce statements of the aforesaid four persons which were recorded under Section 161 of the Code of Criminal procedure, 1973. The same came to be rejected on the same day. In the meanwhile, the defence had applied for issuing process to the aforesaid four persons in order to examine them as defence witnesses. This application has been granted and they have been summoned to appear as witnesses. The counsel for the applicants thereafter filed an application below Exhibit 51 purportedly under Section 233 (3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to direct Palam police Station to produce the statements recorded in crime No. 66/2005 under Section 161 Cr. P. C. of the aforesaid four persons. The same came to be rejected. Hence, this application under Section 482 of the Code of criminal Procedure, 1973.

Mr. Chatterjee, learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the applicants, submitted that the learned trial court has not taken into consideration the import of Section 233 (3) of Cr. P. C. He submits that perusal of section 233 (3) would reveal that it is mandatory for a magistrate to issue process for production of the documents. He submits that the refusal can be only on three grounds i. e. if the application is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. He further submits that such a ground has to be recorded by him in writing. He further submits that the judgment of this Court in case of Ashok Ananda Hange Vs. State Maharashtra of Maharashtra, reported in 760 2001 (3) Mh. L. J. 760, is on interpretation of provisions of Section 173 of cr. P. C. and not on the provisions of Section 233 of cr. P. C. and, therefore, reliance placed by the learned trial court was not well placed. He further submitted that in view of the law laid down by the learned Single judge of this Court in case of Ramesh Wamanrao Babhulkar vs. Maharashtra State of Maharashtra, reported in 1995 (2) Mh. L. J. 724 724, the accused is entitled to have copies of all statements of witnesses recorded by prosecution under section 161 of the Code even if a particular statement is not being relied upon by the prosecution. He has further relied upon judgment of Rajasthan High Court in case of dhananjay Rajasthan Kumar Singh Vs. State of Rajasthan, reported in 3873 2006 CRI. L. J. 3873, wherein a similar view has been taken.

3. MR. S. D. Kaldate, learned Counsel appearing on behalf of respondent no. 1 submits that the accused is entitled to only copies of such of the witnesses who are examined by the prosecution.

From the record, it can be seen that though the Investigating Officer has in clear terms admitted that the statements of those four persons have been recorded, they were not filed in the court along with the charge sheet because they did not support the prosecution case. The learned trial court has rejected the application on the sole ground that since the statements are not filed along with the charge sheet, it was not necessary to supply copies of the same to the accused.

4. THEREFORE, the question that arises for consideration is as to whether the accused is entitled to the copies of the statements of persons recorded under section 161 of Cr. P. C. , even if they do not form part of the charge sheet and that such witnesses are not examined by the prosecution. The another question that will also be required to be considered is regarding the scope of section 233 of Cr. P. C. For appreciating the rival contentions, it would be necessary to refer to certain provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973.

Section 161 of Cr. P. C. reads as under :

" (1) Any police officer making an investigation under this chapter, or any police officer not below such rank as the State government may, by general or special order, prescribe in this behalf, acting on the requisition of such officer, may examine orally any person supposed to be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case. (2) Such person shall be bound to answer truly all questions relating to such case put to him by such officer, other than questions the answers to which would have a tendency to expose him to a criminal charge or to a penalty or forfeiture. (3) The police officer may reduce into writing any statement made to him in the course of an examination under this section; and if he does so, he shall make a separate and true record of the statement of each such person whose statement he records. "

Section 162 of Cr. P. C. reads as under :

" (1) No statement made by any person to a police officer in the course of an investigation under this Chapter, shall, if reduced in writing, be signed by the person making it; nor shall any such statement or any record thereof, whether in a police diary or otherwise, or any part of such statement or record, be used for any purpose, save as hereinafter provided, at any inquiry or trial in respect of any offence under investigation at the time when such statement was made : provided that when any witness is called for the prosecution in such inquiry or trial whose statement has been reduced into writing as aforesaid, any part of his statement, if duly proved, may be used by the accused, and with the permission of the Court, by the prosecution, to contradict such witness in the manner provided by section 145 of the Indian evidence Act, 1872 (1 of 1872); and when any part of such statement is so used, any part thereof may also be used in the re-examination of such witness, but for the purpose only of explaining any matter referred to in his cross-examination. (2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to apply to any statement falling within the provisions of clause (1) of section 32 of the Indian Evidence act, 1872 (1 of 1872), or to affect the provisions of section 27 of that Act. Explanation : An omission to state a fact or circumstance in the statement referred to in sub-section (1) may amount to contradiction if the same appears to be significant and otherwise relevant having regard to the context in which such omission occurs and whether any omission amounts to a contradiction in the particular context shall be a question of fact. "

Sub-Section 5 of Section 173 of Cr. P. C. reads as under :

"report of police officer on completion of investigation. (5) When such report is in respect of a case to which section 170 applies, the police officer shall forward to the magistrate along with the report- (a) all documents or relevant extracts thereof on which the prosecution proposes to rely other than those already sent to the Magistrate during investigation; (b) the statements recorded under section 161 of all the persons whom the prosecution proposes to examine as its witnesses. "

Section 207 of Cr. P. C. reads as under : supply to the accused of copy of police report and other documents.

"in any case where the proceeding has been instituted on a police report, the Magistrate shall without delay furnish to the accused, free of cost, a copy of each of the following :- (i) the police report; (ii) the first information report recorded under section 154; (iii) the statements recorded under sub-section (3) of section 161 of all persons whom the prosecution proposes to examine as its witnesses, excluding therefrom any part in regard to which a request for such exclusion has been made by the police officer under sub-section (6) of section 173; (iv) the confessions and statements, if any, recorded under section 164; (v) any other document or relevant extract thereof forwarded to the Magistrate with the police report under sub-section (5) of section 173; provided that the Magistrate may, after perusing any such part of a statement as is referred to in clause (iii) and considering the reasons given by the police officer for the request, direct that a copy of that part of the statement or of such portion thereof as the Magistrate thinks proper, shall be furnished to the accused; provided further that if the magistrate is satisfied that any document referred to in clause (v) is voluminous, he shall, instead of furnishing the accused with a copy thereof, direct that he will only be allowed to inspect it either personally or through pleader in Court. "

Section 233 of Cr. P. C. reads as under :

" (1) Where the accused is not acquitted under section 232, he shall be called upon to enter on his defence and adduce any evidence he may have in support thereof. (2) If the accused puts in any written statement, the Judge shall file it with the record. (3) If the accused applies for the issue of any process for compelling the attendance of any witness or the production of any document or thing, the Judge shall issue such process unless he considers, for reasons to be recorded, that such application should be refused on the ground that it is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. "

It could thus be seen that under Section 161 of Cr. P. C. , a police officer making an investigation may examine orally any person supposed to be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case. It can be seen that such person is bound to answer all queries relating to such case put to him by the Investigating Officer, other than questions the answers to which would have a tendency to expose him to a criminal charge or to a penalty or forfeiture. The Police Officer is authorized to reduce into writing any statement made to him in the course of an examination under the said Section; and if he does so, he shall make a separate and true record of the statement of each of such persons whose statement he records.

Section 162 of Cr. P. C. requires that no statement made by any person to a police officer, if reduced to writing, be signed by the person making the statement. Sub-Section 1 of Section 162 prohibits the use of such statement or any record thereof, whether in a police diary or otherwise, or any part of such statement or record, be used for any purpose, except permitted by the proviso. The proviso to the said Section permits the accused to use any part of his statement if duly proved, to contradict the prosecution witness of whose statement is recorded, in the manner provided under Section 145 of the Indian Evidence Act. Section 173 (5) requires that when report after completion of investigation is sent to the Magistrate, all documents or relevant extracts thereof on which the prosecution proposes to rely, and the statements recorded under Section 161 of all the persons whom the prosecution proposes to examine as its witnesses, are to be forwarded along with the report. Section 207 of Cr. P. C. mandates furnishing of the accused free of costs copies of certain documents along with the statements recorded under Sub-Section 3 of section 161 of all persons whom the prosecution proposes to examine as its witnesses, excluding therefrom any part in regard to which a request for such exclusion has been made by the police officer under Sub-Section 6 of Section 173. Sub-Section 6 of Section 173 provides that if the police officer is of opinion that any part of any such statement is not relevant to the subject matter of the proceedings or that its disclosure to the accused is not essential in the interests of justice and is inexpedient in the public interest, he shall indicate that part of the statement and append a note requesting the Magistrate to exclude that part from the copies to be granted to the accused. The police officer is also required to state his reasons for making such request. Section 233 of Cr. P. C. enables an accused after he enters his defence, to apply to the Magistrate to issue any process for compelling the attendance of any witness for the purpose of examination or cross examination, or the production of any document or other thing. It further provides that if such an application is made, the Magistrate shall issue such process unless he considers that such application should be refused on the ground that it is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. It further provides that such grounds shall be recorded by him in writing.

5. IT can be seen from the aforesaid provisions that a valuable right is available to an accused under section 162 of Cr. P. C. , to confront a prosecution witness with any part of his statement which is duly proved to contradict such a witness in the manner provided under section 145 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872. It can further be seen that as per provisions of Section 173 (5) (b) and Section 207 (iii) of Cr. P. C. , a police officer is bound to forward to the Magistrate, along with his report, the statement of all the persons whom the prosecution proposes to examine as its witnesses, and that the Magistrate is duty bound to furnish to the accused, free of costs copies of statements recorded under Sub-Section 3 of Section 161 of all persons whom the prosecution proposes to examine as its witnesses. However, a part therefrom could be excluded for which a request for such exclusion is made by the Investigating officer under Sub-Section 6 of Section 173 and granted by the learned Magistrate.

6. THE learned Single Judge of this Court in case of Ramesh Wamanrao Babhulkar Vs. State of maharashtra (supra), has held thus :

"it thus appears to be an established position that the accused is entitled to have the copies of all the statements of witnesses for prosecution recorded under section 161, criminal Procedure Code, even if that particular statement is not being relied upon by the prosecution, it being unfavourable to the prosecution. "

The learned Single Judge of Rajasthan High court, in case of Dhananjay Kumar Singhs case (supra), dealing with similar situation, has observed thus :

"28 28. Despite the legal provisions, despite the case law, there is still a school of thought which postulates that the police and the prosecution can withhold information both from the accused and the Court. According to this thinking, in case the prosecution does not wish to rely on the statements of certain witness, or on some piece of evidence, then it is not bound to disclose the same, even if the evidence is in the favour of the accused. Such an interpretation would be both against the Principles of natural Justice and against the concept of fair play. Undoubtedly, principles of Natural Justice are an integral part of a fair trial. Article 21 of the Constitution of india and the Universal Declaration, mentioned above, both guarantee a fair trial to the accused. Even if the code does not contain any provision for providing "all" the evidence collected by the investigating agency, such a provision has to be read into the Code. For, principle of Natural justice - audi alteram partem - would have to be read into the Code. It is tried to state that opportunity of hearing means effective and substantial hearing. Truncated evidence, half hidden evidence given to the accused or placed before the court, do not amount to effective hearing. Thus, under the principle of audi alteram partem the accused would have the right to access the evidence which is in his favour, but which the prosecution is unwilling to produce in the Court and whose disclosure does not harm the public interest. In case the relevant evidence in favour of the accused is not supplied, we would be creating "kangaroo Courts" and weaving an illusion of justice. Such Courts and such illusions are an anathema to the judicial sense of fair play. "

29. Moreover, the investigating agency and the prosecution both represent the State. Every action of the State is legally required "to be fair, just and reasonable". In case, the investigating agency and the prosecution withhold any evidence in favour of the accused from the accused, they are not being fair, just and reasonable with the accused. Therefore, their action would be in violation of Article 14 of the constitution of India. Article 21 of the Constitution of India also requires that the procedure established by law should be fair and reasonable. A procedure which permits the withholding of evidence which is in favour of the accused from the court and from the accused, cannot be termed as "fair and reasonable". Thus, such a procedure would be in violation of Article 21 of the constitution of India. Therefore, section 172 (3) would have to be interpreted in such a way as to make it commensurative with the constitutional spirit.

30. Furthermore, in every judicial proceeding the parties are expected to come with clean hands. By withholding the evidence without any legal justification, the prosecution would be hiding vital facts from the Court. It would, thus, come to the Court with unclean hands. The prosecution is expected to reveal the whole truth and nothing but the truth to the Court. Neither the investigating agency, nor the prosecution can be permitted to keep the Court in the dark. After all, half-baked truths are unpalatable to the judicial taste. " in am in full agreement with the views expressed by the learned Judge of this Court in case of Ramesh wamanrao Babhulkar (supra), and the learned Single Judge of Rajasthan High Court, in case of Dhananjay Kumar Singh (supra). It is well settled principle of law, that the prosecution cannot convert itself into persecution. The fundamental right guarantied under Article 21 of the constitution of India would recognize the right of an accused for fair trial. If the prosecution is permitted to withhold statements, only on the ground that they do not support the prosecution case, then the very concept of fair trial would be jeopardized. I am unable to persuade myself to agree with the view taken by the learned Single Judge of this Court in case of Ashok ananda Hange (supra). The learned Judge has not taken into consideration the effect of Sections 207 and 233 of cr. P. C. It is a cardinal principle of interpretation, that a single Section of a statute cannot be read in isolation but various Sections are to be construed harmoniously. Secondly, the learned Judge in this case does not notice the earlier view taken by this Court in case of Ramesh Wamanrao Babhulkar (supra). In that view of the matter, I find that the accused was entitled to statement of the witnesses, as prayed for.

There is another angle from which the present matter needs to be looked into. Section 173 (5) (b), so also, Section 207 (iii) of Cr. P. C. refer to the statements of persons to whom the prosecution proposes to examine as its witnesses. From the record, it can be seen that the aforesaid four persons were listed as prosecution witnesses initially. It is thus clear that the prosecution has initially proposed to examine them. However, the said statements were not filed in the Court along with the charge sheet only because they did not support the prosecution case. I am of the view that from the plain reading of Section 173 (5) (b) and Section 207 (iii) of Cr. P. C. , it is the duty of the Investigating Officer to forward copies of statement of all such persons to whom the prosecution proposes to examine. In the present case, the names of the aforesaid persons were mentioned in the list of witnesses. As I have already discussed herein above, the said statements could not be withheld only on the ground that they would have strengthened the defence of the accused persons. The prosecution is not supposed to be interested in ensuring conviction of the accused in any circumstance. What is expected, is to assist the court in unearthing the truth.

Then the question comes as to what is the scope of Section 233 of Cr. P. C. A bare perusal of sub-Section 3 of Section 233 would reveal that when accused applies for the issue of any process for compelling the attendance of any witness or the production of any document or thing, the Judge shall issue such process unless he considers, for reasons to be recorded, that such application should be refused on the ground that it is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. It can thus be clearly seen that when an accused exercises his right under Sub-Section 3 of Section 233 for compelling the attendance of any witness or production of any document, the learned Magistrate can refuse the said request only on three grounds : (i) vexation, (ii) delay, and (iii)defeating the ends of justice. Moreover, the Magistrate is required to record his reasons for refusing the request. A bare perusal of the said Section would reveal that except those three grounds, the request cannot be turned down on any other ground.

7. A perusal of the impugned order would reveal that the learned Magistrate has not referred to any of the three grounds as contemplated under Section 233 of cr. P. C. , while refusing request of the applicants. The request is rejected only on the statement made on behalf of the prosecution, that their names are not mentioned in the charge sheet. In that view of the matter, I find that the impugned order is unsustainable in law, on this ground also.

In the result, the Criminal Application is allowed and the rule is made absolute in terms of prayer clause b" "b".

SUPREME COURT OF INDIA

Hon'ble Judge(s) : Y. K. SABHARWAL AND K. G. BALAKRISHNAN, JJ.

Bijay Kumar Mahanty ….V/s …. Jachi Ram Chandra Sahoo
Criminal Appeal 441 of 1993 Dec. 13, 2002

Contempt of lawful order by Police – Officer – The police officer arrested the accuse even if he was granted bail by the Court – The Police officer was found to be guilty of contempt of Court – He was sentenced to imprisonment of 7 days – While confirming the sentences Hon'ble Supreme Court observed that,

(1) Police Officers are supposed to be the members of a disciplined force. It is of utmost importance to curb any tendency in them to flout orders of the court. It is more so when flouting of order results in deprivation of personal liberty of an individual. If protectors of law, to take revenge, defy court orders they will have to be sternly dealt with and appropriate punishment inflicted also with a view to send a message across the board that such an act cannot be countenanced.

(2) The rule of law is the foundation of the democratic society. The judiciary is the guardian of the rule of law. If the orders of the court are disobeyed with impunity by those who owe an obligation to the society to preserve the rule of law, not only would individual litigants suffer, the whole administration of justice would be brought into disrepute.

(3) Lastly, it was contended that instead of imprisonment, fine be imposed on the appellant. In a matter of this nature, where a police officer, disregarding the bail order, arrests a person because case against him is of alleged assault on one of police official, we do not think that mere sentence of the fine would meet the ends of justice. No interference is called for in the judgment and order in the High Court. The appeal is accordingly dismissed.

Y.K.SABHARWAL

(1) Police Officers are supposed to be the members of a disciplined force. It is of utmost importance to curb any tendency in them to flout orders of the court. It is more so when flouting of order results in deprivation of personal liberty of an individual. If protectors of law, to take revenge, defy court orders they will have to be sternly dealt with and appropriate punishment inflicted also with a view to send a message across the board that such an act cannot be countenanced.

(2) The appellant is a police officer. At the relevant time, i.e., on 13th November, 1990, he was the officer-in-charge of the police station in question. A police officer of that police station had reported that the respondent had assaulted him on 30th September, 1990 which was the immersion day of Goddess Durga while he was on duty and the respondent had been asked by him to give side to other image (Medha) to pass. A case was registered against the respondent.

(3) Now, the admitted facts. In connection with the aforesaid case, the respondent was arrested by the appellant on 13th November, 1990 from his residence at 7.30 a.m. He was kept in police custody and was produced before the magistrate on 14th November. The respondent in respect of this very case had been granted bail by the sessions judge on 6th November, 1990. The respondent had obtained certified copy of the order of bail on 7th November. The respondent was produced before the magistrate on 14th November when his advocate produced a certified copy of the order of the sessions judge and, thus, he was released by the magistrate.

(4) The only controversy is whether the respondent had produced, before the appellant, the certified copy of the order of bail at the time of his arrest. According to the respondent it was produced. In the proceedings of contempt that was initiated by the High Court, on receipt of reference from the sessions judge, Cuttack, appellant denied that the copy of the bail order was produced before him. The High Court, on appreciation of evidence, held that copy of the bail order was produced before the appellant who arrested the respondent despite it. The appellant was held guilty of contempt and was sentenced for civil imprisonment for a period of seven days. Under these circumstances, this appeal has been filed under section 19 of the Contempt of Courts Act, 1971 (for short, the 'Act').

(5) It is of paramount public interest that the people, after obtaining an order of the court, should not feel helpless or without any remedy when such order is flouted.

(6) In Advocate General, Bihar v. M. P. Khair Industries, this Court said that"... it may be necessary to punish as a contempt a course of conduct, which abuses and makes a mockery of the judicial process and which thus extends its pernicious influence beyond the parties to the action and affects the interest of the public in the administration of justice. The public have an interest, an abiding and a real interest and vital stake in the effective and orderly administration of justice, because unless justice is so administered, there is the peril of all rights and liberties perishing. The court has the duty of protecting the interest of the public in the due administration of justice and so it is contempt of court not in order to protect the dignity of the court against 'Contempt of Court1 may seem to suggest, but to protect and to vindicate the right of the public that the administration of justice shall not be prevented, prejudiced, obstructed or interfered with."

(7) The rule of law is the foundation of the democratic society. The judiciary is the guardian of the rule of law. If the orders of the court are disobeyed with impunity by those who owe an obligation to the society to preserve the rule of law, not only would individual litigants suffer, the whole administration of justice would be brought into disrepute.

(8) The case against the appellant was held proved by the High Court on appreciation of evidence, perusal of the original record of the case flies including the certified copy of the bail order that had been obtained and its condition.

(9) Mr. Mehta, learned counsel for the appellant, submits that the finding of guilt was returned against the appellant by the High Court without production of any independent evidence. The finding, it is contended is based on probabilities when the requirement of law is that the charge of contempt shall be proved beyond any reasonable doubt. It was also contended that the appellant, while forwarding the respondent to the magistrate, had mentioned at the end in his own hand that the respondent told him about the bail order having been passed by the learned sessions Judge which shows his bona fides. The further contention is that belief of the appellant that the respondent had been granted bail was of no consequence since it was his duty to arrest the respondent in connection with the case registered against him and he could not release the respondent merely acting on his belief. Further, it was submitted that the respondent did not produce the bail order before the SDO and SDPO who had come to the police station on tension being created after the arrest of the respondent.

(10) We have no difficulty in accepting the contention that the case against the appellant is required to be proved beyond reasonable doubt. The contempt proceedings under the Act are quasi criminal. The standard of proof required is that of criminal proceedings. Therefore, the charge has to be established beyond reasonable doubt (see Mirtyunjoy Das and Anr. v. Sayed Hasibur Rahaman and Ors.).

(11) We are, however, unable to accept the contention of the learned counsel that the charge against the appellant has not been proved beyond reasonable doubt. The respondent was arrested at 7.30 a.m. from his residence. The only other person available at that time when the certified copy of the bail order was shown to the appellant was the mother of the respondent who was examined as a witness. The appellant crushed the order. Different persons have the tendency to use different language -while narrating the same incident. It is of no consequence that the respondent at one stage stated that the bail order when produced was 'torn', at another stage stated that it was 'bundled' and with reference to that order, his mother used the word 'rubbed'. The said order, as already noticed, was examined by the High Court before arriving at the finding that it bears marks of violence. The appellant admitted that as per his belief the respondent had been granted bail. If that was so, appellant would have given an opportunity to the respondent to produce that order instead of arresting him despite that belief. The appellant wanted to arrest the respondent any way. The case related to an alleged assault on a police officer of a police station of which the appellant was in- charge. No fault can be found with the finding of the High Court that the act was a result of revenge which prompted the appellant to act against his belief that the respondent had been granted bail and act against such a belief. There was tension as a result of the arrest of the respondent because he was arrested despite bail order. There was nothing to show that the respondent was produced before the SDO and SDPO when they visited the police station. It is nobody's case that those officers met the respondent. The High Court has rightly held the appellant guilty of contempt of court.

(12) Learned counsel for the appellant contends that apology that has now been tendered by the appellant may be accepted. The incident relates to the year 1990. The respondent was deprived of his personal liberty despite grant of bail by the sessions judge. The appellant has tendered the apology only now after lapse of nearly 12 years. The appeal was admitted in the year in 1993. The case has been on board for quite some time. The apology has been tendered only on 30th November, 2002. The apology has to be sincere and not merely to escape the punishment. In our view, it is not a fit case where the apology tendered at this belated stage ought to be accepted.

(13) Lastly, it was contended that instead of imprisonment, fine be imposed on the appellant. In a matter of this nature, where a police officer, disregarding the bail order, arrests a person because case against him is of alleged assault on one of police official, we do not think that mere sentence of the fine would meet the ends of justice. No interference is called for in the judgment and order in the High Court. The appeal is accordingly dismissed.

Contempt of Courts Act (70 of 1971), S.12(3) - CONTEMPT OF COURT - BAIL - POLICE ATROCITIES -Deterrent punishment - Police officials arresting person in violation of order of anticipatory bail passed by Court - Art. 21 of Constitution violated - Sentence of fine would not meet ends of justice, especially when condemner was police official - Civil imprisonment for seven days awarded – Police officer are protector of Law – If they violates the law they should be punished severely.

Mr. S. K. Das, Govt. Advocate, for Petitioner; Mr. G. Rath and Mr. B. R. Sarangi, for Respondent; Mr. D. Panda and Mr. S. C. Mohapatra, for Intervenor.

JUDGEMENT : HANSARIA, C. J. :- The opposite party, a police officer, has faced this contempt proceeding. At the relevant time, he was the Officer-in-charge of Pattamundai Police Station. The proceeding has been initiated on a reference from the Sessions, Judge, Cuttack. The allegation is that the opposite party arrested one Jadu alias Ramachandra Sahoo, who has intervened in this case and would be described hereinafter as 'the intervenor', in C.R. Case No. 855 of 1990 on 13-11-1990, despite a certified copy of the order dated 6-11-1990 of the Sessions Judge, Cuttack, releasing the intervenor in the said case on bail having been produced before the former, which was not honoured. The defence of the contemner-opposite party is that the copy of the order in question had not been produced, and it is only in the police station, where the intervenor had been taken afterwards, that mention was made by him about his having been released on bail. He was thereafter forwarded to the court of the S.D.J.M. Kendrapara and was produced on 14-11-1990 before the said court, when his advocate had produced for the first time a certified copy of the order of the Sessions Judge, when he was released on bail by the S.D.J.M.

2. The only point for decision, therefore, is whether from the materials on record it can be held that the certified copy of the order of release passed by the learned Sessions Judge had been produced before the opposite party when he arrested the intervenor (Jadu) on 13-11-1990.

3. Shri Rath appearing for the opposite party submits that three circumstances would belie the allegation. These are : (i) a look at the certified copy of the order, which is in the file of I.C.C. Case No. 301 of 1990 instituted by the intervenor himself against the opposite party on the allegation of wrongful confinement etc., would show that this order does not bear any mark of tearing, which would belie the case of the intervenor that when the certified copy of the order was shown to the opposite party, it was torn by him; (ii) the S. D.O. and the S.D.P.O., who had come to Pattamundai police station on a tense situation having been created after the intervenor had been kept confined in the police station, were not reported by him that the opposite party had arrested him despite a certified copy of the bail order having been shown to him; and (iii) the order of the S.D.J.M., Kendrapara passed on 14-11-1990 itself would show that when the intervener was produced before him, the certified copy of the order of bail was produced by his advocate, before which nothing had been stated by him even about his release on bail by the Sessions Judge.

4. In so far as the first circumstance is concerned, Shri Rath brings to our notice the statement made by the intervenor in Miscellaneous Case No. 1017 of 1990 of the court of the Sessions Judge, Cuttack (which is the case which terminated in the present reference), a Photostat copy of which is on record, that after the certified copy of the order had been shown to the opposite party, he used unparliamentarily words against the court and "tore the order the threw it at a distance". In cross-examination, however, the statement was that the opposite party had 'bundled' the bail order the threw it to a distance. Reference to other evidence on record, namely, the evidence of the mother of the intervenor who was examined in the aforesaid case as witness No. 3 (the intervenor having been examined as witness No. 1), shows that according to her, the opposite party "snatched the bail order, rubbed it and threw it away".

5. The aforesaid shows that though the intervener in his examination-in-chief stated about the tearing of the bail order, if the entire evidence is taken in its totality, the same would show that the allegation cannot really be taken to be 'tearing' of the certified copy of the order but of showing violence to it - which was described by the intervenor in his examination-in-chief as 'tearing', in his cross-examination as 'bundling', and by his mother as 'rubbing'. Too such emphasis on the word 'tearing' alone would not, therefore, be justified. We have to see the substratum of the case and should not confine our attention to a particular word used once. To satisfy ourselves whether violence was used, we have perused and certified copy of the order, which is on the record of the aforesaid case, which does bear marks of violence. The certified copy further shows that application for the same was made on 7-11-1990 and it was granted also on the same day. The first circumstance relied on by Shri Rath does not, therefore, belie the allegation.

6. Shri Panda appearing for the intervenor urges in this context that the certified copy having been obtained on 7-11-1990, there could not have been any earthly reason not to show it to the opposite party who had come to arrest the intervenor. The submission is undoubtedly weighty and merits acceptance. At this stage, it may be stated that the release order by the Sessions Judge was on a petition under Section 439, Cr. P.C. and perusal of the connected records - the same being Criminal Miscellaneous Case No. 892 of 1990 - shows that the intervenor had surrendered before the court of Sessions Judge on 5-11-1990. Earlier to that, the Intervenor had approached the Sessions Judge on 16-10-1990 under Section 438, Cr. P.C. praying for anticipatory bail. In that case, the A.P.P. was asked to produce the case diary, but ultimately that petition was not pressed and was rejected on 5-11-1990, and on the same day an application under Section 439, Cr. P.C. was filed, which came to be allowed on 6-11-1990 after remanding the accused Jadu to custody on 5-11-1990. We have mentioned about this aspect of the case, because

Shri Rath at one stage had submitted, albeit faintly, as to the legality of the order of the Sessions Judge releasing the intervenor on bail by his order dated 6-11-1990. On being asked as to whether it would be open to the opposite party to question the legality of the order in this proceeding and not to obey the same for that reason, Shri Rath, however, fairly submitted that this stand could not have been taken by the opposite party and that he has really not taken that stand in this case.

7. As to the second circumstance, there is nothing on record before us to show as to whether the intervenor had made any grievance or not to the S.D.O. and the S.D.P.O., who had admittedly come to Pattamundai police station where the intervenor had been kept confined on 13-11-1990 after his arrest. For the present case, we need not go into the background as to why the S.D.O. and the S.D.P.O. had to come to that police station and whether the same was due to the effort on the part of the associates of the intervenor to take him away forcibly from the police station, which led to a tense situation, or whether it was because of the public resentment in having taken the intervener to the police station from his residence handcuffed and naked, as is submitted by Shri Panda - the first version having been given by Shri Rath. It is, however, undisputed that these two officers did come to the police station. But, as already stated, what transpired between them is not known. What, however, appears from the forwarding report of the opposite party is that in that report, the whole of which is typewritten, there is an addition by hand at page 3 reading : "He (accd.) says that he is released on bail but he could not produce the order of the court". This shows that something must have transpired which led the opposite party to insert this in the forwarding report.

8. Shri Panda refers in this connection to the evidence of the opposite party given in Criminal Miscellaneous Case No. 1017 of 1990 wherein it is stated in his examination-in-chief that though initially the intervener had not disclosed about his bail, but as he did it afterwards, he mentioned this fact in his own handwriting in the forwarding report. The learned counsel draws our pointed attention to the statement made in cross-examination by the opposite party that he had "believed the version of the petitioner while forwarding him to the court that he was granted bail by the Court of Sessions". The learned counsel states that nothing further is left to show that despite the opposite party having believed that the petitioner was released on bail, which belief must have been based, according to the learned counsel, because of the production of the certified copy of the order of bail, the intervener was arrested and, as such, the opposite party wilfully violated the Sessions Judge's order.

9. Shri Rath, however, first submits in this connection that the aforesaid statement of the opposite party would show that he had perhaps believed the aforesaid version of the intervener or that he might have believed the same. The effort of the learned counsel is to water down the weight of the statement and to protect the opposite party from the consequence of the categorical admission made by him. We would not read the aforesaid statement as "might have believed" or "perhaps believed". It is just 'believed'. There is no ambiguity in the statement; it is quite clear. It is also not an off the cuff statement made by the opposite party - it was made in a court of law in case which had been instituted against him for initiating contempt proceeding relating to the matter at hand. Then, the opposite party is not a rustic illiterate villager not knowing the import of the admission made by him in cross-examination. He is a responsible police officer. For these reasons, the importance and significance of the aforesaid statement cannot be allowed to be diluted.

10. Shri Rath then submits that the opposite party might have believed about the release of the intervener on bail because of the fact that at one stage a petition for anticipatory bail had been filed by the intervener in connection with which the case diary had been called for from the police station, which might have led the opposite party to believe that the intervener might have been released on bail. We do not propose to examine this contention, because whatever might have been the source of information to the opposite party about the release of the intervener on bail, once he took the source to be authentic and believed the factual aspect, it is not necessary to find out as to what was the source and whether the same was authentic or not. It is for this reason that we do not propose to address ourselves on the question as to whether, if the information had been given by the intervener himself, the source could be called authentic, which, according to Shri Rath, could not be so taken. Of course, the learned counsel fairly agrees that if this information would have been derived by the opposite party from an authentic source, then he was bound to act in accordance with it, even if no certified copy of the order would have been produced before him. The learned counsel has agreed to this aspect of the matter, because the same is founded on four decisions of the apex Court, namely, B. K. Kar v. Chief Justice of Orissa, AIR 1961 SC 1367 : (1961 (2) Cri L.J. 438); Hoshiar Singh v. Gurbachan Singh, AIR 1962 SC 1089 : (1962 (2) Cri L.J. 236); Burnna Prasad v. State of U.P., AIR 1968 SC 1348 : (1968 Cri L.J. 1514); and Aligarh Municipal Board v. Ekka Tonga Mazdoor Union, AIR 1970 SC 1767 : 1970 Cri L.J. 1520.

11. We may say a few words here as to why, according to us, despite the opposite party believing that the intervener had been granted bail, he arrested the latter and what prompted him to do so in violation of the order. If a person believes a certain thing to be true, he would normally like to act in conformity with and not against the fact which is believed to be true; and if he does so, there must be strong reason for the same. It is not a case, in our view, where madness led the opposite party to act as he had done, and if it was madness, there was method in it, which Hamlet found. The reason for acting against the fact believed to be true by the opposite party is not difficult to find. The reason was that the intervener was an accused in a case which related to assault on police officer of Pattamundai police station of which the opposite party was the Officer-in-charge and about which alleged action of the intervener the opposite party himself had been reported, as would appear from what is being stated later. So, we are inclined to think that it was the felt necessity of revenge which prompted the opposite party to act against his belief. Be that as it may, the second circumstance mentioned by Shri Rath has no cutting edge.

12. This leaves for consideration the third circumstance mentioned by Shri Rath. That relates to the order passed by the S.D.J.M., Kendrapara before whom the intervener had been produced on 14-11-1990, a copy of which is Annexure 5. That order can be divided into two parts. The first part is about production of the intervenor, non-moving of bail and ordering for remand till 24-11-1990. The second part deals with filing of power by an advocate named Shri Benudhar Rout along with a petition and a certified copy, inter alia, of the concerned order. Shri Rath submits that this shows and shows clearly, that the certified copy of the order was really in possession, and it is because of this that in when the advocate appeared, he filed the copy of the order, which, not being with the intervener earlier could not be filed by him.

13. As to the aforesaid circumstance, the submission of Shri Panda is that the intervener having been taken into custody and the certified copy of the order having been thrown away by the opposite party while arresting the intervener, it was apparently not in his possession when he was produced before the S.D.J.M.; but that certified copy was picked up by somebody and was handed over to the advocate who produced it before the S.D.J.M. Shri Panda also submits that the normal practice in courts like that of S.D.J.M. is that the formal part of the order is written by the Bench Clerk sometimes, and in the second half the court takes up the matter and passes the final order. On Shri Panda making a submission that a perusal of the order as passed by the S.D.J.M. would bear his submission, the records were called for and we have perused the same. It does show that a part of that (a copy of which is Annexure 5 of aforesaid Misc. Case No. 1017/90) had been written by somebody else than the S.D.J.M., he should be the Bench Clerk. That was so from its beginning till "Custody till 24-11-1990" (from page 1 of the aforesaid annexure to the first part of fourth line of page 2. Of course, some alterations were made later in this part perhaps by the S.D.J.M.). The remaining part and the one in which mention has been made about filing of a power by advocate Shri Rout is in the hand of the Presiding Officer. So, from what has been stated in the order of 14-11-1990, it cannot be said that the certified copy of the order of release was really in possession of the advocate and was not with the petitioner at all at any time prior to the same having been produced by the advocate before the S.D.J.M. on 14-11-1990.

14. To satisfy our mind fully as to whether it could at all be that the order was with advocate Shri Rout, we called for other records, namely, Criminal Miscellaneous Case No. 892 of 1990 of the Sessions Judge, Cuttuck, in which the order of bail had been passed, as also Criminal Miscellaneous Case No. 836 of 1990, which dealt with the prayer of the intervener under Section 438, Cr. P.C. These records show that Shri Rout was nowhere in the picture when these orders were passed; not even when the C.J.M. had accepted the bail bonds etc., records relating to which are also available in G. R. Case No. 855 of 1990, which forms part of record of S.T. Case No. 141/30 of 1989, which is the number of the court of the Sessions Judge, to whom of the intervener was committed to stand trial for the offence in question, which gave rise to G.R. Case No. 855 of 1990. All these show that Shri Rout came into picture, so far as the present case in concerned, only when the intervener was produced before the S.D.J.M. on 14-11-1990.

15. Because of what had been stated above, we would hold that the circumstances sought to be relied on by Shri Rath cannot assist the opposite party.

16. We have another observation to make before we conclude on the question of guilt. The same is that the case in which the intervener was arrested was one in which the informant was none else than a police officer of Pattamundai police station itself and the allegation was that on 30-9-1990, which was the immersion day of Goddess Dugra, he was on duty and the intervener was asked to give side to other 'Medha' (i.e. image) when the latter is said to have accosted the former and throttleld him, but somehow the police officer escaped. This was reported to the Officer-in-charge of the police station, the opposite party himself, and a case was registered. This shows that the police officers of Pattamundai police station (including the opposite party) might have adopted a revengeful attitude against the intervener and despite his having been released on bail by the Sessions Judge, they thought it fit to arrest him and teach him a lesson.

17. In view of all the above, we are satisfied that the intervener had been arrested by the opposite party despite the former having produced the order of bail passed by a competent court. We, therefore, find the opposite party guilty of contempt.

18. This takes us to the question of sentence. Section 12(3) of the Contempt of Courts Act, 1971 may indicate that it is sentence of fine which should normally be awarded when a person is found guilty of civil contempt, as has the opposite party been, but if a special case is made out to show that sentence of fine would not meet the ends of justice and sentence of imprisonment is necessary, the Court should direct detention in civil confinement.

19. Let it be seen what nature of sentence is merited in the case at hand. This is not the first occasion when a person has been found guilty of civil contempt by this Court and punished for the same. Indeed, such cases have been many. This Court had occasion to express its mind recently in a number of cases as to what harm commission of civil contempt causes to the entire system of administration of justice and as to why a strict view on sentence is called for to root out this evil, about which it has been stated that of late it has become alien to cancerous growth calling for recourse to strong measures to see that justice becomes available to all, who would not get it if lawful orders of competent courts are violated, which would result in people with muscle power and money power alone being able to settle score on streets.

20. Of course, sentence has to be awarded keeping in view the facts and circumstances of each case and there can be no precedence in such a matter. A sentence has to be tailor-made; it cannot be ready-made. Let us see what where the broad facts of the present case. Let us also see who is the offender. It is both the offence and the offender which is required to be borne in mind while deciding appropriate sentence apart from keeping in view the impact the sentence awarded is likely to have on the society. Further, awarding of sentence is guided by four stars - they represent retribution, prevention, deterrence and reformation. All of them are required to be considered in their proper perspective to decide the quantum of sentence.

21. Let us first see what constituted civil contempt in the present case. The same is arrest of a person in defiance of Court's order. The act, therefore, violated even the fundamental right enshrined in Art. 21 of the Constitution. The liberty of the intervener had been taken away without authority of law; indeed, in gross violation of law. May be that the intervener is involved in many cases and may be he is an undesirable person, as mentioned by Shri Rath obliquely. This presentation of the intervener is disputed by Shri Panda, according to whom, the intervener is a respectable person as he is a Sarpanch of Pattamundai Gram Panchayat and an ex-Councillor of Pattamundai N.A.C., as stated in the petition filed before the Sessions Judge which gave rise to Miscellaneous Case No. 1017 of 1990. Be that as it may, the offence alleged against the intervener in G.R. Case No. 855 of 1990, in which he was arrested, was one which does not speak about his depravity - the alleged assault etc. had taken place when a procession for immersion of Goddess Dugra was being taken and police officer had asked to give side to another procession. There is no baseness here, no moral turpitude is involved. Then, the intervener is undoubtedly a citizen of India and this Court has to see that liberty of an Indian, even of bad character, is taken away only in accordance with the procedure established by law. If a person protected by Art. 21 is allowed to be arrested despite an order prohibiting it, a serious view has to be taken to preserve and protect rule of law.

22. Let us now see who is the offender. He is none else than a police officer, who is to maintain rule of law. He is a limb of the law enforcing agency and cannot become part and parcel of law violating agency. Further, he is no ordinary police officer. At the relevant time he was the Officer-in-charge of a police station to whom people look forward to protect themselves from the violaters of law. An Officer-in-charge of a police station is clothed with so vast powers by the Code of Criminal Procedure that an offence committed by such a person has to be viewed seriously. The higher the power, the greater the responsibility of the holder of power.

23. As to retribution, it can be said that the same has no relevance when a Court decides to punish a contemner. The grossest form of retribution is "eye for eye, tooth for tooth". It is not with a view to retribute at all that Courts spring into action to punish a contemner, there is perhaps some misconception in this regard. Retribution has no place in a case where a Court decides to punish a contemner. It is not to preserve the dignity of the Court that it punishes or wants to punish a contemner; it is really to preserve the rule of law and the faith of the people in the system of administration of justice that Courts come forward to discharge this unpleasant duty.

24. Prevention, of course, has its place in the sentencing ethos even while sentencing a contemner because repetition of the offence of contempt is something which a Court would like to take care of, and adequate care at that because this cannot be allowed to become part of habit, as it does not augur well in a polity governed by rule of law.

25. Deterrence is definitely a factor to be borne in mind. The violator of Court's order has to be punished in such a way that others would think twice, indeed, think many times, before they take to their head to violate Court's order, which, as stated in by this Court in a number of cases, has very wide ramifications.

26. Reformation not relevant in the present case. The trait of character, which can be said to lie at the root of the offence at hand is not such which by a reformative touch can really bring about a change in the character of the offender, as it was the desire to take revenge which was responsible for the offence. The desire for revenge has been at the root of many evils; many wars have been fought for this from time immemorial. A person who would like to take revenge would go almost mad and would take resource to all actions - legal or illegal, moral or immoral, right or wrong, good or bad, - just to feed fat his grudge. Such is the intensity of a feeling of revenge in a human mind that reformation has perhaps a very little role to take care of this type of mental set up.

27. Bearing in mind all the aforesaid aspects of the matter concerning sentence and the need to preserve rule of law and the further stark fact that the contemner is none else than the one who owes as obligation to the society to preserve rule of law, we are of the opinion that a sentence of fine would not meet the ends of justice and the present has to be a case where sentence of civil imprisonment has to be awarded. But then, this sentence need not be for long duration. We are of the view civil imprisonment for a period of seven days would be the proper, reasonable and adequate sentence to be awarded in the present case, and we so award.

28. The proceeding is closed by finding the opposite party guilty of civil contempt and by sentencing him for the same to civil imprisonment for seven days.

29. K. MOHANTY, J. :- I agree. Order accordingly.

S.K. Padhi, Sr. Counsel and Associates, for Petitioner; D.P. Dhal, for Respondent.

Judgement:- Petitioner assails the order dated 19-1-2004 passed in I. C. C. No. 28/2002 wherein the learned S. D. J. M., Chhatrapur has taken cognizance of the offences under Sections 218/294, I. P. C. and under Ss. 3(1), (ix), (x), (xv), 3(2), (vi), (vii) and 4 of the S. C. and S. T. (P. A.) Act, 1989 and issued process against the petitioner.

2. It is alleged that on 11-10-2002 while the complainant-opposite party was engaged in grazing his cattle, he was abused and assaulted by some of his villagers. Petitioner was the Officer-in-charge of Hinjili Police Station at the relevant time. In order to lodge complaint, the complainant went to Hinjili P. S. and met the petitioner. The petitioner, however, did not entertain the complaint, on the contrary, complainant (opp. party) was arrested and forwarded to the Court and on the basis of which, G. R. Case No. 376/2002 was initiated. After release, the complainant-opp. party filed a complaint case against the petitioner and four others and the learned Magistrate after conducting enquiry under S. 202, Cr. P. C. took cognizance of the offences as aforesaid. The petitioner challenges the said order on the ground that he being a public servant cannot be prosecuted without a valid sanction.

3. Admittedly, the petitioner was the Officer-in-Charge, Hinjili P. S. and as such, he was a public servant at the relevant time. Petitioner is entitled to the protection under S. 197, Cr. P. C. provided, it is found that he was engaged in the performance of his official duties and the act or omission alleged against him has any reasonable nexus with discharge of his duty. It is well settled in law that in order to extend the protection given to the public servant under S. 197, Cr. P. C., it is to be seen as to whether the alleged act committed by the public servant is reasonably connected with the discharge of his official duty. At the same time, if the public servant is under any legal obligation to do certain act and he omitted or neglected to do the same, he cannot claim the privilege. In this regard the Apex Court has clarified the position that Section 197, Cr. P. C. needs to be construed strictly while determining its applicability to any act or omission in the course of service. (See (2004) 8 SCC 40 : (2004 Cri LJ 2011) State of Orissa v. Ganesh Chandra Jew).

4. Applying the above principle enunciated by the Apex Court, the allegations levelled against the petitioner need to be scrutinized to determine as to whether the petitioner is entitled to legal protection to save himself from the culpability of the offences for which the cognizance has been taken.

5. The case of the complainant-opposite party is that on 11-10-2002 while he was engaged in grazing his cattle, accused persons came there, abused him in filthy languages, assaulted and threatened him as to why he has lodged complaint against them. He shouted for help. Villagers came there and rescued him. The complainant went to the Hinjili Police Station along with the other witnesses to lodge F. I. R. against the culprits/wrong doers. It is alleged that the petitioner did not entertain the FIR, rather abusing the complainant, he torn the same.

6. There is no semblance of doubt that the accusation of the complainant that he was abused and assaulted by the accused Nos. 1 to 4 in the complaint petition constitutes cognizable offences. When a person is assaulted and consequently received injuries and goes to the police station to lodge FIR, it is the bounden duty and statutory obligation on the part of the police authority to accept the same and investigate into the matter. The Officer-in-Charge of the Police Station cannot refuse to accept the complaint, if it discloses cognizable offence. The allegation disclosed in the complaint petition regarding the assault and injuries received thereby was required to be investigated. Refusal to receive the FIR and to tear it in front of the complainant can in no stretch of imagination be considered as official duty; rather it was a serious lapse on his part. No Police Officer can refuse to receive any complaint. This has been deprecated by the Apex Court in the cases of Prakash Singh Badal and another v. State of Punjab and others, (2007) 1 SCC 1 : (AIR 2007 SC 1274) and Lallan Chaudhury and others v. State of Bihar and another, (2006) 12 SCC 229 : (AIR 2006 SC 3376). Heavy duty has been cast on the police authority to record information which reveals cognizable offence. Omission or neglect to discharge the said duty would jeopardize the administration and in dispensation of justice. In the State, where rule of law prevails, a public servant, in charge of law and order, cannot refuse or neglect to discharge his statutory duty and at the same time to refuse under the law is to shield himself from the legal consequence. The accused by refusing to record the information has not only omitted or neglected to perform his official duty, but also thereby facilitated an offender to escape from the criminal liability. In such circumstances, the benefit of statutory provision under S. 197, Cr. P. C. cannot be pressed into service.

7. In the facts and circumstances of the case, I am not inclined to interfere with the proceedings and the order passed against the petitioner in I. C. C. No. 28 of 2002 by the learned S. D. J. M., Chhatrapur.

Accordingly, the CRLMC is dismissed.Application dismissed.

HIGH COURT OF BOMBAY

Hon'ble Judge(s) : Khandeparkar R.M.S. and Sayed A.A., JJ.

Salma Babu Shaikh ….. Vs ….. State of Maharashtra

Criminal writ petition 400 of 2007 of Mar. 03, 2008.

[A] Article 226 of constitution of India - Prosecution of erring Police Officer for their criminal negligence – Petitioners daughter died due to harassment by accused – The Police officer's conduct was to shield the real culprits and allowing him to got scot free – Appropriate action is required to be taken against erring police officers and personnel – Including disciplinary action and criminal proceedings – They would also liable to pay costs of Rs. 10,000/- to the petitioner.

[B] Direction to register FIR against police by High Court - Prosecution of Police under Sec. 201 of I.P.C., Sec 145 (2) (c) (d) of Bombay Police Act etc. – Held , Mere availability of alternate remedy is not an absolute bar for exercise of writ jurisdiction to direct initiation of criminal proceedings against erring police officers.

[c] Reply Affidevit by senior police officer to save subordinates - The reply affidavit filed by the police officer is a classic example of how all these three police officers are in connivance with each other in attempt to justify their deliberate inaction – The members of the public who approach the police authorities with the hope and expectation that the wrongdoers should be punished, would lose trust in the police department, if such erring police officers are not punished – Govt. directed to take action – Failure to do so by the Govt. , the petitioner is at liberty to approach the court afresh.

(1.) RULE. BY consent, rule is made returnable forthwith. The learned Advocates for the respondents waive service.

(2.) THE petitioner in this petition has approached this Court with the grievance about inaction on the part of the respondents/police authorities in conducting necessary investigation and not taking appropriate action against the offender/s responsible for the death of her daughter and hence, for necessary directions and relief in the matter.

(3.) THE petitioner is the resident of sandesh Nagar, Shanti Wadi, Bail Bazar, kurla (West), Mumbai for about last 25 years along with her family which comprised of her two daughters and husband. One of the daughters is stated to have expired on 17-1-2006 in suspicious circumstances. The deceased girl was named Yasmin and was studying in 10th standard and was punctual in attending the school.

(4.) IT is the case of the petitioner that one boy by name Deepak used to encourage and incite the deceased Yasmin to meet one Umesh Yallapa Arote under one pretext or another as allegedly the said Umesh had one sided love affair with the said daughter of the petitioner. Said Umesh used to visit the neighbours of the petitioner and used to approach the daughter of the petitioner yasmin through one of the neighbouring girl named Sunita Naresh Poojari. It is her further case that being unsuccessful in wooing the daughter of the petitioner, said Umesh used to give threats to the deceased daughter of the petitioner and had even warned her that in case she failed to marry him, he would not spare her and the person to whom she would marry. Consequently, yasmin was always under tension and stress on account of the said threat by umesh. Of late he had also started demanding money from the deceased girl and she was forced to part with her gold chain of 15 grams to him. It is her further case that on 16-1-2006 at about 2:00 a. m. , during early hours of the said day while the girl was studying at her residence , Umesh came to the site and started pulling her outside the house. However, he did not succeed in his evil design as he was obstructed from doing so by the petitioner and he was handed over to the neighbours' custody while she went to report the matter to the Alapure beat Chowky No. 5 of the Kurla Police Station and informed the matter to the police authorities about the harassment caused by Umesh to her daughter. However, the police refused to record the complaint and directed her to go to the Bail Bazar Chowky. Even when she went to the Bail Bazar chowky, the police refused to register the complaint and directed her to go back to alapure Beat Chowky. The petitioner thereupon went to the main Kurla Police Station and could succeed in lodging N. C. complaint beingn. C. No. 132/2006, dated 16-1-2006. Meanwhile, Umesh managed to run away and the police expressed inability and helplessness to apprehend him.

(5.) ON 17-1-2006 one person by name ganesh Galshetwar approached the deceased girl with a mobile phone belonging to Umesh and informed the deceased girl to speak to Umesh with the help of the said mobile phone as Umesh wanted to speak to her. The deceased girl thereupon had conversation with Umesh with the help of the said phone, as was asked to do by ganesh and immediately thereafter, being scared and frightened, ran inside the house and poured kerosene on her body and set herself ablaze. Though the petitioner thereafter approached the police authorities, the latter refused to record the complaint. Ultimately, the petitioner succeeded in submitting a written complaint on 2-6-2006 to the commissioner of Police, Additional Commissioner of Police, deputy Commissioner of police, Assistant Commissioner of Police and the respondent No. 6 herein bringing to their notice all the necessary facts in the matter and requesting them to take necessary action. However, since the respondents have not conducted necessary investigation and have not taken appropriate steps to apprehend and prosecute the culprit in the matter, the petitioner has approached this Court.

(6.) AT this stage it is to be noted that the petition was initially filed against the State of Maharashtra, the Commissioner of Police, additional Commissioner of Police, deputy Commissioner of Police, Assistant commissioner of Police, Senior Inspector of police of the Kurla Police Station and Police sub-Inspector attached to the Kurla Police station and the said Umesh. When the matter came up for hearing for admission on 13-6-2007, after hearing the learned advocate for the petitioner and the learned additional Public Prosecutor for the Respondent Nos. 1 to 7, this Court (Coram: Smt. Ranjana P. Desai and D. B. Bhosale, jj.) observed that according to the petitioner the police had failed to investigate the case properly and have purposely shielded the accused Umesh and registered a case of accidental death. On perusal of the records, it was observed that the statement of Kausar bano, which was recorded by the police, prima facie indicates that Umesh had subjected the deceased to emotional blackmail and it was, therefore, necessary for the investigating agency to conduct the investigation in proper perspective. It was also observed that the dying declarations prima facie did not satisfactorily disclose to be genuine and therefore the Deputy Commissioner of Police, zone-V, Mumbai was required to look into the matter himself again. Accordingly, direction was issued to the deputy Commissioner of Police to conduct fresh inquiry, if necessary, and to submit report. The report came to be submitted on 18-7-2007. However, in the course of the hearing, it was revealed that the inquiry was not conducted by the Deputy Commissioner of Police but by the Assistant Commissioner of Police which was contrary to the order dated 13-6-2007 and therefore when the matter came up for hearing on 5-9-2007, the learned A. P. P. , on taking instructions, stated that the report submitted earlier could be allowed to be withdrawn in order to enable to conduct proper inquiry by the deputy Commissioner of Police. Accordingly, time was granted and the report dated 6-10-2007 in respect of the inquiry conducted by the Deputy Commissioner of Police was submitted to this Court on 10-10-2007. When the matter came up for hearing on 5-12-2007, on perusal of the report it was found that the same disclosed a clear finding by the Deputy Commissioner of Police that the Senior Inspector of Police Shri dilip Shivram Yadav, who was the concerned officer in-charge of the investigation at the relevant time, did not give proper guidance in the course of the investigation to his subordinates nor he perused the papers of the investigation and did not pay any attention to the doubts expressed by the petitioner and the petitioner's family about the involvement of the respondent No. 8 in the death of Yasmin and in a negligent manner concluded that the death was accidental and got the summary report approved. It was also seen that the Deputy commissioner of Police had conclusively observed in the report in relation to ADR no. 12/2006 that the entire investigation was in a negligent manner. Considering the same, it was inquired with the learned A. P. P. as to why the appropriate disciplinary action has not been taken against the concerned officers? it was also brought to the notice by the Advocate for the petitioner that the records revealed the acts on the part of four Police Officers, namely, Shri Murad abdul Mulani, PSI, Shri Vishwanath Tanaji tambe, PSI, Shri Dilip Shivram Yadav, PI and Shri Uttam Chopane, Asst. Commissioner of Police, amounting to offences in the nature of issuing and signing false reports, giving false information to screen the offender and helping the offender to cause to disappear material evidence of the offence, which would warrant prosecution under sections 197, 201 and 203 of the indian Penal Code r/w the other provisions thereof as well as under section 145 (2) (c)and (d) of the Bombay Police Act, 1951 against the said officers and mere disciplinary proceedings would not be sufficient to meet the ends of justice. Though the contention was sought to be disputed on behalf of the respondents, on perusal of the records and after perusing the decisions of the Apex Court in the matter (Cement Marketing Co. of India Ltd. Vs. Assistant Commissioner of sales Tax, Indore and ors.), reported in 1979 DGLS (soft) 449 : 1980 (1)S. C. C. 71 : A. I. R. 1980 S. C. 346, (Commissioner of Sales Tax, M. P. , Indore Vs. M/s. Bombay General Stores. Shahdol), reported in A. I. R. 1969 M. P. 213 and (P. K. Varghese and Sons Vs. Sates Tax Officer, Special Circle, emaculam), reported in A. I. R. 1965 Ker. 212 and on going through the entire record, it was observed that the records disclose that the concerned Police Officers were entrusted with the duty to investigate into the matter which related to the death of a young girl in suspicious circumstances and inspite of suspicion about the involvement of a particular person being clearly pointed out to the concerned Police Officers, it was totally ignored and there was no satisfactory explanation placed on record in that regard, even though an affidavit was filed by one of the concerned Senior Police Officers. The records apparently also disclose that the police had merely proceeded on the basis of the alleged dying declarations of Yasmin and in that regard under the order dated 13-6-2007 it was already observed by this Court that the alleged dying declarations do not appear to be genuine. In fact, it was also observed that there was no reason for inaction on the part of the Police Officers to investigate into the matter about the doubt which was expressed by the petitioner and her family members, nor there was any explanation forthcoming in that regard and in that view of the matter, the said four police Officers were permitted to be joined as the respondents and the notices were issued to the said respondents pursuant to which PI Dilip Shivram Yadav, the respondent no. 9, PSIs Vishwanath Tanaji Tambe, the respondent No. 10 and Murad Abdul mulani, the respondent No. 11 have filed their affidavits in reply.

(7.) IT is the case of the respondents that on 17-1-2006, in the afternoon hours, the station House Officer on duty i. e. , the respondent No. 11, received an information from the Lokmanya Tilak Hospital, Sion, mumbai that a girl by name Yasmin Babu shaikh, aged about 18 years, had been admitted in the hospital with severe burn injuries and he accordingly made the necessary entries in the station diary and rushed to the hospital. The concerned officer then recorded the dying declaration of the said yasmin Babu Shaikh after verifying from the Medical officer that the patient was in a condition to give statement and the mother of the deceased, namely, the petitioner was present at the time of recording of the statement. In her statement, the deceased had stated that she had appeared for her unit test examination on 16-1-2006 and as she had found it difficult, she was under mental pressure from 16-1-2006. On 17-1-2006, at about 1:00 p. m. , she was required to attend further unit test examination; however, because tension mounted due to the studies, she poured kerosene from the stove and set herself ablaze and that she had no complaint against anyone regarding the said incident. It is their further case that the said dying declaration was recorded at about 3:30 p. m. while the patient was in a condition to give her statement. It is their further case that yet another statement of the deceased was recorded by Smt. Ruksana begum Nazir Hussain Sayyed, a respectable person from the locality in question and answer form on 17-1-2006 itself wherein the incident narrated by the deceased was similar to the one recorded by the said Police Officer. Further statements came to be recorded of the petitioner and her husband on 17-1-2006 wherein they had expressed their doubt about the involvement of Umesh in the death of Yasmin on account of his one-sided love affair. It has been further stated that Yasmin expired on the 17th itself at about 10:00 p. m. , having suffered 97% burn injuries and consequently adr No. 12/2006 came to be registered by the Kurla Police Station. During the investigation, statements of various witnesses were recorded including one of the neighbours of the deceased by name Smt. Pramila Ramchandra Mishra, which was recorded on 28-1-2006, who had stated in her statement that at about 5:00 p. m. on 17-1-2006 when she had visited the house of Yasmin, her father was inspecting the school bag of Yasmin and he found some loose papers in the note book and one of the papers had some note written in Hindi and as the father of Yasmin was unable to read and write, he had requested the Smt. Mishra to read the same for him. Smt. Mishra had found the said note to contain a letter which read as under:

"uma I love you, I am going to burn myself. Nobody is responsible for the same. Nobody should trouble Uma. I will not leave anybody if somebody troubles him. Uma I miss you. "

It has been stated that it is further case of the respondent that the father of the victim girl has not produced the said note till this date to the police authorities. It is further case of the respondent that though the petitioner and his family members had expressed doubt about the involvement of the said Umesh, there was no other evidence against him to implicate him in the offence under section 306 of the Indian penal Code and the dying declaration of the deceased did not implicate or held him responsible and in the circumstances, the report under section 174 of the Criminal procedure Code was submitted to the Assistant commissioner of Police and the Special executive Magistrate, Kurla Division, which was accepted by order dated 11-12-2006. The affidavit in reply on behalf of the respondent also disclose that there was a non-cognizable complaint registered against umesh on 16-1-2006 at about 9:30 p. m. for the incident of giving abuses and threat by him to the petitioner. It is further stated that the duty officer thereafter had sent the beat Marshal No. 5 for search of the said umesh for giving him warning, however, he could not be located at his residence on the said day. According to the respondent, yasmin committed suicide for the reasons disclosed by her in her dying declarations and, therefore, there is no substance in the case put forth by the petitioner. That is the case pleaded in the affidavit filed by Shri dilip Yadav, the Inspector of Police (Investigation) on 11-6-2007.

(8.) SUBSEQUENT to hearing of the matter on 5-9-2007, an affidavit came to be filed by the respondent No. 6 Shri Vilas Pawar, senior Inspector of Police in relation to the inquiry initiated by the Department against pi Dilip Yadav and PSIs Vishwanath Tambe and Murad Mulani informing that the deputy Commissioner of Police had recorded the finding that the said officers were negligent in the performance of their duty and show cause notice was issued to them in which punishment of stoppage of increment for a period of one year was proposed. However, subsequent to the hearing before this Court the authorities withdrew the show cause notice dated 10-9-2007 by order dated 29-10-2007 and on 31-10-2007 the Joint Commissioner of Police (Law and Order) issued orders for holding departmental inquiries against the said officers and on 7-11-2007 charges were framed and the deputy Commissioner of Police, Zone-VII, mumbai was appointed as the inquiry Officer and the inquiry would be completed expeditiously. The said affidavit was filed on 23-7-2007.

(9.) CONSEQUENT to issuance of the notices, as already stated above, the officers sought to be impleaded on account of allegations against them, they have filed their affidavits. Shri Dilip Yadav, pi in his affidavit dated 18-1-2008 has stated that the endorsement signed by him on the report for obtaining the summary dated 31-10-2006 to the extent that the statement of the father and mother of the deceased Salma not having expressed suspicion against anybody or complained against anybody was incorrect. During the period there were about 62 ADRs forwarded by the concerned investigating Officers to him for obtaining summary in the month of October, 2006 and in the usual course, the notings in the summary reports were made by the ADR clerk and signed by him as he was generally aware about the progress in those cases and it was his mistake that he did not read the notings carefully. He has further stated in the affidavit that he had never personally investigated the said case and the investigation was being conducted under the supervision of the Senior Inspector of police and further that after the transfer of psi Mulani, he had merely passed an order transferring the investigation to PSI Tambe and the latter had never forwarded any report to him till the report of the summary dated 31-10-2006. He has further stated that the observation of the Deputy commissioner of Police regarding failure on his part to give proper guidance to the Investigation officer was unwarranted as in the case in hand the investigation was being carried out under the guidance of the Senior Inspector of Police. He has also stated that failure to pay necessary attention to the incorrect notings made by the ADR Clerk was not deliberate nor mala fide. Considering the departmental action already initiated against him, it is his case that he has been already sufficiently punished for his negligence and therefore his explanation in the matter should be accepted.

(10.) PSI Vishwanath Tanaji Tambe, the respondent No. 10, in his affidavit dated 21-1-2008 has stated that when PSI Mulani had approached the victim in the hospital, no family member and no person had expressed any complaint or doubt in relation to the incident in any manner whatsoever or howsoever and PSI Mulani had taken abundant precaution to summon Smt. Ruksana Begum, who was a member of the police Janata Samiti and to request her to record the dying declaration in question and answer form. He has further stated that on 17-1-2006 PSI Mulani had conducted the probe, inspected the house premises and conducted inquest panchnama on 18-1-2006 and had also recorded the statement of the petitioner. He has also stated in his affidavit that the petitioner had made passing reference about the love affair of her daughter with one Umesh Yellapa Arote and that it could be one of the reasons for the incident. The affidavit further disclose that on 18-1-2006 the father of the victim girl while taking charge of the body of the girl had expressed doubt about the involvement of Umesh Arote in the matter and had said that the act committed by his daughter could be on account of frustration caused by one sided love of the said Umesh Arote and had requested that action be taken against him. However, there was no proof advanced by him to substantiate the said statement. He has further stated that in the course of the investigation one thing clearly surfaced that the victim girl committed suicide on account of less marks obtained and the said fact was corroborated by her statement, the statement of her father and the mother before PSI Mulani and Smt. Ruksana. He has also stated that in the initial stage i. e. on 17-1-2006 there was no whisper about Umesh Arote and even later there was no proof advanced to link up the said Umesh or to show any direct nexus between the cause of death and the said umesh Arote. A categorical statement in this regard by the respondent in para 11 of the affidavit reads thus:

"11. I say that in the course of the events that have occurred one thing surfaces clearly is that the victim girl caused to commit suicide on account of less marks obtained, this fact was corroborated by her statement, the statement of her father and mother made before PSI MULANI and Smt Ruksana. In the initial stage i. e. 17-1-06, there was no whisper about Umesh Arote. Further even later there was no proof advanced to link up the said Umesh Arote or show any direct nexus between the cause of death and the said Umesh Arote. I respectfully submit that the statements recorded at the initial stages are vital documents which speak for itself about the state of affairs existing then. "

He has also stated in the affidavit that since the time the parents of the girl expressed their doubt about Umesh Arote, PSI mulani took steps to find out his whereabouts. However, he was not traced and accordingly diary entry was made. It was revealed that the said Umesh Arote had left the house since 17-1-2006 and could not be traced despite all efforts in that regard. He has further confirmed that the postmortem report disclosed the cause of death to be due to burns. However, he has hastened to say in the affidavit that

"further it is pertinent to note at this juncture that the said victim girl had not caused to raise any complaint against the said Umesh arote whilst she was alive and on her proper senses in the statements given. Thus save an except a vague doubt expressed, there was no iota against the said Umesh Arote who was not traced despite all diligent efforts then. Therefore, the case was sent for classification as an accidental death case. "

(11.) IN the further affidavit dated 4-2-2008 filed by PSI Vishwanath Tambe, the respondent no. 10, he has stated that prior to handing over of the ADR No. 12/2006, the investigation was conducted and carried out under the supervision of the Senior Police Inspector who is the officer in-charge of Police Station and further that subsequent to the death of Yasmin, statements of several people were recorded by the respective officers and thereafter the said ADR was handed over to him. He has further stated that he had directed his subordinates to search one Umesh but the same proved futile and accordingly a diary entry was recorded. However, a detailed report was not filed by him by way of inadvertence and in that regard already departmental inquiry has been initiated. He has further stated that he had acted in a bona fide manner and had accordingly submitted his report for classifying the said ADR as a summary report. He has also objected for the petitioner approaching this Court in writ jurisdiction referring to the judgment of the Apex Court in (Prakash Singh Badal and another Vs. State of Punjab and others), reported in 2007 (1) S. C. C. 1. Referring to the said judgment, is sought to be reminded to us in the affidavit that the High Court cannot direct registration of an FIR or direct to take cognizance of an offence in its extraordinary writ jurisdiction under article 226 of the Constitution of India. It has been further stated in the affidavit that all along since the registration of the ADR no. 12/2006 the Senior Officers had been directing the junior officers like the respondent No. 10 and the investigation was being supervised by the Senior Officer and that, therefore, it cannot be said that he had committed any offence or has aided the perpetrators of the crime. Since the other respondents have already admitted their negligence in handling the aforesaid case and have filed affidavit before this Court admitting their negligence, no criminal offence could be levelled against him. He has denied the contention that there was wilful act on his part or that he had tried to shield any offender and has stated that his negligence and inadvertence has already been the subject-matter of the departmental proceedings and the competent authority would pass appropriate order if he is held negligent in performing his duties.

(12.) THE respondent No. 11 PSI Murad abdul Mulani in his affidavit has stated that he carried out the investigation to the best of his ability. On 17-1-2006 he was posted as the Day Station House Officer and as such officer is required to visit the spot of incident and record statements of the witnesses and submit the report to the Senior police Inspector, if any incident was to occur within the jurisdiction of the concerned police Station. On 17-1-2006 he was at the kurla Police Station and at 1:00 p. m. he received information from Police Constable no. 31761, posted at the Lokmanya Tilak hospital, Sion, Mumbai that a girl by name yasmin Babu Shaikh, aged about 18 years was admitted with severe burn injuries. As soon as he received the information, he rushed to the Sion Hospital with Police Constable no. 30224 and a social activist Smt. Ruksana Begum Nazir Hussain Sayyed. Yasmin was found injured upto 95% due to burns and the doctor had stated that she was in condition to give her statement and therefore he recorded the statement of the victim in the presence of her mother as well as the said social worker. In her statement, the victim stated that she had appeared for the unit test examination on 16-1-2006 for english subject and she had faced difficulty in answering the said paper and therefore she was under mental pressure. She was required to appear for unit test on 17-1-2006 at 1:00 p. m. However, as she was unable to answer the English paper effectively, she poured kerosene from the stove and set herself ablaze and that she had no complaint against anyone. After he recorded the statement, the said social activist also recorded the statement of Yasmin and the victim gave similar version to the said social activist. He also recorded the statements of the parents on the same day. Yasmin succumbed to her injuries on the very day at about 10:00 p. m. and PSI Bhosale prepared the accidental death report and registered the adr No. 12/2006 and he prepared the incident report and submitted the same to the Senior Police Inspector, Kurla police Station. Thereafter the matter was assigned to him for the first time on 21-1-2006 by the instructions of the Senior Police Inspector, kurla. The petitioner had expressed suspicion about Umesh Arote for pressurising Yasmin and driving her to commit suicide. He therefore called Umesh Arote for the purpose of investigation and instructed Police Head Constable Patil for surveillance staff and subordinate staff to call the said Umesh Arote for interrogation. In addition to the said investigation, he was entrusted with some other assignments. On 20-1-2006 he was assigned night station house duty. On 21-1-2006 ADR No. 12/2006 was assigned to him for investigation and on the very day he was posted to Shri siddhivinayak Temple at Prabhadevi, mumbai on protection duty. He was on medical leave from 23-1-2006 to 25-1-2006 as he was suffering from high blood pressure. He attended the Republic Day ceremony on 26-1-2006 and attended the Sessions court on 27-1-2006 as well as the protection duty during the afternoon hours. He also recorded the statement of Yasmin's teacher and the Head Mistress of the school. It is his case that Yasmin had stated in her dying declaration the reason for committing suicide was her poor performance in her study which found corroboration from her teacher's statement. He also recorded the statements of the neighbours of Yasmin including Kausar who in her statement has stated that Yasmin set herself ablaze only after she had talked with Umesh Arote on his mobile phone which was given to her by Ganesh Galshetwar on 17-1-2006 at about 11:00 a. m. to 11:30 a. m. On 28-1-2007 after recording the statement and further investigation he was deputed on protection duty at Tanaji Chowk, Kurla. From 29-1-2006 to 31-1 -2006 he was deputed on different assignments and on 1-2-2006 he was relieved from the Kurla Police Station to join the Central Control Room, Mumbai.

(13.) IT is also to be noted that it is the case of the respondents themselves which is revealed from the affidavit filed by PI Dilip yadav on 18-1-2006 that there were about 11 other similar cases filed against Umesh arote and he was also arrested in relation to those cases.

(14.) REFERRING to the materials on record, it is the contention on behalf of the petitioner that the police not only failed to perform their duties in relation to the investigation in the matter but acted in such a manner that it could help the offender to evade the legal process and consequently the punishment which he would have otherwise faced if there had been proper investigation and placement of all the materials before the criminal Court. The learned advocate appearing for the petitioner submitted that inspite of consistent effort on the part of the petitioner to bring to the notice of the police authorities about the involvement of Umesh Arote in the incident of death of her daughter, the police did not make any investigation in that regard and obviously tried to shield the said Umesh arote from being prosecuted in the matter. According to the learned Advocate for the petitioner, it is not unintentional but lacks bona fide and, therefore, the respondent-Police Officers are liable to be prosecuted for the offence punishable under section 201 and others under the Indian Penal Code as well as section 145 (2) (c) and (d) of the Bombay police Act, 1951 and therefore the respondents should be directed to register FIR in that regard and take appropriate steps in accordance with the provisions of law against the said police personnel.

(15.) THE learned Public Prosecutor, on the other hand, submitted that the department is already seized with the matter and even the preliminary inquiry has disclosed negligence on the part of the concerned officers and therefore necessary departmental proceedings are contemplated and the authorities will take appropriate action against the concerned officers. As far as the allegation of criminal negligence is concerned, the learned P. P. submitted that it may be left to the officer of the status of the Deputy Commissioner of Police to hold preliminary inquiry in that regard and in case they are found to have committed criminal negligence, certainly the State would not hesitate to take appropriate action.

(16.) THE learned Senior Counsel appearing for the respondent No. 11 submitted that the respondent No. 11 has done whatever was required to be done in the matter in the facts and circumstances of the case and as he was transferred to some other department on 1 -2-2006, he had no occasion to continue to be a party to the investigation proceedings in the matter in hand. However, the records disclose that he had recorded the statement of various witnesses in the process of investigation and therefore he cannot be blamed of having committed any criminal negligence as such. In fact, according to the learned Senior Counsel the records do not even disclose negligence on the part of the respondent No. 11 and within whatever time span which was available at his disposal, he had collected as much as evidence as was possible. He further submitted that the Court has to consider the difference between civil liability and criminal liability in cases where there are allegation of failure to perform the duty. Even assuming that there is failure to perform the duty in the sense that there is some delay in recording some statements, it would not per se amount to criminal negligence so as to warrant prosecution. In any case, since the department is already seized with the matter, according to the learned Senior counsel, there is no case made out by the petitioner for the relief asked for.

(17.) THE learned Advocate appearing for the respondent Nos. 9 and 10 while reiterating the submissions made on behalf of the respondent No. 11 submitted that though the records may disclose some inadvertence on the part of the respondents in pursuing with the investigation, that itself cannot be construed to be a negligence so as to warrant their prosecution in the matter neither the respondents can be accused of having failed to perform their duties as they have conducted the investigation in the best possible manner and whatever evidence which could be collected by them was collected by them. The fact that umesh Arote had sent a mobile phone to have conversation with the victim girl prior to her death was revealed to the investigation authorities only on 28-1-2006 pursuant to the statement of the sister of the victim and therefore they cannot be blamed for not taking any steps to locate the mobile phone or to get the necessary details in relation to the conversation between the victim girl and Umesh Arote till that time. In any case, mere failure to gather the necessary evidence as was expected by the petitioner, that itself cannot lead to the conclusion that the police authorities were negligent in collecting the necessary evidence.

(18.) THE grievance of the petitioner in the matter in hand is two-fold. On the one hand, it is the case of the petitioner that inspite of failure on the part of the police authorities to investigate the matter properly and to apprehend the offender, the higher authorities are reluctant to take appropriate steps for proper investigation as well as to take appropriate disciplinary action against those persons. Secondly, it is the case of the petitioner that there is not only failure in performance of duty on the part of the police personnel attached to the Kurla Police Station at the relevant time, but the inaction on the part of the police personnel has been with the intention to shield the offender umesh Arote from being subjected to the process of law and inspite of the fact that his involvement in the matter of death of the daughter of the petitioner was disclosed to the police authorities at earliest, the police authorities have openly exhibited callous attitude and gross criminal negligence in the matter of investigation relating to the death of her daughter which warrants criminal prosecution of such police, personnel. It is for this purpose that the petitioner seeks necessary direction for initiating necessary disciplinary proceedings, and on the other hand, for initiating criminal proceedings against the police personnel responsible or who is/are guilty of criminal negligence in the matter.

(19.) AS regards the law on the point relating to the jurisdiction of the High Court under Article 226 of the Constitution of India for issuance of direction for initiating criminal proceedings or to set criminal law in motion in relation to the offence and the offender, it was strenuously argued that in case of failure on the part of the police authorities to register the FIR or to take cognizance of the offence, the remedy lies in the form of a complaint to the Magistrate and therefore the remedy in writ jurisdiction is barred and in that regard reliance was placed in the matter of Prakash Singh badal (supra) and specific attention was drawn to para 73 of the judgment. The para 73 of the judgment reads that

"73. At this stage it needs to be clarified that the obligation to register a case is not to be confused with the remedy if same is not registered. Issue of the remedy has been decided by this Court in several cases. See (Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre Vs. State of Maharashtra), 2004 DGLS (soft) 670 :
2004 (7) S. C. C. 768 : A. I. R. 2004 S. C. 4753. "
(20.) ATTENTION was also drawn to the decision in Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre Vs. State of Maharashtra and others, reported in 2004 (7) S. C. C. 768, and particularly to para 13 of the judgment wherein, referring to its earlier decision in the matter of (All India institute of Medical Sciences Employees' union (Regd.) Vs. Union of India,) reported in 1996 DGLS (soft) 1718 : 1996 (11) S. C. C. 582, it was observed that "it was specifically observed that a writ petition in such cases is not to be entertained. ". The said observation was in relation to the entitlement of the complainant to seek relief by resorting to the provisions of section 190 r/w section 200 of the Criminal Procedure code by filing a complaint before the Magistrate. In such cases, the Magistrate is required to inquire into the complaint as provided in Chapter XV of the Cri. P. C. and in those context the Apex Court had said that writ petition would not be maintainable.
(21.) IN Prakash Singh Badal's case when the matter came up before the Apex Court, while contending that the cases which were initiated on the basis of complaints lodged were mala fide and an act of political vendetta and the issue before the Apex Court was that in view of the fact that the information disclosing cognizable offence having been laid before the officer in-charge of the Police Station for the purpose of satisfying the requirements of section 154 (1) of the Cri. P. C. , was there any option to the police Officer except to enter the substance thereof in the prescribed form, that is to say, to register a case on the basis of such information and further in case of failure in that regard, what would be the next step available to the complainant. Similarly, in gangadhar Janardan Mhatre's case (supra), the Apex Court was dealing with a matter regarding the right of the informant to be heard before disposal of the summary report submitted by the investigating agency as also whether there is requirement of notice to the party while dealing with the matter under section 173 of the Cri. P. C.
(22.) ATTENTION has also been drawn to the recent decision in the matter of (Sakiri Vasu Vs. State of U. P. and ors.), reported in 2007 DGLS (soft) 1247 : A. I. R. 2008 S. C. W. 309 : 2008 (2) S. C. C. 409 : A. I. R. 2008 S. C. 907. Therein it was held thus:
"25. We have elaborated on the above matter because we often find that when someone has a grievance that his FIR has not been registered at the Police Station and/or a proper investigation is not being done by the police, he rushes to the High Court to file a writ petition or a petition under section 482, Cri. P. C. We are of the opinion that the High Court should not encourage this practice and should ordinarily refuse to interfere in such matters, and relegate the petitioner to his alternating remedy, firstly under section 154 (3) and section 36, Cri. P. C. before the concerned Police Officers, and if that is of no avail, by approaching the concerned magistrate under section 156 (3). "
At the same time, it was also observed by the Apex Court in the same decision that
"28. It is true that alternative remedy is not an absolute bar to a writ petition, but it is equally well settled that if there is an alternative remedy the High Court should not ordinarily interfere. "

(23.) IT was a case wherein the son of the appellant in the said case, who was in the army as a Major, his body was found on 23-8-2003 at Mathura Railway Station and the G. R. P. , Mathura investigated the matter and gave a detailed report on 29-8-2003 stating that the death was due to an accident or suicide. The Army officials at mathura also twice held Court be Inquiry and both the times submitted the report that the deceased had committed suicide at the railway track at Mathura junction. The Court of Inquiry relied on the statement of the domestic servant who had stated that the deceased never looked cheerful; he used to sit on a chair in the verandah gazing at the roof with blank eyes and deeply involved in some thoughts and used to remain oblivious of the surroundings. The Court of inquiry also relied on the deposition of the main eye-witness, gangman Roop Singh, who had stated that the deceased was hit by a goods train that came from Delhi. The appellant who was the father of the deceased alleged that in fact it was a case of murder and not suicide. He alleged that in the mathura unit of the Army there was rampant corruption about which the deceased came to know and he made oral complaints about it to his superiors and also to his father. According to him, it was for this reason that his son was murdered. Considering those facts, the Apex Court ruled that

"34. In the present case, we are of the opinion that the material on record does not disclose a prima facie case calling for an investigation by the CBI. The mere allegation of the appellant that his son was murdered because he had discovered some corruption cannot, in our opinion, justify a CBI inquiry, particularly when inquiries were held by the Army authorities as well as by the G. R. P. at Mathura, which revealed that it was a case of suicide. "

(24.) IT is a settled law that the ratio of a decision is to be understood with reference to the facts of the case and the points for consideration which arise in the matter. A sentence in a judgment cannot be read as a statutory provision. It is also equally settled that decision is what it decides and not what may follow from it and being so, every observation in the judgment has to be understood with reference to the facts of the case and the point involved for consideration therein. This has been repeatedly held by the Apex Court and elaborately discussed in the decision in (Union of India and others vs. Dhanwanti Devi and others), reported in 1996 DGLS (soft) 1252 : 1996 (6) S. C. C. 44 and also in (State of Orissa Vs. Sudhansu Sekhar Misra and ors.), reported in 1967 dgls (soft) 301 : A. I. R. 1968 S. C. 647. The law on the point as to whether in a given case writ jurisdiction is to be exercised or not even for the purpose of directing initiation of criminal proceedings is that it would depend upon the facts of each case. Mere availability of alternative remedy is not an absolute bar for exercise of writ jurisdiction, though ordinarily it has to be avoided when efficacious alternative remedy is available to the party and is appropriate in the facts and circumstances of the case.

(25.) IN the case in hand, undisputedly, the facts which have come on record would reveal that on 16-1-2006 the petitioner had been to various police chowkies in the locality with her grievance about harassment to her daughter by the said Umesh Arote. Though in the affidavit of the respondent no. 9 there is a solemn statement that a n. C. in that regard was registered against umesh Arote on 16-1-2006 at 9:30 p. m. , and further that there were about eleven such similar cases against him and he was also arrested in those cases, apart from the statement that Beat Marshal No. 5 was deputed for searching the said Umesh Arote but he could not be located at his residence, no other efforts seem have been made to locate him. At the same time, it is undisputed fact that on 17-1-2006 Umesh Arote was not available at his residence. The petitioner had been making grievance about the involvement of Umesh Arote in the death of her daughter right from the day one and this was to the knowledge of the Investigating Officers, yet the Investigation Officers nowhere disclose to have taken any step to make any sort of investigation in that regard at any point of time. We have been only told that there were efforts made to locate Umesh Arote. What were those efforts? how those efforts were made and in what manner? The respondents are totally silent about the same. There is no explanation forthcoming in that regard. At the same time, the affidavit of the respondent No. 9 discloses that Umesh Arote was involved in eleven other similar cases and he was even arrested in those cases. In such circumstances, what prevented the investigating agency from apprehending him in the present case and in making necessary inquiry with Umesh Arote in relation to the case in hand. It is neither known nor we find any material placed before us in that regard disclosing to be part of investigation.

(26.) THE affidavit of the respondent No. 11 discloses that he was fully aware of the fact that the provision of section 174 of the cri. P. C. were attracted in the matter in hand. Before arriving at any finding about the accidental death, it was also necessary for the Investigation Officers to ascertain the involvement of any other person in relation to the death of the daughter of the petitioner and therefore the suspicion expressed by the petitioner could not have been brushed aside nor could have been ignored in the manner the Investigation officers have ignored and discarded the same in the case in hand. In case of criminal offences, when the police authorities are approached by the citizens complaining about the involvement of any third person or expressing suspicion in that regard, it is the duty of the Police Officer to investigate into the matter taking into consideration the information imparted to him in that regard, albeit, question of taking action against the person against whom suspicion is expressed may not arise immediately. Nevertheless, once suspicion is expressed, the Investigation Officer cannot be heard to say that he would remain silent and will do nothing to verify the suspicion expressed by the relative of the deceased. It would not be mere failure to perform the duty but it can lead to cause grievous injury to the informant, the relative of the deceased as failure in that regard may help the offender in shielding himself from the process of law and avoiding the punishment. As also, may give opportunity to destroy the relevant piece of evidence which the Investigation officer would be otherwise required to collect. Being so, failure in such cases cannot be presumed to be mere lapses on the part of the Investigation Officers. The Investigation Officers are not laymen but are trained in the matter of investigation and they are made aware of the requirement which are to be complied with for effective investigation relating to criminal offences. Failure to perform his duty by an Investigation Officer may help or may result in helping the offender in avoiding the process of law against him in one way or the other and therefore certainly could be construed as gross criminal negligence.

(27.) IN the case in hand, it is a matter of record that the petitioner had informed the police authorities that she had suspicion about the involvement of Umesh Arote in the death of her daughter. The records before us, however, do not disclose anything except recording by the police authorities that the some police personnel were deputed to locate Umesh Arote. Investigation does not include mere search of the person who is suspected to be involved in a criminal offence. When the involvement of certain person is disclosed, it is also necessary for the Investigation Officer to inquire about his acts and activities preceding which have preceded the commission of the offence. The investigation papers nowhere disclose any efforts having been made by the police authorities in this regard.

(28.) AS already observed above, the affidavit of pi Dilip Yadav clearly discloses that the said Umesh was involved in similar eleven other offences and he was even arrested in respect thereof. The records placed before us are however silent about the date of such offences, the date of the arrest of umesh Arote as well as what prevented the investigating agency from conducting necessary inquiries from him in relation to the case in hand when he was arrested in relation to similar other offences.

(29.) THE records disclose that on 28-1-2006 the respondent No. 11, who was in-charge of the investigation at the initial stage, had recorded the statements of the neighbour of the deceased as well as the sister of the deceased. At the same time, his affidavit discloses that he had been to the scene of offence i. e. at the residence of the deceased on 17-1-2008. Neither the affidavit nor the investigation papers disclose as to what prevented him from recording the statement of the sister of the deceased on 17-1-2006 itself or immediately thereafter and why he had to wait till 28-1 -2006 to record the statement of the sister of the deceased. Undisputedly, the statement of the sister of the deceased disclosed that a person by name Ganesh Galshetwar had approached the deceased on 17-1-2006 at about 11:00 a. m. along with a mobile phone with the message that the same was sent by Umesh Arote to enable the latter to have conversation with the deceased and accordingly, the deceased had conversation with umesh Arote from 11:00 a. m. to 11:30 a. m. and immediately thereafter the deceased ran inside the house and set herself ablaze. Inspite of the fact that this information could have been availed of by the Investigation officer on 17-1-2006 itself, what was the reason for the Investigation Officer to wait till 28-1-2006 to record the statement of the sister of the deceased. There is no explanation forthcoming in any manner. The police authorities are fully aware of the fact that investigation has to be conducted expeditiously as the same not only helps the investigating agency to identify the culprit and to establish his offence but it also avoids giving time to the culprit to manipulate and/or to destroy the relevant piece of evidence. What is further more surprising is that inspite of the fact that the investigation agency was informed on 28-1-2006 that prior to the death of Yasmin she had a talk on the mobile phone with Umesh Arote, there was no effort on the part of the investigating agency to ascertain about such telephonic conversation by contacting the telephone agency nor there was any effort made to seize the mobile phone which was used in such conversation. It is also pertinent to note that Ganesh Galshetwar, in his statement, has clearly confirmed about giving of mobile phone of Umesh Arote to the deceased. Undoubtedly, it was sought to be pointed out to us that the mobile phone was given only on 14-1-2006 and not on 17-1-2006. It is true that the statement of ganesh discloses that the that mobile phone was given to Ganesh by Umesh arote on 14-1-2006. However, his statement recorded under section 161 of the cri. P. C. is totally silent as to the timing and date on which the mobile phone was given to the deceased. Obviously, the police must have either not asked anything on this aspect, or can it be a case wherein having asked, the answer being not favourable to the culprit, the same is not recorded? There is no explanation why it was not asked for, nor any explanation for absence of recording of the same.

(30.) IT is pertinent to note that right from the beginning and particularly even prior to the death of Yasmin, from 16-1-2006 itself it was the grievance of the petitioner that Umesh Arote had been harassing her daughter and immediately after her death, expressed suspicion about his involvement in the death of Yasmin. All the affidavits consistently refer to the fact that though the alleged dying declarations did not refer to the involvement of Umesh Arote in the death of Yasmin or the whole incident that had occurred on 17-1-2006, yet while the alleged dying declarations were being recorded, not only the petitioner but both the parents of Yasmin had expressed their suspicion about the involvement of Umesh arote to the Investigation Officer. This was not merely to the knowledge of the respondent no. 11 to whom the same was initially stated to have been expressed on 17-1-2006 but it was also to the knowledge of the respondent Nos. 6 and 9 as the affidavits clearly disclose that importation of such information by the petitioner formed part of the investigation proceedings right from the beginning and it is a matter of record. As already observed above, the respondent no. 11 had visited the scene of offence on 17-1-2006 itself. There is neither explanation from the respondent No. 11 nor the other respondents as to what prevented and what was the reason for non-recording of the statements of the other inmates of the house of the petitioner particularly the sister of the deceased and the neighbours including Ganesh Galshetwar on the very day. The learned P. P. fairly conceded that the investigation in relation to the mobile which was stated to have been used by the deceased prior to setting herself ablaze was absolutely necessary. Inspite of that and the affidavit of the respondent No. 11 being totally silent about his activities between 17-1-2006 to 20-1-2006 and there being no disclosure in that regard whatsoever manner in his affidavit as well as in the affidavits of the other respondents, can it be said to be a mere lapse or simple negligence as is sought to be argued on behalf of the respondents which will not amount to any criminal liability? The inaction in that regard is not by a layman. It is by the authority who is trained and who is required to conduct the investigation in relation to all criminal offences as expeditiously as possible and in the best possible manner. It cannot be disputed that for enquiring about the mobile phone and recording of the statement of the sister of the deceased, it need not require any expertise in the investigation. The incident had occurred inside the house. The police could have immediately ascertained who were the persons present at the time of the incident and those who had visited the place prior to and immediately after the incident. Even a layman would know the need of such investigation. In such circumstances, the inaction in that regard, in our considered opinion, can by no stretch of imagination be said to be a mere negligence or lapse. Prima facie, it would be a gross criminal negligence. It is more so when the statement recorded on 28-1-2006 of the sister of the deceased elaborately disclose that Ganesh galshetwar had been acting as an agent of umesh Arote and he had brought the mobile of Umesh Arote and handed over the same to Yasmin asking her to have conversation with Umesh Arote with the help of the said mobile and in fact she had conversation with Umesh Arote on the said day and immediately thereafter she rushed inside, closed the door and poured kerosene on her body and set herself ablaze. The statement of Ganesh Galshetwar also discloses that Umesh Arote had given his mobile to Ganesh Galshetwar in order to give the same to Yasmin. It is true that the statement of Ganesh Galshetwar nowhere discloses the date and time when such mobile was handed over to Yasmin. Here again it can hardly be said to be a mere lapse on the part of the investigation agency to investigate into this aspect knowing well that the incident of setting herself blaze had occurred immediately after the conversation with Umesh with the help of the mobile which was given to her by Ganesh galshetwar and Ganesh having confirmed that the said mobile was given to him by umesh Arote to be given to Yasmin for necessary conversation by her with Umesh arote, it was absolutely necessary for the investigating agency to find out as to at what time and date the said mobile was handed by Ganesh Galshetwar to Yasmin. We cannot believe the same to be mere lapse on the part of the investigation agency to investigate in this regard knowing well the circumstances in which the incident had occurred and the same having occurred immediately after the use of the said mobile. The inaction cannot be said to be mere negligence or lapse but prima facie has to be considered as gross criminal negligence.

(31.) THE affidavits in reply filed by these police Officers certainly make interesting reading. The affidavit of the respondent No. 9 discloses a clear admission about signing endorsement without even reading the same, leave aside ascertaining the truthfulness of the contents of the endorsement. It is pertinent to note that the report was submitted for necessary decision about closure of the investigation on the ground that there was no case against Umesh Arote. It was in the circumstances where the said umesh Arote was already involved in eleven other similar cases to the knowledge of such officer and yet the Police Officer blindly signed the endorsement for closing the matter, ignoring the necessity for investigation regarding the alleged involvement of umesh Arote in the offence. He did not even bother to read the endorsement. Can this be said to be a mere negligence or lapse? what is further disturbing is that the officer further states in his affidavit that the failure to pay necessary attention to the incorrect notings made by the ADR clerk was not deliberate or mala fide. The very officer who confirms on oath that there were eleven other similar cases against the said umesh Arote at the relevant time had audacity to say on oath that his failure to pay the necessary attention to the incorrect nothings made by the ADR Clerk were not deliberate and were not mala fide.

(32.) AS regards the affidavit of the respondent no. 10 is concerned, the said officer has attempted to knock out the petitioner out of the Court on technical grounds rather than placing on record the true facts. In his affidavit he has stated that "in front of her father the said girl had stated the reasons for the injuries sustained on her body. However, at the said time the said father had not expressed any doubt on any person/s in respect of the said incident occurred and only after the demise of the said victim on 18. 6. 06, the father started expressing doubts in relation to her death. "Undisputedly, the respondent No. 10 took over the investigation only on 1-2-2006. He has no personal knowledge about the investigation prior to 1-2-2006. Whatever statement he could make in relation to the investigation prior to 1-2-2006 has necessarily to be the basis of the investigation records. In view of the categorical statement on the part of the respondent No. 11 that the petitioner was right from the beginning had expressed suspicion about the involvement of Umesh Arote, apparently the statement of the respondent No. 10 quoted above appear to be contrary to the records, or for that matter is a false statement. It was, therefore, with the help of the learned P. P. we had tried to go through the records to ascertain whether anywhere any such record is to be found in relation to the investigation proceeding prior to 1-2-2006 which could reveal that the father of Yasmin had not expressed any doubt in relation to any person at the time of the alleged recording of the dying declaration of Yasmin. The learned P. P. , however, has fairly conceded that there is no such recording found in the investigation records. Before making the said statement, the learned P. P. had taken assistance of the Investigation Officer present in the Court to go through the records. This apparently shows that the respondent No. 10 has no hesitation even to tell lies on oath.

(33.) THE affidavit of the respondent No. 10 further states in para 9 thereof as under:

"9. On 18th January, 06 the father of the victim whilst taking charge of the body of the girl, also expressed a doubt on the said umesh Yellapa Arote and said that the act committed by his daughter could be on account of frustration caused by the one sided love of the said Umesh and requested that action be taken against him. However no evidence proof was advanced by him to substantiate the said statements. "

Indeed, it is surprising and shocking that the Investigation Officer of the stature of Police Sub-Inspector at the relevant time is expecting the complainant to collect evidence for the investigating agency, totally forgetting that it is the duty and obligation of the investigation agency to collect the evidence in criminal matters and not of the complainant. He is totally silent about what efforts he had made to make any investigation in relation to the suspicion expressed by the father of the deceased, nor the investigation records placed before us could reveal any efforts in that regard on the part of this officer.

(34.) THE officer appears to have completely forgotten that the investigation in criminal matters is not by arm-chair method but by actual field work. In para 11 of his affidavit he states thus:

"11. I say that in the course of events that have occurred one thing surfaces clearly is that the victim girl caused to commit suicide on account of less marks obtained, this fact was corroborated by her statement, the statement of her father and mother made before PSI MULANI and Smt Ruksana. In the initial stage i. e. 17. 1. 06, there was no whisper about Umesh Arote. Further even later there was no proof advanced to link up the said Umesh Arote or show any direct nexus between the cause of death and the said Umesh Arote. I respectfully submit that the statements recorded at the initial stages are vital documents which speak for itself about the state of affairs existing then. "

On the one hand the officer has expressed full knowledge about the law regarding the relevancy of the statements which are recorded immediately after the incident and on the other hand has conveniently tried to satisfy himself with the alleged dying declarations of the deceased without bothering to conduct any further investigation while making yet another false statement on oath. The statement is the one in the above quoted para that the alleged statement of the deceased was corroborated by "the statement of her father and mother made before PSI MULANI and Smt. Ruksana". It is evidently false and contradictory to the records. There is no statement either of the father or the mother corroborating the statement of the deceased. Therefore there was no occasion for this officer to make a statement on oath that the statement made by the deceased girl was corroborated by the statement of her parents. At the same time, the officer gives no explanation, inspite of the knowledge that the statements recorded at the initial stages are of vital documents, and therefore why the statement of the sister and neighbours were not recorded immediately after the incident and if he was not in-charge at the relevant time, what investigation he had done to find out what prevented the then Investigation Officer from recording the statements immediately after the incident.

(35.) FURTHER, in para 12 the officer has stated that since the parents expressed doubt about Umesh Arote, PSI Mulani took steps to find out his whereabouts. However, there were no traces of Arote and "accordingly diary entry was made". The diary entry speaks only about deputing certain officers to locate Umesh Arote. The diary nowhere discloses any efforts having been made by PSI Mulani himself to find out the whereabouts of Umesh Arote and yet this officer makes a solemn statement on oath about there being entry made about the efforts made by PSI Mulani.

(36.) THE officer has further stated in para 12 of his affidavit that "further it is pertinent to note at this juncture that the said victim girl had not caused to raise any complaint against the said Umesh Arote whilst she was alive and on her proper senses in the statements given. "

It is pertinent to note that the records every where disclose that the girl had suffered 97% burn injuries, which injuries she had suffered immediately after having conversation with Umesh Arote with the help of a mobile which was sent to her through Ganesh Galshetwar. Added to this, the mother had expressed suspicion about the involvement of Umesh Arote. Besides, on the previous night Umesh Arote had attempted to pull the girl out of her house, and that too, during late night hours. There was also a piece of paper found in the belongings of the deceased which makes reference to one Umesh Arote. Inspite of these materials being available, the officer claims the alleged dying declarations to be gospel truth, ignoring the circumstances under which the statement, if at all was given by the deceased.

(37.) AS regards the dying declarations, at the outset it is to be noted that all the observations hereinafter regarding the same, are essentially in relation to the conduct of the Police Officers in the course of the investigation and shall not influence in any manner the courts below while dealing with any matter arising out of the FIR lodged in relation to death of Yasmin. As regards the said dying declarations, this Court (Coram: Smt. Ranjana P. Desai and D. B. Bhosale, JJ.)by order dated 13-6-2007 had already observed that prima facie the said dying declarations do not appear to be genuine. Indeed, perusal of the dying declaration stated to have been recorded by the Police officer bear a thumb impression whereas the dying declaration stated to have been recorded by Smt. Ruksana do not bear any thumb impression. Neither of the declarations appear to be in the handwriting of Smt. Ruksana. The signature of the said lady smt. Ruksana on the dying declaration alleged to have been recorded by her is itself sufficient to note that the said dying declaration is in the hand-writing of some other person. The declaration on the face of it nowhere discloses as to who has written the same. As regards the dying declaration recorded by the police, there is an endorsement in the margin column on the first page of the alleged declaration and it shows the date as 17. 1. 06 and timing as 3. 30 a. m. The hand-writing on both the declarations appears to be of the same person. The endorsement also shows that there were 95% burns suffered by the patient. The further endorsement also clarifies that the patient's both the hands and legs were burned so could not sign and no finger impression obtained. As regards this endorsement and also the endorsement relating to the date, the same do not appear to be in the same hand-writing as that of the doctor who is stated to have made the endorsement that the patient is in condition to give valid statement. The inquest -panchnama states that the body of the patient was 100% burnt.

(38.) IF one peruses the first dying declaration, it states that at the relevant time the deceased was alone at her residence as her brothers Irfan and Firoze had gone to play and on that occasion being depressed she poured kerosene on her body and set herself ablaze. The investigation has revealed pursuant to the statement of the sister as well as the neighbour that the deceased was not alone at her residence at the relevant time. This was to the knowledge of the respondent No. 10 who had taken over the investigation on 1-2-2006 along with the investigation papers including the statements of the sister and the neighbour of the deceased which were recorded on 28-1 -2006. As far as the performance of Yasmin in the English paper which she had answered on 16-1-2006, undisputedly, no in vestigation has been carried out even though the Investigation Officer has examined two teachers from the same school where she was studying. Both the statements recorded - one of Smt. Rajeshree Vilas kulkarni and another of Shri Purushottam dinkar Talere, refers to the performance of yasmin during the IXth standard. Both of them confirm the fact that she had answered the English paper on 16-1-2006. However, there is no statement recorded of any of the teachers or person/s from the school regarding the evaluation of the answer book of Yasmin in relation to the English paper which she had answered on 16-1-2006 and yet the officer wants us to believe him when he states that the alleged dying declaration was the fool-proof of non-involvement of any third person in the incident. It is also pertinent to note that all the above referred statements have been made by PSI Vishwanath Tanaji Tambe in his affidavit inspite of knowing the fact that with the passage of time pursuant to the agitation by the petitioner and her husband and consequent to filing of the present writ petition, already cognizance has been taken about the alleged involvement of Umesh arote in the said incident and he was even arrested and the investigation is going on. All these statements of this officer in his affidavit, the stand taken by him and the contentions raised while showing no hesitation to make incorrect and false statements on oath apparently disclose a clear attempt to hoodwink and mislead the Court while attempting to give lame excuses for his deliberate inaction, as revealed from the records. Albeit these findings are prima facie findings which can sufficiently disclose the need for investigation against this officer for his criminal negligence in the matter in hand.

(39.) THE above observation is inevitable in view of further statement which the officer is unable to substantiate in any manner. In para 5 of his further affidavit dated 4-2-2008, the officer has stated thus:

"i say that subsequent to the death of the said deceased (Yasmin), statements of several people were recorded by the respective officers and thereafter, the said A. D. R. was handed over to me. I say that I perused the statements and also directed my subordinates to search for one Umesh Arote. But, however, my chase in the search was futile and the said Arote was untraceable and accordingly, a diary entry was recorded and a detailed report was not filed by me to my supervisory officer and/or Senior P. I. of the said Police Station. "

As the affidavit is not accompanied by any material in support of the statement and the claim of the officer that he had given directions to his subordinates to search umesh Arote and that he had himself made such search but it proved futile and there was a diary entry made in that regard, the learned P. P. was asked to get the necessary information from the concerned officer, who is also present in the Court, with the help of perusal of the diary in that regard. On having gone through the necessary exercise in that regard, the officer could not locate any such entry in the diary. The learned p. P. thereupon fairly conceded that he is not in a position to produce any material nor there is any such entry by the concerned police Officer in the case diary. This further discloses that the officer is so shameless that he has no hesitation in making false statements on oath.

(40.) AS regards the respondent No. 11 is concerned, as already observed above, there is no explanation forthcoming for inaction on his part to conduct any investigation between 18-1-2006 to 20-1-2006. He has claimed in his affidavit that he was on medical leave from 23-1-2006 to 25-1-2006 as he was suffering from high blood pressure. No medical evidence in that regard is attached to the affidavit. He has also stated that on 27-1-2006 he attended the Sessions court from 10:00 hours to 14:00 hours and thereafter he had attended demonstration at Indiranagar Zopadpatti.

(41.) THE affidavit of this officer is yet another classic example of how all these three police Officers are in connivance with each other in attempt to justify their deliberate inaction and it is apparent from para 9 of the affidavit of this officer. The relevant portion of para 9 reads thus:

"I state that Kousar in her statement stated that Yasmin set herself blaze only after she had talk with Umesh Arote on his mobile phone and that mobile phone was given by ganesh Galshetwar to her on 17. 1. 2006 at about 11 am to 11. 30 am. Then Yasmin returned the mobile to Ganesh and after short time Yasmin pour kerosene on her person and set on fire herself. I state that but Ganesh in his statement stated different story that he was returned from school on 17. 1. 2006 at about 12. 30 pm. I state that I found contradiction in the statement of Kousar and Ganesh. "

At the outset, it is to be noted that the deponent nowhere discloses what was the contradiction in the statement of Kausar and Ganesh on the relevant aspect of the matter. In the first supplementary statement ganesh Galshetwar had admitted that on 16-1-2006 he had handed over the mobile phone to the deceased as per the instructions of Umesh Arote whereas in the second supplementary statement he has given a contradictory statement. But the fact remains that in the two earlier statements ganesh Galshetwar had confirmed that he was acting as a mediator between Umesh arote and Yasmin at the instance of Umesh and used to deliver mobile phone of Umesh to Yasmin to enable them to have conversation with each other. In the back ground of these facts having come on record, we fail to understand what was that contradiction in the statement of Kausar and ganesh which persuaded the respondent no. 11 not to conduct the investigation in the manner it was required to be conducted and to try to locate the mobile phone and make further investigation as regards the conversation which took place between yasmin and Umesh Arote on 17-1-2006 itself. There is no explanation forthcoming in this regard in his affidavit.

(42.) IN the above circumstances, though the learned P. P. had strenuously tried to argue that the matter should be left to the concerned authorities to conduct the necessary preliminary inquiry and to take appropriate decision, with utmost respect, we are unable to agree with the said suggestion. We find that the Police Officers who were entrusted with the investigation in the case in hand, who were expected to conduct the investigation honestly, sincerely and to the best of their ability, have not only failed to perform their duties accordingly but unfortunately and shockingly their conduct reveal to be those of the persons acting with the sole purpose of shielding the real culprit and allowing him to go scot-free and there was not even an attempt to collect the evidence which was to their knowledge available and could have been collected much earlier. An Investigation officer who is required to conduct investigation in relation to a cognizable offence when intentionally avoids to collect the required evidence, or even fails to take appropriate steps which in normal circumstances any Investigation Officer is expected to take, without any justification and explanation in that regard, then the only conclusion which can be drawn is that the inaction in that regard was deliberate and intentional and with the sole intention to help the wrongdoers unless otherwise is established. Certainly, such an inaction on the part of the police authorities cannot be ignored nor can be pardoned. It will send not only wrong message but it will result in great prejudice to the public and will hamper the process of law and lead to lawlessness. The members of the public who approach the police authorities with the hope and expectation that the wrongdoers should be booked for the commission of offences and should be punished, would stand to loose trust in the police department, if such officers for their serious inactions are allowed to go scot-free. Mere disciplinary action in that regard would not be sufficient answer. Shielding or trying to shield any wrongdoer is itself a serious offence and assumes more seriousness when it is committed by a person none other than from the police department. Therefore, we do expect the Government to take a serious note of this and to take appropriate action against the erring Police Officers and personnel, failing which the petitioner is at liberty to approach the Court afresh.

(43.) WE, therefore, direct the respondent no. 1 to take immediate action in the matter and in any case within twelve weeks, in accordance with the provisions of law for disciplinary action as well as for criminal proceedings against the concerned officers. The respondent Nos. 9 to 11 to pay costs of rs. 10,000/- to the petitioner. The costs shall be paid from the personal account of those respondents and shall not be a burden on the Government treasury. The costs to be paid within twelve weeks. Needless to say that all the observations made herein above are in relation to the conduct of the investigation Officers and shall not in any way weigh in the mind of the courts below while dealing with the matter arising out of the FIR lodged in relation to the death of yasmin. The action taken report should be placed before the Court within two weeks after twelve weeks for necessary further orders, if any, in the matter. The rule is made absolute accordingly in above terms.

(44.) AFTER the pronouncement of the judgment, the learned Advocates appearing for the respondent Nos. 9 to 11 prayed for stay of the judgment. Considering the facts and circumstances of the case, we do not find any case for stay of the judgment. The request for stay is rejected. Rule made absolute.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT

Hon'ble Judge(s) : J. G. CHITRE AND A. M. KHANWILKAR, JJ.

(Division Bench)

Sudhir M. Vora, …Vs… Commissioner of Police for Greater Bombay and others,

Crl. Writ Petn. No. 1647 of 2000, D/- 16 -1 -2004.

(A) Criminal P.C. (2 of 1974), S.154 - FIR - F.I.R. against police - Written complaint to Commissioner of Police disclosing information regarding commission of cognizable offence against Police Officers - It has to be registered as F.I.R. in terms of S.154 of Code. In such type of cases , Commissioner of Police should ensure that inquiry was done by independent agency such as C.I.D. - Enquiry by officers associated with same Police Station should not be ordered if done is illegal (Para 14,15)

"We make it clear that we are not endorsing the action of the Commissioner of Police directing the inquiry into the matter instead of registering the offence under Section 154 of the Code and of further actions under Chapter XII of the Code. Suffice it to observe that inquiry as made, has no legal efficacy so as to ignore the complaint made by the petitioner in writing which discloses the commission of a cognizable offence. In view of the foregoing discussion, we have no hesitation in directing the respondent No. 1 Commissioner of Police to cause to reduce the written complaint sent by the petitioner dated 22-11-2000 in the appropriate book maintained for the purpose of registering crime as per Section 154 of the Code and further to cause investigation into the said complaint by an independent agency such as DCB CID, having regard to the fact that serious allegations have been made against the police officers of having committed acts of commission or omission constituting cognizable offence; and the matter ought to be taken to its logical end in accordance with law after investigation is completed and report in that behalf is filed before the appropriate Court.

(A)Criminal P.C. (2 of 1974), S.41 - ARREST - Arrest - Question regarding arrest of accused-petitioner was subjudice in writ petition filed by accused - Matter was adjourned at instance of police officers who had filed affidavit - Causing arrest of petitioner during pendency of petition is illegal.(Para 16)

" Indeed, the injustice caused to the petitioner has been salvaged because of the release order passed by the Magistrate on 16th January, 2001 when the petitioner was produced before him for remand. We are not however, entering into the allegation regarding handcuffing of the petitioner after the arrest till he was produced before the Magistrate. It appears from the record that issue regarding handcuffing, has been raised by the petitioner before the Magistrate. That aspect can be considered in those proceedings and we express no opinion thereon. Even with regard to the grievance of manhandling or mishandling of the petitioner while in custody till he was produced before the Magistrate, even that issue will have to be considered in the proceedings before the Magistrate or in such other appropriate proceedings, if filed by the petitioner. We also clarify that one of the other serious allegations made by the petitioner against the Police Officers is that when the petitioner was arrested, he was threatened to withdraw this writ petition or face the consequences. If that allegation is established, obviously it will be a serious matter and by itself would constitute the contempt of Court. The petitioner may take recourse to appropriate remedy in that behalf by giving specific details. If so advised. If such proceedings are taken out, the same can be enquired into and decided in accordance with law."

(D) Criminal P.C. (2 of 1974), S.24 - PUBLIC PROSECUTOR - Public prosecutor - Should not defend police officer against whom allegations of acts of commission or omission are made. (Para 17)

Adv. S. V. Marwadi, for Petitioner; Pravin Singhal, APP, for Respondents.

JUDGEMENT

KHANWILKAR, J. :- This writ petition under Article 226 of the Constitution of India is filed for direction to the respondent No. 1 to take suitable action against respondent No. 2 and his associates in respect of the subject-matter stated in the complaint of the petitioner dated 22-11-2000.

2. Briefly stated, the petitioner is a practising Chartered Accountant. He came in acquaintance with one K. A. Rashid and Smt. Sitabai Govind Joshi. The petitioner facilitated the said persons to conclude some transaction regarding land. However, later on said K. A. Rashid started blaming the petitioner for the said deal and called upon the petitioner to pay him Rs. 4.50 lakhs. As the petitioner denied his liability to pay that amount, the petitioner was threatened by the said K. A. Rashid and his wife that they would take the assistance of local police officers. The petitioner asserts that the petitioner was picked up from his office at 10.45 a.m. on 14-11-2000 by plain clothes police constables of the Bandra Police Station at the behest of said K. A. Rashid. The petitioner was told that respondent No. 2 who is Assistant Police Inspector of Bandra Police Station had called him urgently. No cause was disclosed to the petitioner. The petition then graphically explains the events that unfolded after the petitioner reached the police station, which ultimately led to the issuance of five cheques in the name of the said Shri K. A. Rashid, totalling Rs. 4.50 lakhs. The petitioner was allowed to leave the police station only after the petitioner had made over said five cheques totalling Rs. 4.50 lakhs to K. A. Rashid. It is stated that the petitioner was forced to remain in police station for almost four hours and had to suffer humiliation, torture and threats as stated in the writ petition. The petitioner was terribly disturbed with the said experience. Apprehending further trouble, the petitioner immediately took up the matter with the Commissioner of Police for Greater Bombay, by his complaint in writing dated November 22, 2000. In this complaint, all the events that unfolded till the making of the said complaint about the manner in which the petitioner was picked up from his office and handled till he was allowed to leave the police station, have been mentioned. We think it apposite to advert to the relevant extract of the said complaint from para 7 to para 18, which reads, thus :

"7. On the 14th November 2000, when I was doing auditing of my corporate clients accounts as the last date of filing of income-tax returns was approaching fast i.e. 30-11-2000, at around 10.45 a.m. Mr. K. A. Rashid an old friend of mine residing at Lokhand-wala complex, walked in my office, along with two plain clothes police constables from Bandra Police Station and asked me to accompany them to the Bandra Police Station there and then itself. I asked them to sit down and tell me what was all this about. They told me that Mr. Bhargode, API of Bandra Police Station had called me urgently to see him. I told them to proceed to the Police Station and I shall reach there in next ten fifteen minutes as I had to instruct my staff about that day's schedule. They said nothing doing. I will have to come along with them leaving all my work standstill immediately. They took me to Bandra Police Station walking with two Constables on my either side.

8. As soon as we reached Bandra Police Station, I was asked to sit on the Bench in Mr. Bhargode's cabin as he was not present, Mr. Rashid sat on the chair opposite Mr. Bhargode's table. In or around ten fifteen minutes, one Mr. Rajesh Kamble entered Mr. Bhargode's cabin in plain clothes and asked me what was the problem of Mr. Rashid with me. He talked to me for about 20-25 minutes threatening me to repay the money which I was supposed to have taken from Mr. Rashid or face dire consequences of C.R. having filed against me, not only at Bandra Police Station but also ten twelve other fake C.R.s. shall be filed in other police stations of Mumbai. I tried to convince him that I had not taken any money from Mr. Rashid but he himself had invested the said money in a plot of land at Sarasole Village Nerul, New Bombay through a friend of mine one Mr. Ashwin Thakker who is a Chartered Accountant having office at Vashi. Mr. Rajesh Kamble kept on abusing me in filthy language and kept on repeating that there are three more complaints filed against me in Bandra Police Station. He also accused me that I am a cheater and had eaten up the money of Mr. Rashid. He insisted that I should return the money of Mr. Rashid who was an NRI earlier, and has lost a large amount of money in the stock market. He also accused me that because of me, Mr. Rashid's relation with his wife and children have been strained and that he might commit suicide and was in a great need of his money.

9. After twenty-twenty five minutes, another Police Officer came and sat on the chair of Mr. Bhargode and started abusing me left and right. I could not get his name but surely I will be able to identify him on seeing him in person or his photograph. He also insisted that I have eaten up Mr. Rashid's money and I should be beaten up like other criminals after removing my clothes. He demanded of me to repay Mr. Rashid's money in 24 hours time or else I will be put behind bars.

10. Then at around 12-12.15 p.m., Mr. Bhargode walked in his cabin like a big lord and sat on his chair which the previous police officer immediately vacated. As soon as he saw me sitting on the bench in front of his table, he asked my name. I replied to him that I am Sudhir Vora and that I have been summoned to your office by Mr. Rashid along with two plain-clothes policemen to see you. He started shouting on me that who told you to sit and angrily ordered me to stand up immediately. I had to stand up as per his wish. He also started abusing me and called me a cheater, a rogue of the society and that at lest three to six complaints have been filed against me in the Bandra Police Station. He told me that the policemen of Bandra Police Station as has been observing my activities for the last two three months because of the above complaints and of Mr. Rashid, who is a thorough gentlemen. He insisted that if I pay up Mr. Rashid's money which he had invested to buy the said plot of land at Sarsole Village, Nerul. New Bombay I shall be able to go back to my office or otherwise, to the lock-up. On my trying to argue with him that I had not taken the money and that Mr. Rashid had paid the money in the name of the owner of the plot who had sold the same to Mr. Rashid, Mr. Bhargode asked me to go to behind the partition in his office and asked other constables present there to prepare a CR and take me on remand. One of the Constables started preparing the CR and asked me various details of myself and my family. On the clause of writing any identification mark, I told that I do not have any such mark on my face, M. Rajesh Kamble asked me to remove my shirt for the same.

11. In the meanwhile, other police men kept on prompting me that I should seek pardon from Mr. Bhargode and Mr. Rashid and pay up his amount and get rid of all this. I was made to stand for more than 2 hours in front of Mr. Bhargode listening to all their bad words, abuses and threatening statements about my career being ruined. They also threatened me to visit my house at 2.30/3.00 a.m. in the morning and harass and trouble me till the time I pay up Mr. Rashid's money. Mr. Bhargode also took down my office and residence address along with telephone Nos. in his diary. I requested umpteen number of times to Mr. Bhargode to please give me 2/3 months time to use my good offices to convince Mr. Ashwin Thakker/Mr. Bhagat to resolve Mr. Rashid's plot problem at New Bombay, though I had no responsibility for the same. I also insisted that the original agreement for the purchase of the said plot was prepared by a renowned Advocate Mr. M. T. Thakkar of Vashi between Mr. K. A. Rashid as purchaser and Smt. Sitabai Govind Joshi and the same is with Mr. Rashid and that he should go to the Court against the seller for not giving him a clear title of the said plot. Whenever I used to open my mouth. I used to get abuses or scolding from any one of the policemen in the cabin and they did not allow me to say my side of the story. Never in my life of 38 years, I have faced such a grave situation and got very nervous and confused. I pleaded with Mr. Rashid also that I will use my good offices to intervene in the matter and see if I could get the problem solved as soon as possible and he being an old friend of mine. I kept on requesting him to tell Mr. Bhargode to stop torturing me. But he also insisted that now the ball is in Mr. Bhargode's court and hence he shall abide by Mr. Bhargode's decision when I told Mr. Bhargode that I shall not be able to pay Mr. Rashid's amount today itself, or within 24 hours, he threatened me with dire consequences including imprisonment and third degree treatment.

12. In the meanwhile, other constables got two petty criminals in the back side of Mr. Bhargode's cabin and started beating them miserably, Mr. Bhargode told me that if I do not pay up Mr. Rashid today itself, I shall be treated like other criminals and taken on remand.

13. I was carrying my mobile phone with me in the pocket. when I received two or three phone calls on the same, I was not allowed to answer them nor be used to call help/advice from my Advocates.

14. At around 1.30 p.m. a person from my staff Mr. Pravin Pawar came to the police station inquiring about my whereabouts. On seeing him Mr. Rashid told Mr. Bhargode that he has come to help his boss. So Mr. Bhargode asked my man also to come in the cabin and started asking him questions about my business and that I am a big and renowned cheater and that he shall also be jailed along with me.

15. My man Mr. Pravin Pawar was told by Mr. Rashid and Mr. Rajesh Kamble to get my cheque book from the office and come back soon to the police station and I was told to sign the cheques in favour of Mr. Rashid. However, Mr. Rashid was asking for Rs. 13 lakhs in his amount due along with interest etc. On seeing all this type of treatment to a learned person and to a law-abiding citizen of this country, I was forcibly and under threat of being put behind bars, made to issue post-dated cheques of Rs. 4.50 lakhs to Mr. Rashid.

16. Mr. Bhargode compelled me to issue cheques of Rs. 4.50 lakhs, I informed him that I do not have any such amount in my Bank Account. He asked for post-dated cheques. Under the said threat of unlawful imprisonment, torture, man handling, humiliation and intimidating I was compelled to sign five cheques in name of Mr. K. A. Rashid totalling Rs. 4.50 lakhs. Mr. Bhar-gode asked me to hand over the said post-dated cheques in his presence to Mr. Rashid. He also give me a warning that I should see to it that the said cheques given to the Mr. Rashid clears on the date of issue and to report him about the clearances of the cheques by coming to the Police Station personally. After handing over the cheques and also after receiving some more abuses, I was allowed to go back to my office at around 3.00 p.m.

17. In the premises, I had no alternative but to leave all these things and returned to my office. From that day till today, I am still under dreadful fear that if I stop the payment, there will be some attack on me and my family members and I will be implicated in false cases as threatened by the officer and Mr. Rashid, I have informed about this incident to my parents and other relatives and friends but looking to the atrocity with which I have met, they advised me that if I do any complaining against the police, the consequences will be serious. I have been mentally and physically ill and incapable to attend to my work since then. However, now ultimately I have decided that since I have not committed any offence and since I was also not responsible for the loss of money of Mr. Rashid and since I do not owe him any money, I will stop payment on the cheques. The cheques taken by them are in my handwriting and now I have informed the Bank to stop the payment of the said cheques.

18. From the events that took place on the 14th November, 2000, it is crystal clear that now the police are acting as recovery agents and they want to recover Rs. 4.50 lakhs from me which is not due from me. The conduct of the officers kept me under terror for the last one week and that I could not attend to my office or do my clients work. I am also afraid that thereafter I give this complaint to you, there is every likelihood of my arrest in a false case or there is every likelihood that they will prepare a false complaint now of Mr. Rashid and they will involve me in a case under cheating. I also know now that the purpose of all this was to obtain post dated cheques so that I could be prosecuted under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. May I therefore request you to kindly make a detailed inquiry and give me protection from the officers of Bandra Police Station and/or Mr. Rashid who are bent upon to involve me in a false case."

3. It is not in dispute that this communication was received in the office of respondent No. 1 on 23-11-2000. As the petitioner did not receive any response from respondent No. 1, he rushed to this Court by way of the present writ petition on 27-11-2000, praying for the following reliefs :

"(a) Rule be issued and respondent No. 1 be called upon to produce the papers of enquiry with regard to the complaint of the petitioner dated 23-11-2000.

(b) By issuing a proper writ, order or direction under Article 226 of the Constitution of India, the enquiry into the complaint of the petitioner dated 22-11-2000 made to respondent No. 1 be directed and suitable action be initiated against the respondent No. 2 and his associates.

(c) Pending the hearing and final disposal of this petition, the respondent No. 2 be directed not to arrest the petitioner in the complaint of the said Shri K. A. Rashid in respect of sale of land and plot No. 208 situated at Village Sarsole, Nerul, New Bombay.

(d) For such other and further reliefs as may be deemed just, fit and proper."

4. This writ petition was circulated for admission on December 4, 2000 when the learned Assistant Public Prosecutor, appearing for the respondents, prayed for time to file affidavit-in-reply. On that day, according to the petitioner, relief in terms of prayer clause (c) was prayed for. But as the matter was being adjourned at the instance of the learned A.P.P., the Court orally mentioned to the learned A.P.P. not to precipitate the matter. This stand taken by the petitioner is however, denied by the respondents. We shall make reference to this aspect a little later. The matter was once again listed on 11-12-2000, when the following order came to be passed :

"Leave to amend. Ld. A.P.P. sought adjournment for a week stating before us that affidavit-in-reply would be filed on behalf of respondent No. 1 as also on behalf of the concerned authorities to whomsoever the petitioner has lodged the complaints so far including the complaint dated 24th November, 2000. Post this matter on Tuesday the 19th Dec., 2000."

On 11th December, 2000, affidavit of Dattatray Pandurang Bhargude, respondent No. 2 came to be tendered which was taken on record, at page 31. The matter was posted on 19-12-2000, when the following order came to be passed :

"The learned A.P.P. sought time for explaining as to why the affidavit in reply could not be filed on behalf of the other concerned authorities mainly Deputy Commissioner of Police, Zone VII, Bombay as contemplated by order dated 11-12-2000 so also for filing the affidavit in reply on his behalf. Accepting the request, we adjourn the hearing on 21-12-2000."

The matter was then posted on 21-12-2000, on which date, the affidavit of Mr. Rajender Singh. I.P.S. Deputy Commissioner of Police, attached to Zone VII, Greater Bombay was tendered, which was taken on record at page 59. In the meantime, however, the petitioner also filed his rejoinder in response to the affidavit of respondent No. 2 sworn on 12-12-2000 at page 43 onwards. On 21-12-2000, the Court noted that the affidavit filed by Rajender Singh. Deputy Commissioner of Police, offered no explanation as to why the affidavit as ordered, could not be filed in time. The Court made the following order :

"Perused the affidavit dated 20-12-2000 filed by Rajendra Singh, Deputy Commissioner of Police. In the said affidavit there is no explanation - as to why he was not in a position to give instruction to A.P.P. from 14th December onwards till 19th December, 2000 when the matter was listed before us.

The learned APP therefore made a request that the matter may be adjourned to 22nd December, 2000 so that necessary affidavit will be filed in this regard as well.

At the request of the learned APP we adjourn the hearing of this matter till tomorrow. Post it on 22nd December, 2000."

Accordingly, the matter was posted on 22-12-2000 when the said officer filed further affidavit which is at page 65, explaining the reasons as to what prevented him from filing the reply affidavit in time. The petitioner, thereafter, filed rejoinder sworn on January, 2001 which is at page 71, reiterating the assertions made and further placing on record that in spite of the oral directions given by the Court, the Police Officers caused arrest of the petitioner in connection with the same offence complained by K. A. Rashid and notwithstanding the assurance given on affidavit dated 8-12-2000 by respondent No. 2 that only if a fresh complaint is given by Mr. K. A. Rashid and his wife, necessary action will be taken according to the provisions of law. It is stated in this affidavit that no fresh complaint was given by K. A. Rashid but in spite of that the petitioner came to be arrested. Not only that, the petitioner was handcuffed, manhandled, paraded and humiliated while producing before the concerned Magistrate. Moreover, the petitioner was pressurised by the concerned Officer of Bandra Police Station to withdraw the pending writ petition or else face the consequences. Along with this affidavit, the petitioner also placed on record the order passed by the Magistrate releasing the petitioner on bail, who, in turn has recorded prima facie opinion that the petitioner has been booked in the alleged offence to subserve the ulterior design. We shall refer to this aspect little later. Accordingly, after the Winter Vacation, the matter was listed on January 16, 2001, when the Counsel for the petitioner made grievance before this Court that the police had arrested the petitioner in spite of the direction given by the Court to refrain from doing so. On January 16, 2001, the Court passed the following Order :

"Leave to Amend. It is submitted by counsel for the petitioner Mr. Mundargi that a Division Bench consisting of G.D. Patil and A. M. Khanwilkar, JJ., had on 4-12-2000 orally directed the learned A.P.P. Mr. Singhal to inform the police not to arrest the petitioner. Mr. Mundargi submits that in spite of the said direction, the petitioner was arrested on 14-1-2001. In view of the above circumstances, we feed it appropriate that this matter be heard by the same Division Bench consisting of G. D. Patil and A. M. Khanwilkar, JJ."

Thereafter, the matter once again appeared before the Bench, of which one of us (A. M. Khanwilkar, J.) was a party, on 22-10-2002. The same was, however, adjourned to 30-10-2002. The matter was then notified for 31-10-2002, when the following order came to be passed :

"The matter was posted today to enable the Public Prosecutor to place on record the stand of the concerned officer providing justification for the arrest of the petitioner during the pendency of this writ petition. Today when the matter is called out we are informed that the concerned officer has not come in spite of repeated messages given to him by the learned A.P.P. counsel for the petitioner states that the concerned officer A.P.I. Joshi was fully aware that the matter is posted today as he was personally present on the date of the last hearing. If this is correct, then it is a matter of concern for us. We post this matter on 22-11-2002 in view of the request made by the learned A.P.P. as a last opportunity. Before the next date of hearing, the learned A.P.P. shall file an affidavit of the concerned officer in the context of the allegation made against the officer including the one mentioned in the application filed before the learned Magistrate. An advance copy of the affidavit be supplied to the petitioner four days in advance. The concerned officer to remain personally present on the next date of hearing."

Thereafter, the Bench was reconstituted due to retirement of Shri G. D. Patil, J. The matter was listed on 13-8-2003 before us, when the following order came to be passed :

"Today Shri Gole prayed for adjournment by submitting that Shri Marwadi had gone out of Mumbai prior to 2-3 days and has not returned and, therefore, is unable to attend the Court. He placed the apologies on behalf of Shri Marwadi in this context.

Shri Singhal, Additional Public Prosecutor, submitted the affidavit of Dinesh B. Joshi Assistant Police Inspector which was sworn in on 9th December, 2002. We are shocked to see such delay in filing this affidavit. When the allegations embodied in the petition are serious, the State should have filed the affidavit of a responsible police officer. But instead of that, for reasons best known to State, API has been chosen to explain the situation. We deprecate this. We expect that affidavit should be of a senior responsible officer concerned with the allegations made in the writ petition. He should be Additional Commissioner of Police connected with crime in question - Zone VII, Mumbai having supervisory power over concerned subordinates. His affidavit should be submitted if at all State wants to file it, within two weeks.

In the meanwhile, papers of the investigation done so far be called for the perusal of this Court for considering the merits of the petition and the arguments which are likely to be advanced on behalf of the litigating parties. Take on Board after three weeks."

In the meantime, however, the said Rajendra Singh, Deputy Commissioner of Police filed an affidavit placing on record the affidavit dated 12-1-2001 which, is paginated at pages

71 to 79. Along with affidavit, the report of the Assistant Commissioner of Police, Bandra Division Mumbai, purported to be dated 11-1-2001 has been filed. The Assistant Police Inspector attached to Bandra Police Station also filed affidavit dated 9-12-2002, defending the allegations, in particular with regard to the handcuffing of the petitioner. Thereafter, one more affidavit has been filed by Bipinkumar Singh, the Dy. Commissioner of Police, Zone - IX, Mumbai dated 27-8-2003.

5. The sum and substance of the reply filed on behalf the respondents is that the allegations made against the Police Officers in the complaint dated 22-11-2000 are false. On the other hand, there is ample material on record to suggest that the petitioner has cheated the said R. A. Rashid. Besides the respondents have denied the allegations made by the petitioner regarding the humiliation, threats etc. while in police custody.

6. We shall briefly advert to the averments in the affidavits filed before us explaining the manner in which inquiry was undertaken and its outcome. The first affidavit is of respondent No. 2 himself, dated December 8, 2000. He has indeed denied the allegations in the writ petition. It is stated that on 4-11-2000 the said K.A. Rashid and his wife gave an application alleging the case of cheating to the tune of Rs. 4.5 lakhs by the petitioner. This application was received by Shri Subhash D. Jadhav, Senior Inspector of Police who marked it to the respondent No. 2 for inquiry. The respondent No. 2 on receiving the said complaint on 7-11-2000 called the parties to the Police Station. After some deliberation in the presence of respondent No. 2, the parties (K. A. Rashid) informed the respondent No. 2 that he was not interested in pressing the complaint but was interested in getting back his money from the petitioner; and that the petitioner promised to pay the amount to said K. A. Rashid in his presence. As a result, necessary remark was made on the said application which was communicated to the Senior Inspector of Police Shri. Subhash D. Jadhav. It is further stated that after 7-11-2000, the respondent No. 2 did not call any party to the Police Station in connection with the said application of K. A. Rashid dated 4-11-2000 and no case was registered against the petitioner. It is also denied that any humiliating treatment was meted out to the petitioner by him (respondent No. 2) or that he had sent any constable in plain clothes with K. A. Rashid to fetch the petitioner on 14-11-2000. The stand taken in the affidavit is that the petitioner was not called to the Police Station on 14-11-2000, but on 7-11-2000. The affidavit further records that the petitioner has sent an application to the Commissioner of Police dated 22-11-2000 and the same was received by Senior Inspector of Police. Bandra Police Station. It is stated that Shri. Subhash D. Jadhav, Senior Inspector of Police submitted his report on this application on 5-12-2000 to the Deputy Commissioner of Police. Zone-VII, Mumbai. In paragraph 9 of this affidavit, it is clearly stated that no case was registered against the petitioner and that if a fresh complaint was given by K. A. Rashid and his wife then necessary action will be taken according to the provisions of law. Along with this affidavit, the letter addressed by K. A. Rashid to the Commisssioner of Police purported to be dated 19-9-2000 is produced as Exhibit-A. However, there are certain discrepancies in this document which according to the petitioner, would question the genuineness of this document. Although, the letter is stated to be dated 19-9-2000, the same is signed on 4-11-2000. Endorsement has been out by Subhash D. Jadhav Senior Inspector of Police, Bandra Police Station of having received this letter on 4-11-2000. On the reverse, endorsement of respondent No. 2 is recorded indicating that the parties have decided not to press the complaint which is mentioned as 7-11-2000. Besides only Xerox copy of this document has been produced before us.

7. Be that as it may, the petitioner filed rejoinder affidavit dated 12-11-2000 reiterating the stand taken in the writ petition. The affidavit also clearly records that after the petitioner gave complaint in writing to the Commissioner of Police on 23-11-2000, he has been receiving threats. One of the person who has administered the threat is named as Rajesh Kamble for which reason another complaint was sent by the petitioner to the Commissioner of Police as well as to Khar Police Station on 29-11-2000. The affidavit also records that the petitioner informed his banker to stop payment of the post dated cheques issued by the petitioner in favour of Rashid, which according to the petitioner, were obtained forcibly from him on 14-11-2000 while in Police Station. The rejoinder also explains other matters. However, it is not necessary for us to burden those aspects with this judgment. However, in paragraph 9 of the rejoinder clear assertion is made that the petitioner was never called on 7-11-2000 as alleged by the respondent No. 2 but was taken to the police station on 14-11-2000 by the constables in plain clothes of the Bandra Police Station.

8. The Deputy Commissioner of Police attached to Zone-VII Shri Rajender Singh has filed affidavit dated 20th December, 2000. In substance, it is stated that application was received from K. A. Rashid on 19-9-2000 requesting to register a cheating case against the petitioner. That application was sent for inquiry on 3-11-2000 to the Senior Inspector of Police, Bandra Police Station. Inquiry report was however, awaited. Affidavit also records that an application was received from the petitioner dated 22-11-2000 addressed to the Commissioner of Police alleging therein extortion of Rs. 4.5 lakhs committed by respondent No. 2 along with his staff at the behest of K. A. Rashid. It is stated that this application was received on 28-11-2000 from the office of Commissioner of Police which was then forwarded to the Senior Inspector of Bandra Police Station Shri Subhash D. Jadhav, who in turn carried out an inquiry and submitted his report dated 5-11-2000. It is then stated that after going through the said report, the said senior Inspector of Police was directed to re-enquire into the matter and submit his final report which was awaited. The affidavit then records that report was received from the Senior Inspector of Police on 11-12-2000 along with one application given by one Dr. Rajesh Kamble against the petitioner. It is stated that the said report was returned to the Senior Inspector of Police with direction to complete the inquiry into the petitioner's application dated 22-11-2000. It is stated that final report was awaited. In paragraph 5 of this affidavit, it is stated that petitioner had also given application dated 22-11-2000 to Special Inspector General of Police (P.C.R.) which application was forwarded to A.C.P. Bandra for inquiry and the report which was awaited.

9. Further affidavit has been filed by said Rajender Singh, Deputy Commissioner of Police, dated 21-11-2000 explaining the reasons for delay in filing the earlier affidavit.

10. Further affidavit has been filed by Rajender Singh, Deputy Commissioner of Police attached to Zone VII dated 12th January, 2001 which mentions that after the receipt of the complaint from the petitioner, the same was inquired jointly under the supervision of Assistant Commissioner of Police, Bandra Division, Mumbai. During the inquiry, Senior Inspector of Police, Bandra Police Station, had recorded statements of certain persons named in the affidavit. It is then stated that during the inquiry, police also obtained various documents from said K. A. Rashid, which were being verified by the Assistant Commissioner of Police, Bandra Division. The Assistant Commissioner of Police in the meantime submitted interim report dated 11th January, 2001 and on going through the said report, a prima facie, conclusion was reached that K. A. Rashid was cheated by the petitioner and others. It is then stated that after receiving final report in the matter, necessary action as per the provisions of law will be taken against the petitioner and others. Again in this affidavit, no disclosure has been made that the police was contemplating to arrest the petitioner in connection with the complaint filed by K. A. Rashid which presumably was inquired into along with the complaint filed by the petitioner dated 22-11-2000. Moreover, it is unambiguously stated that further action against the petitioner would be taken only after receipt of final report. The interim report dated 11th January, 2001 prepared by the Assistant Commissioner of Police with the assistance of Senior Police Inspector and other police officers of Bandra Police Station is appended to this affidavit as Exhibit-A. Notwithstanding the above, it is seen that the petitioner was arrested by the local police station on 14th January, 2001.

11. The petitioner has filed rejoinder affidavit in January, 2001 making serious grievance about the arrest of the petitioner contrary to the oral directions given by this Court. The affidavit also highlights the humiliation meted out to the petitioner after the arrest including that he was handcuffed and made to sit in white Maruti van while being taken to the Magistrate's Court and pressurised to withdraw this writ petition.

Further affidavit has been filed by Shri Dinesh B. Joshi, Assistant Police Inspector attached to Bandra Police Station dated 9-12-2002 which refers to the interim report prepared by ACP Bandra, Division, Mumbai dated 11th January, 2001. It is then stated that on receiving the said report, the Deputy Commissioner of Police Zone-VII, Mumbai directed on 12-1-2001 by written order to take action as per law. On 13-1-2001 Senior Inspector of Police Mr. Subhash D. Jadhav directed said Dinesh Joshi Assistant Police Inspector to go through the papers and register an offence as per law. On the basis of those written instructions, the offence came to be registered against the petitioner and P.S.I. Gujjar was sent to arrest the petitioner who in turn fetched the petitioner to the Police Station whereupon the petitioner came to be arrested and kept in the Bandra Police Station lock-up. The factum of petitioner having been handcuffed is disputed in this affidavit.

12. There is one more affidavit filed on behalf of respondent sworn by Bipinkumar Singh, Deputy Commissioner of Police, Zone-IX Mumbai dated 27th August, 2003 which more or less reiterates the position stated in the aforesaid affidavits filed on behalf of respondents.

13. Having perused the pleadings and the record produced before us as well as the oral submissions canvassed before us by the counsel appearing for the parties, in our opinion, it will not be appropriate for this Court to scrutinize the veracity of the rival claim because, any opinion in that behalf may affect the merits of the allegations one way or the other. Moreover, that inquiry is not required to be undertaken by this Court having regard to the limited relief that needs to be considered. We would, therefore, confine our decision only to the limited issues which will be required to be adjudicated by this Court in writ jurisdiction. The first question that arises for our consideration is, whether the written complaint as sent by the petitioner to the Commissioner of Police discloses information regarding the commission of any cognizable offence? We have no hesitation in observing that on fair reading of the complaint, relevant portion whereof as extracted above, discloses the information regarding the commission of a cognizable offence. If that is so, the next question is, whether it was obligatory to register the said information/complaint in the book kept by the Police Officer as is required by the mandate of Section 154 of Code of Criminal Procedure? It is well settled that registration of an F.I.R. involves only the process of entering the substance of the information relating to the commission of the cognizable offence in a book kept by the Officer- in-charge of the Police Station as indicated in Section 154 of the Code. (See 2001 (2) SCC 628 :2001 Cri LJ 954) Suresh Jain v. State of Madhya Pradesh para 10). It is also well established position that it is the bounden duty of the Officer incharge of the Police Station to register the FIR regarding the cognizable offence disclosed by the complaint because that police officer could take further steps contemplated in Chapter XII of the Code only thereafter. It is will be useful to advert to the dictum of the Apex Court in the case of State of Haryana v. Ch. Bhajan Lal in AIR 1992 SC 604 : (1992 Cri LJ 527) paras 29 to 32 thereof read thus :

"29. The legal mandate enshrined in Section 154(1) is that every information relating to the commission of a "cognizable offence" (as defined under Section 2(c) of the Code) if given orally (in which case it is to be reduced into writing) or in writing to an officer in charge of a police station" (within the meaning of Section 2(o) of the Code) and signed by the informant should be entered in a book to be kept by such officer in such form as the State Government may prescribe which form is commonly called as "First Information Report" and which act of entering the information in the said form is known as registration of a crime or a case.

30. At the stage of registration of a crime or a case on the basis of the information disclosing a cognizable offence in compliance with the mandate of a Section 154(1) of the Code, the concerned Police Officer cannot embark upon an enquiry as to whether the information, laid by the informant is reliable and genuine or otherwise and refuse to register a case on the ground that the information is not reliable or credible. On the other hand, the officer-in-charge of a police station is statutorily obliged to register a case and then to proceed with the investigation if he has reason to suspect the commission of an offence which he is empowered under Section 156 of the Code to investigate, subject to the proviso to Section 157. ..... In case, an officer in charge of a police station refuses to exercise the jurisdiction vested on him and to register a case on the information of a cognizable offence, reported and thereby violates the statutory duty cast upon him, the person aggrieved by such refusal can send the substance of the information in writing and by post to the Superintendent of Police concerned who if satisfied that the information forwarded to him discloses a cognizable offence, should either investigate the case himself or direct an investigation to be made by any police officer subordinate to him in the manner provided by sub-section (3) of Section 154 of the Code.

31. ..... An overall reading of all the Codes makes it clear that the condition which is sine qua non for recording a First Information Report is that there must be an information and that information must disclose a cognizable offence.

32. It is, therefore, manifestly clear that if any information disclosing a cognizable offence is laid before an officer in charge of a police station satisfying the requirements of Section 154(1) of the Code, the said police officer has no other option except to enter the substance thereof in the prescribed form, that is to say, to register a case on the basis of such information."

(Emphasis supplied)

14. In the present case, since the allegations regarding of the commission of offence was against the Police Officers of the concerned Police Station, the petitioner thought it appropriate to forward the complaint in writing to the Commissioner of Police which option was exercised presumably in terms of such remedy provided in sub-section (3) of Section 154 of the Code. On receipt of such complaint, surely the Commissioner of Police was obliged to ensure that the information so received in the shape of the written complaint was registered as F.I.R. as it disclosed the commission of a cognizable offence. That is not the course adopted by the Commissioner in spite of the statutory obligation to do so. Be that as it may, the Commissioner then forwarded the complaint to the Deputy Commissioner of Police, Bandra Division, Mumbai, to enquire into the matter who in turn directed his subordinates to record statements of the concerned persons. We shall deal with this aspect a little later. In our opinion, when the information relating to the commission of a cognizable offence is reported either orally or in writing as in this case and as the information was vague or irresponsible rumour it surely required registration under Section 154 of the Code and further steps in terms of Chapter XII of the Code. In such matters, there is no scope for informal inquiry because such inquiry would partake the colour of investigation. It is only when the information received were to be vague information, anonymous or irresponsible rumour, it would not in itself constitute information within the meaning of Section 154 of the Code or the basis for an investigation under Section 157. However, in the present case, written complaint sent by the petitioner, who is a practicing Chartered Accountant. Besides, it is very specific and replete with requisite information. Accordingly, in such circumstances, the same ought to have been reduced into the book maintained for recording of information relating to the commission of a cognizable offence in terms of Section 154 of the Code. We would only observe that if the allegations made in the complaint are found to be true, the same are not only serious but, prima facie, cannot be said to have been done by the concerned Police Officers in discharge of their official duty. The allegations in substance inter alia, are that the Police Officers have played active role to facilitate recovery of certain amounts from the petitioner at the instance of K. A. Rashid, obviously it is not the duty of the Police Officer to facilitate the recovery of amounts or act as a recovery agent using weight of their office.

15. In our opinion, there is not only failure of recording F.I.R. in respect of complaint sent by the petitioner but what is intriguing is that some inquiry is directed which is only reduced to a farce of an inquiry. We say so because, it appears from the record that on receipt of complaint from the petitioner dated 22-11-2000, the Commissioner of Police referred the matter to the Deputy Commissioner of Police, Bandra Division, Mumbai. It would have been a different matter if the Deputy Commissioner of Police, Bandra Division, was to cause inquiry but instead, he, in turn, referred the matter to the Assistant Commissioner of Police, Bandra Division, Mumbai. The Assistant Commissioner of Police then depended on the assistance of Senior Inspector of Police and other police officers of Bandra Police Station which fact has been recorded in the interim report dated 11-1-2001 submitted by the Assistant Commissioner of Police. From the explanation offered on behalf of respondents before us, we are persuaded to take the view that the inquiry so conducted was only a show cause without anything more. Inasmuch as the same has been undertaken by the officers of the same Police Station with a seal of approval put by the Assistant Commissioner of Police, Bandra Division by way of his interim report. The gist of the statements of concerned persons recorded in the interim report would clearly show that the main focus about the allegations in the complaint sent by the petitioner to the Commissioner of Police, has been glossed over and instead opinion rather a finding of guilt, is recorded against the petitioner that he has made a false and mischievous allegation against respondent No. 2 with ulterior purpose. In the matter of such serious allegations, the Commissioner of Police should have at least, ensured that the inquiry was done by an independent agency and responsible officer and not by the officers associated with the same Police Station. We make it clear that we are not endorsing the action of the Commissioner of Police directing the inquiry into the matter instead of registering the offence under Section 154 of the Code and of further actions under Chapter XII of the Code. Suffice it to observe that inquiry as made, has no legal efficacy so as to ignore the complaint made by the petitioner in writing which discloses the commission of a cognizable offence. In view of the foregoing discussion, we have no hesitation in directing the respondent No. 1 Commissioner of Police to cause to reduce the written complaint sent by the petitioner dated 22-11-2000 in the appropriate book maintained for the purpose of registering crime as per Section 154 of the Code and further to cause investigation into the said complaint by an independent agency such as DCB CID, having regard to the fact that serious allegations have been made against the police officers of having committed acts of commission or omission constituting cognizable offence; and the matter ought to be taken to its logical end in accordance with law after investigation is completed and report in that behalf is filed before the appropriate Court.

16. The next question that needs to be addressed in this petition is, whether it was appropriate for the police to arrest the petitioner on 14th January, 2001 in spite of the oral direction given by this Court as contended by the petitioner and at any rate, contrary to the assurance given in the affidavit filed by the respondents and especially when the matter was subjudice before the High Court. In this context, it needs to be mentioned that the counsel for the petitioner vehemently states that when the writ petition was listed before this Court on 4th December, 2000 ad interim relief in terms of prayer clause (c) was specifically pressed but as the matter was adjourned at the instance of the learned A.P.P. the Court orally observed that the respondents shall not precipitate the matter. Counsel for the respondents however, submits that no such oral observation was made by the Court. According to him, even if an oral observation is made by the Court, the same would have been communicated by him to the respondents in writing - But there is no material to support this position. It is not necessary for us to enter into this controversy but, in our view, the action of the respondents to cause arrest of the petitioner on 14th January, 2001 cannot be countenanced at all, for this Court was represented by the respondents in the form of affidavits filed before this Court that further action will be taken against the petitioner only if fresh complaint was to be filed by K. A. Rashid. On the one hand the affidavit filed before this Court as late as 12th January, 2001 (of the Deputy Commissioner of Police) makes a categorical statement that upon receiving final report necessary action will be taken against the petitioner, however, in utter breach of that stand taken on affidavit, the police proceeded to cause arrest of the petitioner on 14th January, 2001 - not because of fresh complaint filed by K. A. Rashid or any final report, but on the basis of the original complaint which it is stated, was enquired along with the complaint filed by the petitioner; and direction issued by the Officer to arrest the petitioner having found sufficient material against him (petitioner) in respect of complaint filed by K. A. Rashid, in the interim report. Moreover, when the question regarding arrest of the petitioner in connection with the original complaint filed by K. A. Rashid was incidentally subjudice in the writ petition which was pending before this Court and the matter having been adjourned at the instance of the respondents, in our opinion, there can be no tangible justification for causing arrest of the petitioner on 14th January, 2001. The explanation given by the respondents in our opinion, is unacceptable and is obviously an afterthought. Understood thus, we hold that the action of arrest of the petitioner is inappropriate. Indeed, the injustice caused to the petitioner has been salvaged because of the release order passed by the Magistrate on 16th January, 2001 when the petitioner was produced before him for remand. We are not however, entering into the allegation regarding handcuffing of the petitioner after the arrest till he was produced before the Magistrate. It appears from the record that issue regarding handcuffing, has been raised by the petitioner before the Magistrate. That aspect can be considered in those proceedings and we express no opinion thereon. Even with regard to the grievance of manhandling or mishandling of the petitioner while in custody till he was produced before the Magistrate, even that issue will have to be considered in the proceedings before the Magistrate or in such other appropriate proceedings, if filed by the petitioner. We also clarify that one of the other serious allegations made by the petitioner against the Police Officers is that when the petitioner was arrested, he was threatened to withdraw this writ petition or face the consequences. If that allegation is established, obviously it will be a serious matter and by itself would constitute the contempt of Court. The petitioner may take recourse to appropriate remedy in that behalf by giving specific details. If so advised. If such proceedings are taken out, the same can be enquired into and decided in accordance with law.

17. While parting, we may observe that although concerned police officer (Respondent No. 2) has been impleaded in writ petition as respondent by name and the allegations against him are personal to him, nevertheless, the Public Prosecutor has thought it appropriate to defend the respondent No. 2. In such a situation, in our view, the Public Prosecutor ought not to defend the officer against whom the allegations of acts of commission or omission are made. (See 1986 Cri LJ 1022 (Madras)) Khannapan v. Abbas).

18. For the aforesaid reasons, we allow this writ petition in the above terms with liberty to the petitioner to take recourse to appropriate remedy on the issues kept open by us, as permissible by law, if so advised. If any further proceedings are instituted by the petitioner, the same will be decided in accordance with law without being influenced by any of the observations made herein. All questions in that behalf are left open.

Accordingly, we issue a writ of mandamus directing the respondent No. 1 Commissioner of Police for Greater Bombay to cause to register said complaint of petitioner Sudhir M. Vora dated 22-11-2000 in appropriate register as is maintained for the purpose of Section 154 of Code of Criminal Procedure. If such register is not maintained, to open a register as required under Sec-tion 154 and then to register the said complaint. We further direct him to then cause investigation into the matter in accordance with necessary provisions of law as observed by us above. Further, if the offence is made out during the investigation, a report in that context be submitted to the appropriate Court of Magistrate as per the provisions of Section 173 of Cr.P.C., 1973. If no offence is disclosed, an appropriate summary be sought from the concerned Magistrate.

Rule made absolute on the above terms.Petition allowed.

Pijush K. Roy and Sunil Kumar Verma, for Appellant; Suchit Mohanta, Amit Sharma, Anupam Lal Das, Avijit Bhattacharjee and Saumya Kundu, for Respondents.

JUDGEMENT

1. ALTAMAS KABIR, J. :- Leave granted.

2. The short point involved in this appeal is whether in view of Section 197 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, previous sanction of the State Government was necessary for prosecuting the respondent No. 2, Sahabul Hussain, under Section 384/506 of the Indian Penal Code.

3. The respondent No. 2 belongs to the West Bengal Police Service and was posted as Deputy Superintendent of Police (D.N.T.) at Behrampore, District Murshidabad, West Bengal. On 9th September, 2005, at about 9.15/9.30 in the morning one Samiul Choudhury, the husband of the appellant herein, was shot at and suffered grievous injury to his right eye. Thereafter, in a statement given by him to the Inspector in-charge of Behrampore Police Station, he claimed that the assailants were the associates of Mohan Lal, Jalal, Kamal, Babul and Kabir of Zamindar para. On the basis of the said statement Behrampore Police Station Case No. 348 dated 9.11.2005 was registered under Sections 326/307/120-B/34 IPC read with Sections 25/27 of the Arms Act. Subsequently, the appellant herein filed an application before the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Murshidabad, alleging commission of offences by the respondent No. 2 and another punishable under Sections 387/504/34 IPC and the said complaint was registered as C.R. Case No. 543 of 2005.

4. In the aforesaid complaint it was alleged that on 9.11.2005 Samiul Choudhury was shot at near his house and thereafter he was admitted to the Behrampore New General Hospital and police investigation was started. It was also alleged that on the pretext of conducting investigation the respondent No. 2 and his co-accused used to come to the house of the appellant and on 18th December, 2005 and also on 19th December, 2005, the respondent No. 2 and the other accused came to the house of the appellant and threatened her husband and wanted the husband of the appellant to make a tutored statement and under threat even tried to obtain his signature on a blank paper. It was also claimed that the appellant's husband lodged a complaint with the local police authorities and higher authorities also but no action was taken and the appellant was, therefore, compelled to move the Chief Judicial Magistrate Murshidabad by way of the said complaint. The learned Magistrate took cognizance of the offence by his order dated 26.9.2004 and transferred the case to the 2nd Court of Judicial Magistrate, Behrampore, for inquiry and trial. After transfer of the case the appellant and her husband were examined on solemn affirmation by the learned Magistrate on 14.2.2006 and summons were directed to be issued under Sections 384/506, IPC.

5. Being aggrieved by the cognizance taken and the issuance of process the respondent No. 2 moved the High Court under Sections 397/401 read with Section 482, Cr.P.C. for quashing the cognizance taken and also the issue of process. The main ground of challenge was that being in the employment of the State Government the respondent No. 2 enjoyed the protection of Section 197, Cr.P.C. and that no Court could take cognizance of the offence alleged to have been committed by the respondent No. 2 except with the previous sanction of the State Government. It was also contended that the complaint disclosed that the offence was alleged to have been committed by the respondent No. 2 during the course of investigation in connection with Behrampore Police Station Case No. 348 dated 9.11.2005, and, accordingly, such offence, if at all committed, had been committed by the respondent No. 2 while discharging official duties which brought him within the protective umbrella of Section 197, Cr.P.C. In support of the aforesaid contention made on behalf of the respondent No. 2 reliance was placed on the decision of this Court in Sankaran Moitra vs. Sadhna Das and another [(2006) 4 SCC 584] wherein after considering various case law on the subject the majority view was that the important criteria to be applied with regard to the invocation of Section 197 of the Code was that the act complained of must have been performed in discharge of or in the purported discharge of duty. This Court ultimately, came to the conclusion that dispensing with jurisdictional or statutory requirements could ultimately affect the adjudication itself and could result in loss of public confidence in the institution. The High Court was, therefore, of the view that in the facts of the case it was quite clear that the proceedings before the Magistrate had been vitiated in the absence of sanction having been obtained for prosecution of the respondent No. 2 in terms of Section 197, Cr.P.C. The High Court, accordingly, quashed the proceedings and the cognizance taken on the basis thereof. The appellant is before us against the said order of the High Court. 2006 AIR SCW 1695

6. Mr. Pijush K. Roy, learned advocate who appeared for the appellant, submitted that even in Sankaran Moitra's case (supra) this Court had held that committing a criminal offence, which was not part of the duties of the officer concerned, could not be said to be an act performed in the course of discharge of official duties. Mr. Roy submitted that in the instant case the acts complained of against the respondent No. 2 could never be said to have been part of his official duties. In other words, even if the acts complained of were done during investigation, it could not be said that the same were part of the respondent's official duties and hence the protection of Section 197, Cr.P.C. was not available to the respondent No. 2.

7. In support of his submissions Mr. Roy firstly referred to the decision of this Court in Pukhraj v. State of Rajasthan [AIR 1973 SC 2591] where the same question was dealt with and it was held that assaulting the complainant and abusing him when the complainant came to submit his representation for cancellation of his transfer could not by any standard be said to be part of the official duties to be exercised by the authority concerned.

8. A similar view was taken in Bhagwan Prasad Srivastava v. N.P. Misra [(1971) 1 SCR 317] where a complaint had been filed that the accused, who was a civil surgeon, used defamatory and abusive words and got the complainant pushed out by the cook of the hospital. The question posed was whether the case was covered by Section 197, Cr.P.C. and whether previous sanction of the superior authority was necessary before the trial Court could take cognizance of the case. In the facts of the case, this Court was of the view that the case was not covered by Section 197, Cr.P.C. and that the object and purpose underlying Section 197, Cr.P.C. to afford protection to public servant against frivolous, vexatious or false prosecution for offences alleged to have been committed by them while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of their official duty. It was also observed that the Section 197 has been designed to facilitate effective and unhampered performance of their official duty by public servants by providing for scrutiny into the allegations of commission of offence by them by their superior authorities and prior sanction for their prosecution was a @page-CriLJ1321 condition precedent to the taking of cognizance of the cases against them by the Courts. It was finally observed that the question whether a particular act is done by a public servant in the discharge of his official duties is substantially one of fact to be determined in the circumstances of each case. AIR 1970 SC 1661

9. Reference was also made to the decision of this Court in the case of Parkash Singh Badal v. State of Punjab [(2007) 1 SCC 1] where the same question was considered and similar observations were made. 2007 AIR SCW 1415

10. Mr. Roy submitted that in the facts of this case also, since the acts complained of were not part of the official duties of the respondent No. 2, they did not attract the bar of Section 197, Cr.P.C. and the Magistrate had quite lawfully taken cognizance of the offence and had issued process.

11. Mr. Suchit Mohanta, who appeared for the respondent No. 2 supported the judgment of the High Court and submitted that since the acts complained of were alleged to have been committed during investigation it had been rightly held by the High Court that the same had been done in the discharge of official duties by the respondent No. 2.

12. The same stand was taken by Mr. Avijit Bhattacharjee, appearing for the State of West Bengal. He urged that in view of the decision in Sankaran Moitra's case there was no scope to contend that the bar under Section 197, Cr.P.C. did not apply to the facts of the case. Mr. Bhattacharjee submitted that the acts complained of had been performed by the respondent No. 2 during the course of investigation, which was part of the official duties required to be discharged by him and hence his case came squarely within the protective umbrella of Section 197, Cr.P.C. 2006 AIR SCW 1695

13. Having considered the submissions made on behalf of the respective parties, we are inclined to agree with the submissions made by Mr. Pijush K. Roy on behalf of the appellant.

14. The direction which had been given by this Court, as far back as in 1971 in Bhagwan Prasad Prasad Srivastava's case (supra) holds good even today. All acts done by a public servant in the purported discharge of his official duties cannot as a matter of course be brought under the protective umbrella of Section 197, Cr.P.C. On the other hand, there can be cases of misuse and/or abuse of powers vested in a public servant which can never be said to be a part of the official duties required to be performed by him. As mentioned in Bhagwan Prasad Srivastava's case (supra), the underlying object of Section 197, Cr.P.C is to enable the authorities to scrutinize the allegations made against a public servant to shield him/her against frivolous, vexatious or false prosecution initiated with the main object of causing embarrassment and harassment to the said official. However, as indicated hereinabove, if the authority vested in a public servant is misused for doing things which are not otherwise permitted under the law, such acts cannot claim the protection of Section 197, Cr.P.C. and have to be considered de hors the duties which a public servant is required to discharge or perform. Hence, in respect of prosecution for such excesses or misuse of authority, no protection can be demanded by the public servant concerned. AIR 1970 SC 1661

15. In the instant case, certain deeds and acts have been attributed to the respondent No. 2 and another accused, which cannot be said to have been part of the official duties to be performed by respondent No. 2. Hence, in our view, the respondent No. 2 was not entitled to the protection of Section 197, Cr.P.C. in respect of such acts.

16. While dealing with the aforesaid question, the High Court appears to have been swayed by the submissions made on behalf of the respondent No. 2 that since in the complaint the acts of extortion and criminal intimidation were alleged to have been committed by the respondent No. 2 and co-accused while conducting investigation in connection with Behrampore Police Station Case No. 348 dated 9.11.2005, such offences were purported to have been committed by the respondent No. 2 while discharging official duties.

17. We have already indicated that we are unable to accept such a view. In our view, the offences complained of cannot be said to be part of the duties of the Investigating Officer while investigating an offence alleged to have been committed. It was no part of his duties to threaten the complainant or her husband to withdraw the complaint. In order to apply the bar of Section 197, Cr.P.C. each case has to be considered in its own fact-situation in order to arrive at a finding as to whether the protection of Section 197, Cr.P.C. could be given to the public servant. The fact- situation in the complaint in this case is such that it does not bring the case within the ambit of Section 197 and the High Court erred in quashing the same as far as the respondent No. 2 is concerned. The complaint prima facie makes out offences alleged to have been committed by the respondent No. 2 which were not part of his official duties.

18. We, accordingly, allow the appeal and set aside the judgment and order of the High Court. The trial Court shall proceed with the trial of all the accused, including the respondent No. 2 herein. Appeal allowed.

Hidayatullah, C.

(1) In February and March, 1964, the appellant Raja Ram was working as Assistant Sub-Inspector of Police at Rohtak. He was committed to the court of Sessions, Rohtak, for trial under S. 331 and 342 of the Indian Penal Code. He was acquitted of the charge under Section 331 but was convicted under S. 342, Indian penal code and sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment. His appeal 'to the High court was dismissed and he has now appealed to this court by special leave. The charge against him read as follows:

"I, K. S. Sindhu, Additional Sessions Judge, Rohtak, hereby charge you Raja Ram son of Charan Dass as follows:

Firstly, that you on or about in the month of March, 1964 at G. I. A. Police post, Jhajjar, while investigating a theft case in F. I. R. No. 2 of 1964 of P. S. Sampla, as A. S. I. Police voluntarily caused grievous hurt to Ranbir Singh, a minor son of Lakshmi Dutt for the purpose of extorting from Lakshmi Dutt a person interested in the said Ranbir Singh as his father a confession in respect of the offence of theft in the house of Ram Dhan of village Silana and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 331 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

Secondly, that you on or about in the month of March, 1964, at the C. 1. A. Police post, Jhajjar wrongfully confined Lakshmi Dutt, Devi Dutt, Chand Kaur, Ranbir Singh minor and Jagbir Singh and thereby committed an offence punishable under S. 342 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried under the said charges by this Court."

(2) No dates were mentioned in the charge. The finding against him was that he had confined persons mentioned in the second charge for a period of two days and that formed the basis of the conviction. In this appeal Raja Ram contests the correctness of this finding.

(3) Ordinarily this court does not consider the evidence for the third time but there are several special features in this case, such as rejection of a considerable mass of evidence charging the appellant with causing of grievous hurt, outraging the modesty of Chand Kaur and also rape. This made us look into the evidence to see how far the case as found against the appellant could be held to be proved and whether the evidence was reliable. The facts of the case are as follows.

(4) On 11/01/1964, information was received by the police of an offence under S. 457 and 380, Indian penal code This case was registered at Police Station, Sampla. In the course of investigation the police arrested Devi Dutt on 6/03/1964. Two successive remands were taken, first for ten days and the second for four days and he was held in custody till 21/03/1964, when he was admitted to bail. Devi Dutt's son Lakshmi Dutt was also arrested on 20/03/1964, and was remanded till 1/04/1964, and was then released on bail on the following day. On 6/04/1964, a written complaint was made to the Home Minister, Punjab State, by Devi Dutt, who is a retired teacher. That report may be read here : 947

"To Shri Mohan Lai, Home Minister, Punjab State, Chandigarh. It is submitted that I am going to relate a painful story. The facts of the story are as under: On the election of Sarpanchship of Panchayat in village Silana, Tehsil and District Rohtak Ex-Sarpanch was defeated in the election got implicated falsely my son and myself accusing in a theft case by the police. They have sent us to the staff Jhajjar where, we were enoughly beaten. Finding no way of in (sic) justice, I was compelled to approach your honour with this application. I am retired teacher, as such did not commit any misdeed nor do I expect to do so in future. Even our family did not do such thing, as it would have put a slur to the family. The enquiry should be made by a special person by collecting the all villagers' and Panchayat. A great injustice has been done to me. My eldest son, aged twenty-seven years was beaten seriously by the policeman, as a result of which the blood circulation of the legs stopped. It rendered him incapable of walking. It is better to die than to live. I cannot provide him medical owing to poverty. I hope you will help me sympathetically in this behalf. (Sd.) Devi Dutt, Retired Teacher."

(5) The report was also signed by one of the panches. It was first sent to Hazara Singh, a Deputy Superintendent of Police. In the course of his investigation he recorded statements of Devi Dutt, Chand Kaur, Jagbir, Ch. Ranpat, Sarpanch, Rai Singh, Amir Singh, Lamberdar, Ram Dhan, Dharam Singh and Daryao Singh, etc. Ranpat, Sarpanch was present throughout the investigation and signed all the statements as they were made. Signatures of the deponents were also taken. Later, a second enquiry was made by Sardar Dalip Singh, a Deputy Superintendent of Police who drew up a report on the basis of which the First Information Report was recorded. The case was then investigated a third time by Amar Nath Sharma, District Inspector Police, Rohtak, who presented the charge-sheet against the appellant.

(6) The charge-sheet disclosed in addition an offence under S. 325, Indian penal code against the appellant. The allegation was that the appellant bad attempted to hit Chand Kaur with a danda and bad caused fracture of the arm of her infant son in her lap. The Committing Magistrate did not commit the appellant on that charge and it was because the medical evidence proved that the injury to the arm of the infant was very old and probably not connected with the present incident.

(7) The prosecution examined 15 witnesses, and the appellant examined four witnesses on his side. The story as unfolded by the prosecution witnesses in so far as there is agreement between them may now be narrated. We have already stated that Devi Dutt and Lakshmi Dutt were arrested, kept in detention on remand by the magistrate and later released on bail. Devi Dutt was admitted to bail on 21/03/1964, and Lakshimi Dutt on

2/04/1964. It is also clear that on 6/04/1964, a report of whatever had 948 happened was made to the Home Minister. That report speaks of only two things, namely, that Devi Dutt and his son were beaten. There was no mention of any outrage against Lakshmi Dutt's wife Chand Kaur or indeed any other person. The story of Lakshmi Dutt was that after his release on bail one day two constables came to him when he was sitting in court for some work and asked him to go to the police station House called C. I. A. Staff. According to him he was taken hand-cuffed to the C. I. A. Staff, Jhajjar. He was beaten at night by the appellant 'and the constables and tortured in various ways. Next day Devi Dutt was also called to the C. I. A. Staff. He was stripped naked by the accused. Lakshmi Dutt stated that he did not know for how many days his father was kept in custody but was ultimately released on bail. This shows that there is some confusion in the narration of events. The event of which Devi Dutt and Others speak was after the release of Devi Dutt on bail that is to say in a period following 21/03/1964, and not earlier. However, Lakshmi Dutt goes on to say that his latter, his wife Chand Kaur and his infant Ranbir and his brother Jagbir were also called to the thana. All of these persons were stripped naked in the presence of one another and then were asked to dress again. The appellant then tried to give a danda blow to Chand Kaur but it hit the infant Ranbir in her lap. Lakshmi Dutt was further tortured and then sent to the lock up. Lakshmi Dutt also stated that his sister Dhanpati and his brother-in-law were also called to the police station and were insulted. His sister was stripped naked in his presence. Next day the members of the panchayat came to the C. I. A. Staff. The appellant beat him in the presence of the panches also and then released him on the intercession of the panches. Lakshmi Dutt denied that he had ever served in police or was dismissed from that service because of epilepsy. He admitted that there was a party faction in the village and that Ranpat and Daryao and four others stood for election for the offices of Sarpanch. He also stated that while he was in the police lock-up, the Sub-Inspector had called the doctor to examine him but not for epilepsy. He, however, did not show the doctor his injury because he was threatened that he would be beaten.

(8) This statement of Lakshmi Dutt serves as a basis for examining the statements of other persons who claim to have been molested, insulted or tortured. Devi Dutt gave him a lie by staling that his son Lakshmi Dutt was in the police service and was discharged because he was an epileptic. Devi Dutt stated that he himself was arrested and was in the custody for nearly 28 days. This was wrong because he was in custody only for 15 days from the 6th to the 21st of March, 1964. He stated that he was beaten while he was in custody almost every day. After his release one day a constable took him again to the C. I. A. Staff, Jhajjar and he went there with his son, Jagbir, his daughter-in-law Chand Kaur and infant Ranbir in her lap. He described how they were all stripped naked in one another's presence and how the police wanted to beat Chand Kaur but instead hit Ranbir and fractured his arm. According to him, the appellant released him and his son Jagbir but they kept sitting outside C. I. A. Staff throughout the night. Next day the members of the panchayat came and got them released. He stated that Chand Kaur and Jagbir were detained separately. The witness does not speak of the detention of Jagbir and himself in any way after they had been questioned a second time. In fact he says that they passed the time outside the C. I. A. Staff after they had been released.

(9) Mst. Chand Kaur repeated the same thing except that she was detained in a separate kothri and was raped in the night, first by the appellant and then by the two constables. She stated that her husband, her 949 father-in-law and her brother-in-law were all turned out of the C. I. A. Staff. Jagbir also stated that they were called and stripped naked and beaten but he stated that at night Devi Dutt and he were detained in a separate kothri.

(10) It will be seen from the above discrepant statements that there is much doubt about wrongful confinement as such. To begin with there were many charges-rape, outraging the modesty of Chand Kaur, assault, torture to extract confession, causing of grievous and simple hurts and wrongful confinement. The police itself did not send up the appellant for trial for rape and outraging the modesty of a women. From this it follows that this part of the story was treated as an exaggeration and false. When the case was tried, the charge of causing hurt "was dropped by the committal court. The Sessions Trial proceeded on two charges and of these the charge under Section 331, Indian penal code also failed. We are, therefore, left with a single charge of wrongful confinement.

(11) Unfortunately no dates are mentioned either in the charge or in the evidence of witnesses. We can only be sure that on the 6/04/1964, Devi Dutt and his family were free. That day a report was made to the Home Minister but there is no mention of wrongful confinement but only of harassment. Lakshmi Dutt was released on bail on the 2nd April and, as be says he was recalled after his release, it must be some day between the 2nd and the 5th April. Lakshmi Dutt's evidence is unsatisfactory because) according to him, the second call was after his release but 'some time after that'. This is very vague and there is not much time left between 2nd April and 5th April for detention for two days. Devi Dutt is also very difficult to understand. He said that he was detained for 28 days. If he was arrested on the 6th March, and detained for 28 days, it will take us to the 4th April. That cannot be correct because on the 6th he was free. We also know that be was admitted to bail on the 21st March. The evidence of Chand Kaur and Jagbir does not serve to clear this matter and panches also mention no dates.

(12) Although the case is very unsatisfactory from this point of view, there is no doubt that Devi Dutt's family was summoned to the C. I. A. Staff. It is difficult to believe the testimony of Chand Kaur that she was detained in a kothri because her evidence of rape on her and the fracture of her infant son's arm cannot be believed. The evidence of Lakshmi Dutt and of Jagbir also cannot be believed that they were locked up in a kothri. Devi Dutt said that they were turned out and were released and passed the night outside the C. I. A. Staff.

(13) All the same the evidence of these witnesses that they were under a wrongful restraint can be believed since it is corroborated by the panches. It is clear that they were not free. Now a police officer can certainly summon a person to be questioned but he cannot summon a woman or a male under fifteen years of age. Such persons must be asked to attend interrogation at the place where they reside. This is what the proviso to S. 160, Cr. P. C. says. By summoning Chand Kaur, a woman, and Jagbir, a boy aged thirteen years, the appellant was guilty of the infringement of this provision. There is no doubt that he kept these persons and also Devi Dutt and Lakshmi Dutt under wrongful restraint. The appellant could not keep them under restraint. We do not find any independent evidence of wrongful confinment. But there is evidence of restraint. This evidence gets corroboration from the evidence of panches. The appellant was thus guilty of an offence under S. 341, Indian penal code but not under S. 342, Indian penal code

(14) We accordingly set aside his conviction under S. 342, Indian penal code and instead sentence him under S. 341, Indian penal code The sentence of six months rigorous imprisonment is also set aside. We sentence him under Section 341, Indian penal code to a fine of Rs. 250.00. In default of payment of fine he shall undergo simple imprisonment for one week. With this modification the appeal fails and will be dismissed.

JUDGEMENT

(1.) RULE. Returnable forthwith. Heard finally with consent of parties.

(2.) THIS is a revision by an accused. A few facts may be stated thus : the applicant is a police officer. At the relevant time he was working as in-charge of the Police Station Civil Lines, Akola. On 2-12-1996 the non applicant no. 1 had lodged a report with the police station Civil Lines, Akola. He had alleged that his daughter-in-law along with her relative had committed robbery, trespass and theft. The police refused to take cognizance of the said complaint of bhaurao i. e. non-applicant No. 1. Non-applicant No. 1, therefore, filed criminal complaint case bearing No. 1280/01 in the Court of Judicial Magistrate, First class. The Judicial Magistrate First Class in the said criminal complaint passed an order under section 156 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code and directed the police to investigate into the matter. On this an offence was registered by the police. Initially the offence was investigated by P. S. I. Aney and later since the offence is of a serious nature the investigation was taken over by the present applicant. The present applicant filed an application under section 169 Criminal procedure Code before the Magistrate after the investigation and prayed for discharge of the accused therein. The present applicant also filed a summary before the Judicial Magistrate. Judicial Magistrate First Class did not accept the summary and issued a process against the accused named in that complaint case. It is after that order was passed that Bhaurao the present non-applicant No. 1 instituted a criminal complaint against the present applicant under section 468, 471 and 218 of the Indian Penal Code.

(3.) IN the said complaint case the present applicant filed an application to dismiss the complaint. The said application was dismissed on the ground that no sanction was obtained by the complainant to prosecute the present applicant. The magistrate after hearing the parties dismissed the complaint on the ground that sanction was not obtained and the complaint was barred by limitation under section 161 of the Bombay Police Act. The present non-applicant No. 1 therefore preferred a revision before the Sessions Judge. The revision was allowed and the matter was remanded back to the Magistrate with a direction that he will deal with the question of sanction under section 197, Criminal Procedure Code and section 161 of the Bombay Police Act after recording the evidence before charge and on hearing both the sides. Being aggrieved by that order the accused/applicant has preferred this revision.

(4.) I have heard the learned counsel for the applicant and the non-applicant.

(5.) FROM the facts narrated above it is clear that the complaint was referred to police under section 156 (3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure and an offence came to be registered against the present applicant/accused. It is also clear that one Sujata and Vijay were arrested in that case and later the investigation was taken over by the present applicant. It also appears that soon thereafter discharge report under section 169 of Criminal Procedure Code was filed before the magistrate and later B Summary was filed instead of a charge-sheet. B Summary covers the following cases :

Class 'b' cases : Wherein no offence has been committed at all either by the accused or by any one else, but wherein the complaint is found to be "false and maliciously false. "

Along with the said summary was sent a statement of one Deepak said to be recorded under section 161. The learned Magistrate rejected the summary and recorded statement of complainant and his witnesses and issued process against the accused. It is the contention of the non-applicant that Deepak gave a statement before the Magistrate that no police officer had ever come to record his statement. It is the contention that although Deepak never gave a statement to police a statement purporting to be given by him was sent with B Summary. It is also contended that this was done with a view to help the accused who are said to be relatives of the present applicant. The undisputed fact is that a complaint was sent to police station under section 156 (3), Criminal Procedure Code. It cannot be disputed that whenever such complaint is sent under section 156 (3) police officer is bound to register an offence and proceed to investigate into the crime. In this case after arrest of two accused the investigation was taken over by the applicant herein. It is not disputed that he investigated the said offence and after completion of investigation he forwarded the statement purporting to be that of deepak to the magistrate along with B Summary. Learned counsel for the applicant contended that this statement can be said to be recorded in discharge of the official duty or purported discharge of duty and as such provisions of section 197 of the Code of Criminal Procedure are attracted. There is no doubt that whenever a statement is being recorded an officer the concerned officer must be said to be acting in discharge of duty. Their Lordships of the Supreme Court in rakesh Kumar Mishra vs. State of Bihar and others, (2006) 1 SCC 557 have made the following observations :

"it has been widened further by extending protection to even those acts or omissions which are done in purported exercise of official duty; that is under the colour of office. Official duty, therefore, implies that the act or omission must have been done by the public servant in the course of his service and such act or omission must have been performed as part of duty which further must have been official in nature. The section has, thus, to be construed strictly, which determining its applicability to any act or omission in the course of service. Its operation has to be limited to those duties which are discharged in the course of duty. But once any act or omission has been found to have been committed by a public servant in the discharge of his duty then it must be given liberal and wide construction so far its official nature is concerned. For instance a public servant is not entitled to indulge in criminal activities. To that extent the section has to be construed narrowly and in a restricted manner. But once it is established that an act or omission was done by the public servant while discharging his duty then the scope of its being official should be construed so as to advance the objective of the section in favour of the , public servant. Otherwise the entire purpose of affording protection to a public servant without sanction shall stand frustrated. For instance a police officer in the discharge of duty may have to use force which may be an offence for the prosecution of which the sanction may be necessary. But if the same officer commits an act in the course of service but not in the discharge of his duty and without any justification therefor then the bar under section 197 of the Code is not attracted. To what extent an act or omission performed by a public servant in the discharge of his duty can be deemed to be official was explained by this Court in matyajog Dobey vs. H. C. Bhari thus : 'the offence alleged to have been committed (by the accused) must have something to do, or must be related in some manner, with the discharge of official duty. . . . There must be a reasonable connection between the act and the discharge of official duty; the act must bear such relation to the duty that the accused could lay a reasonable (claim), but not a pretended or fanciful claim, that he did it in the course of the performance of his duty. "

If on facts, therefore, it is prima facie found that the act or omission for which the accused was charged had reasonable connection with discharge of his duty then it must be held to be official to which applicability of section 197 of the Code cannot be disputed. " obviously therefore if there is a reasonable connection of act done with discharge of his duty it must be held to be official duty. In the present case what is alleged against the applicant is that although witness Deepak never gave a statement to the police a statement said to be given by him in his name was made part of investigation. Obviously Deepak had not appeared before the investigating officer and he had not recorded any statement of Deepak. The statement said to be that of Deepak is therefore, not a statement and therefore the said statement which is on record can in no case be said to be recorded in discharge of the official duty. In fact this is therefore a case of preparation of false record of investigation and preparation of false record of investigation cannot be a part of the duty and it cannot be said to be done in discharge of the duty. If that is so treated then perhaps a police officer can show the investigation having been carried out even sitting at home.

(6.) THEREFORE, when any false document is prepared by the investigation officer during the course of investigation such an act would not be saved. He can be certainly said to be acting out of bounds and therefore this brings the case out of clutches of section 197. It is different thing when there is wrong exercise or excessive exercise of power and it is a different thing to manipulate a record to save somebody from being punished. In a case reported in Shambhoo Nath Misra vs. State of U. P. and others, AIR 1997 SC 2102, it is held that fabrication of record and misappropriation of public fund by public servant is not the official duty and therefore sanction is not necessary.

(7.) THE learned counsel for the applicant contended that in the complaint itself respondent has pleaded that he has applied for sanction and the same is awaited. It was contended that even the applicant admits that sanction is necessary and now he cannot resile from the same. There cannot be any estoppel against law. If sanction is required it is required. The Court has to look into the question if such sanction is necessary or not if the accused is a public servant. It was contended on behalf of the respondent complainant that this question cannot be considered at the threshold but has to be considered along with the merits of the case. The contention is not correct. In a recent decision of the Supreme Court in Sankaran Moitra vs. Sadhna Das and another, 2006 (1) Mh. L. J. (Cri) (SC) 903 = (2006) 4 SCC 584, it is observed as follows :

"learned counsel for the complainant argued that want of sanction under section 197 (1) of the Code did not affect the jurisdiction of the Court to proceed, but it was only one of the defences available to the accused and the accused can raise the defence at the appropriate time. We are not in a position to accept this submission. Section 197 (1) its opening words and the object sought to be achieved by it, and the decisions of this Court earlier cited, clearly indicate that a prosecution hit by that provision cannot be launched without the sanction contemplated. It is a condition precedent, as it were for a successful prosecution of a public servant when the provision is attracted, though the question may arise necessarily not at the inception, but even at a subsequent stage. We cannot therefore accede to the request to postpone a decision on this question. "
It is thus clear that the question can be decided at the threshold.
(8.) IT was contended on behalf of the applicant that the Court could not take cognizance of the offence after a period of 6 months due to the prohibition contained in section 161 of the Bombay Police Act. Section 161 reads thus : 161. Suits or prosecution in respect of acts done under colour of duty as aforesaid not to be entertained, or to be dismissed if not instituted (within the prescribed period).

(1) In any case of alleged offence by (the Revenue Commissioner, the commissioner), a Magistrate, Police Officer or other person, or of a wrong alleged to have been done by (such Revenue Commissioner, commissioner), Magistrate, Police Officer or other person, by any act done under colour or in excess of any such, duty or authority as aforesaid, or wherein it shall appear to the Court that the offence or wrong if committed or done was of the character aforesaid, the prosecution or suit shall not be entertained, or shall be dismissed, if instituted, more than six months after the date of the act complained of : (Provided that, any such prosecution against a Police Officer may be entertained by the Court, if instituted with the previous sanction of the state Government within two years from the date of the offence.)

In suits as aforesaid one month's notice of suit to be given with sufficient description of wrong complained of (2) In the case of an intended suit on account of such a wrong as aforesaid, the person intending to sue shall be bound to give to the alleged wrong-doer one month's notice at least of the intended suit with sufficient description of the wrong complained of, failing which such suit shall be dismissed. Plaint to set forth service of notice and tender of amends (3) The plaint shall set forth that a notice as aforesaid has been served on the defendant and the date of such service, and shall state whether any, and if any, what tender of amends has been made by the defendant. A copy of the said notice shall be annexed to the plaint endorsed or accompanied with a declaration by the plaintiff of the time and manner of service thereof.

This section to my mind does not apply at all since it is found that the offence is not committed in discharge of the official duty or purported discharge of the official duty. It is only if the action is required to be taken for offence committed in discharge of duty or purported discharge of the duty that the section would apply. Hence I do not find any substance in the revision. It is dismissed. Magistrate shall now proceed to try the accused.

A] Penal Code section 201,218,468 – Prosecution of police Officer – Preparation of incorrect and forged record of investigation of the case with the fraudulent and dishonest intention of misleading his superior officers and inducing them to do or omit to do the legal and lawful actions – Held – The accused police officer framed the record in a manner which he knews to be incorrect with intent to save or knowing to be likely that he will thereby save the true offender from legal punishment is liable to be punished u.s 218/ 468 of I.P.C. – The Co-accused who facilitated and intentionally aided in preparation of the false and forged record is also liable to be convicted

B] The position of accused A-2 was very different. He was a Police officer and as such was expected to discharge the duties entrusted to him by law with fidelity and accuracy. He was required to ascertain the cause of the death and to investigate the circumstances and the manner in which it was brought about. His duty was to make honest efforts to reach at the truth. But he flagrantly abused the trust reposed in him by law. He intentionally fabricated false clues. laid false trails, drew many red herring across the net smothered the truth, burked the inquest, falsified official records and shortcircuited the procedural safeguards. In short, he did everything against public justice which is by Section 201, Penal Code. The other circumstantial evidence apart the series of these designed acts of omission and commission on the part of A-2, were eloquent enough to indicate in no uncertain terms that A-2 knew or had reasons to believe that Kalarani's death was homicidal.

R.S. SARKARIA

(1.) This appeal is directed against a judgment of High Court of Andhra Pradesh, converting appeal by the State - the acquittal of the appellant into conviction. Appellant No. 1(for short. A-1) was an arrack contractor doing liquor business inter alia within the territorial jurisdiction of Police Station Indukurpet, District Nellore, while Appellant No. 2 (for short, A-2) was a Sub-Inspector of Police in charge of this Police Station.

(2.) The appellants and one other person were tried by the First Additional Sessions Judge Nellore on charges under Sections 120-B. 366, 376,302/34, 201. 218. 468/34, 324, Penal Code relating to the abduction rape and murder etc. of two sisters, named Kalarani and Chandrika Rani of Nellore. The Sessions Judge acquitted the three accused of all the charges. Against the acquittal of the appellants only the State preferred an appeal. The High Court partly allowed the appeal, set aside the acquittal on charges 7, 8, 9 and 11 and convicted A-2 and A-1 under Sections 201, 201, /34, Penal Code and sentenced each of of them to five years rigorous imprisonment.A-2 and A-1 were further convicted under Sections 318 (sic) (S. 218?) and 318/109. (sic) (218/109?). Penal Code and sentenced to two years rigorous imprisonment each. They were also convicted under Sections 468 and 468/34, Penal Code and sentenced to two years rigorous imprisonment each. The sentences on all the counts were directed to run concurrently. Their acquittal on the remaining charges, including those of abduction, rape and murder was upheld.

(3.) The facts of the prosecution case as they emerge from the record are as follows: Kalarani and Chandrikarani deceased were two of the Six daughters of P.W.1, a legal practitioner of Nellore, Kalarani was aged 21 and a graduate from the local Women's College, Nellore. She used to be the President of the College Union and as such was well known. Chandrika Rani was, aged 17 and a B. A. student in that very college. On 6-6-1971 in the morning the deceased girls along with their parents and other sisters attended a marriage in the house of a family -friend (Prosecution witness 2). In the afternoon they went away from the marriage house saying that they were going out to have coca-cola. At about 4 p. m. they boarded a bus bound for My paud which is a seashore resort at a distance of 11 miles from Nellore. At about 5-40 p. m. they were seen alighting from the bus at Mypaud and then proceeding towards Sagarvilla, a Travellers' Bunglow situated near the seashore. They were last seen at about 6-30 p. m. on the seashore by P. Ws. 11, 12, 13 and 14. Shortly thereafter, Prosecution witness 18, a rickshaw puller was attracted to the seashore by the outcry of a woman. When he proceeded in that direction, Chandrika Rani came running to him for help. Prosecution witness 18 saw 4 persons, including A-1 and A-2 carrying away Kala Rani who was groaning. On seeing Prosecution witness 18, A-1 and A-2 turned on him. A-1 first slapped and then stabbed Prosecution witness 18 on his right arm with a penknife, while A-2 gave blows on his back. Out of fright, Prosecution witness 18 took to his heels while Chandrika Rani was draggqd away by the appellants.

(4.) On 6-6-1971 Chamundeshwari Festival was being celebrated in Gangapatnam and neighbouring areas at about 9 p. m. It was bright moonlight. On learning that the dead body of a girl had been seen on the beach of Pallipalem which is a hamlet of Gangapatnam, many persons went there. Prosecution witness 23, a fisherman of Pallipalem and Prosecution witness 2, an employee of Electricity Department were also among those persons. It was the body of a girl, aged about 21 or 22 years, of fair complexion and stout build. Blood was oozing from a reddish abrasion on the forehead. There was a gold ring with a red stone on the finger of the body. Next morning, P.W.23 went to Prosecution witness 26, the Sarpanch of Gangapatnam and informed the latter about the corpse on the seashore. Prosecution witness 23 and Prosecution witness 26 then went to the village Karnam (Prosecution witness 27) as they found the village Munsiff absent. The Karnam scribed a report to the dictation of Prosecution witness 23. The Sarpanch signed it and sent it at about 7-30 a. m. through a bus driver (Prosecution witness 29) to the Police Station Indukurpet. The report was handed over in the Police Station at about 8-30 a. m. to the Head Constable (Prosecution witness 34), as A-2, the Sub-Inspector was away. The Head Constable (Prosecution witness 34), read the report and returned it to Prosecution witness 29 with the objection that the bearer should fetch a report drawn up on the printed form and signed by the village Munsiff. Within a few minutes of the return of the report, between 8-30 and 8-45 a.m., A-2 returned to the Police Station. Just at this juncture Prosecution witness 49 a Personal Assistant to P.W.38, a cine actor of Madras, and A-1, arrived there in Car No. M. S. V. 1539, driven by a motor driver. The car had met an accident on the 4th June within the jurisdiction of this Police Station. The car was therefore - at least theoretically - in the custody of the Police.

(5.) A-1 was a mutual friend of A-2 and of the owner of the car. Prosecution witness 49 therefore, had brought A-1 to the Police Station to help the former in getting the car released. A-1 introduced Prosecution witness 49 to A-2. A-1 then asked A-2 if he knew that the dead body of a girl was found floating on the sea-shore. A-2 then asked the ' Head Constable (Prosecution witness 34) if any report regarding the dead body was received. The Head Constable replied that a report from the Sarpanch about the dead body seen on the seashore at Pallipalem had been received but had been returned, as it was not from the village Munsiff. A-2 said some person might have been drowned as it usually happened on the seashore; The Head Constable and A-1 told A-2 that the body found on the shore was said to have been wearing drawers and might be of a person of high-class family. A-2 said that he himself would go and enquire about it. A-2 asked Prosecution witness 4 to take him in his car to the spot. Thereupon, A-1, A-2, Prosecution witness 49, two constables and two others in addition to the driver, proceeded in the car. After going some distance, the two "others" got down. A-1 and A-2 had a talk with them. The car was then taken to Ramudupalem. There at about 11.30 A. M. A-1 and A-2 met the Sarpanch (Prosecution witness 26) and, asked him to follow them to Pallipalem. The car was then taken to Gangapgtnam. There the Constables were dropped. They left a message for the Karnam of the village to reach Pallipalem. Thereafter, they proceeded to the sea-shore of Pallipalem. The car was left at the canal before the sea.

(6.) A-2, A-1, Prosecution witness 49 and Prosecution witness 26 then at about Noon, went to the beach where the dead body lay. Prosecution witness 23 and Prosecution witness 25 were guarding the dead body. It was the body of a fair, stout girl aged about 20 years, who was wearing brassiers, blouse, striped drawers and a white petticoat. Prosecution witness 23 handed over the ring M. O. 9 to A-2 after removing the same from the body. On being directed by A-2, Prosecution witness 23 washed the face of the corpse. There was a mark on the forehead from which blood was oozing out. There was a reddish abrasion on the thigh, and blood marks on the drawer of the dead body. On seeing the blood marks on the drawer, A-2 said that she might be in menses, A-2 further remarked that the body appeared to be of a girl from a high class family who had been out of doors. A-2 did not hold any inquest there on the dead body. He did not prepare any record there, He directed the village vettis (menials) to bury the dead body forthwith while he himself proceeded along with his companions towards the village. In the distance they saw the Constables coming towards them. A signaled them not to come near the dead body but to proceed to the Travellers' Bungalow at Mypad, while A-2 and Party went to Mahalaxamma Temple in village Pallipalem, There A-2 secured the signatures of Prosecution witness 25. Prosecution witness 26. Prosecution witness 28 and A-1 on a blank sheet of paper. A-2 and his companions then went to the car. The Karnam (Prosecution witness 27) was there, A-2 reproached the Karnam for coming late and added that he had finished all the work for which he (Karnam) had been sent for. He further told the Karnam that he had got the body buried. The Karnam asked as to why A-2 did not send the body for post-mortem examination. A-2 replied that the body was of a prostitute who had committed suicide and that he did not suspect any foul play and so he ordered burial. The Karnam then enquired if any relation of the deceased had come. A-1 replied: "yes", while A-2 pointed towards Prosecution witness 49 and said that he was the person connected with the deceased. A-1, A-2. Prosecution witness 26. Prosecution witness 27 and Prosecution witness 49 then got into the car and proceeded. P. Ws. 26-and 27 were dropped near their houses. On the way. Prosecution witness 49 asked A-2 as to why he had represented him (Prosecution witness 49) as a relation of the deceased. A-2 assured Prosecution witness 49 that there was nothing to worry.

(7.) According to the prosecution this dead body found ashore near Pallipalem - which is about 2 miles from Mypad - was of Kala Rani deceased who was well-known to A-2. In spite of it, in the inquest report (Ex. P-11) which was not prepared on the spot but sometime later. A-2 wrote that the body was of a prostitute, named Koppolo Vijaya, daughter of Chandrayya. Baliya by caste of Ongole Town who had on 6-6-1971, come to Mypad alone with her prostitute friend Nirmala by Bus A. P. N.1400 at 5.45 P. M. and thereafter both these girls committed suicide by entering sea at about 6-30 P. M. A-2 ended the report with an emphatic note:

"It is conclusive that the deceased (Koppulu Vijaya) died due to drowning." Despite the presence of injuries noticed on the dead body A-2 recorded: "There are no injuries on the dead body."

In order to support his version as to the cause of death A-2, according to the prosecution falsely noted that the "stomach is bloated due to drinking of water."

(8.) The prosecution case further is that A-2 fabricated sometime after the burial of the dead body, a false report (Ex. P-25) purporting to have been made to him on 7-6-1971 by one Nuthalapati Subba Rao who despite the best efforts of the investigators has remained untraced and is believed to be a fictitious person. As this report has an important bearing on the points for determination, we will reproduce it in extenso:

"Statement of Nuthalapati Subbarao, son of Venkateswarlu, aged about 30 years. Vysya of Patha-Guntur:
"Being an orphan for about 10 years. I have been doing brokerage in supplying extras in the cine field. Day before yesterday i. e. on Friday at Chirala near Lodges two girls Koppulu Vijaya d/o Sundarayya of Ongole and Paranjapi Nirmala d/o Raghavayya of Chilekaluripeta were met by me. I came to know that they live by prostitution. When I told them that I would join them in Cinema they believed me and came with me. On Sunday i.e. on 6-6-1971, in the morning we came to Nellore and stayed in Venkateswara Lodge till 3.30 p.m. There demand came for the girls. I booked two males for these two girls. Afterwards dispute arose between me and the girls in respect of my brokerage, sharing of the money got by such prostitution out of the money collected. They scolded me in an angry tone and went away crying and weeping and saying that I took them away from their places promising to join them in Cinema, cheated them and committed rowdyism without giving them money due to them. They had only wearing apparel with them. Vijaya is short, stout and fair. Nirmala is lean, tall and fair. They did not come back. I waited for a long time. I searched for them at the railway station, bus stand and lodges. When I was inquiring at Atmakur Bus Stand I came to know that the girls went by Mypaud bus at 4.30 p. m. I went to Mypaud and enquired. It was learnt that the two girls went towards north of Pattapulalem and entered the sea at 6 p.m. Having learnt that the body of Vijaya was washed ashore I went and saw the dead body. She had died and appears to have committed suicide. It was also learnt that the second girl also committed suicide but her dead body was not washed ashore. Other facts about them are not known.

(9.) The dead-body of the other girl Chandrika Rani was not washed ashore. But in the morning of 7-6-1971, Prosecution witness 38. fisherman saw the dead body of a girl aged 16 or 17 years floating in the sea at a distance of about 21/2 or 3 miles from Pallipalem. Prosecution witness 36 saw a piercing wound on the left arm and black marks, indicating throttling on the neck of the dead body. Prosecution witness 36 removed a wrist watch, ring and an ear-ring from the dead body and allowed it to drift away. These articles were later handed over by Prosecution witness 36 to the Investigating Officer and were identified to be of Chandrika Rani
(10.) The disappearance of the deceased girls caused a sensation. The local newspapers took up the matter. Representations were made to the Home Minister to get the matter investigated by the C. I. D. The Superintendent of Police directed Prosecution witness 59, a Probationer D.S.P., to investigate the matter. On 18-6-1971, at the request of Prosecution witness 59. the Tehsildar (P. W, 40) proceeded to exhume the deadbody of Kalarani. The place was pointed out by Prosecution witness 33. A-2 was also present there. On digging the pit only some clothes were found in it. But close to it, was found a skeleton, No marks of violence were detected on the skeleton by the Medical Officer, P, W. 45, who examined it at the spot, The skeleton was sent to Prosecution witness 44. Professor of Forensic Medicine, who opined that it was of a female aged between 18 to 25 years, Further investigation of the case was taken over by Prosecution witness 60, the C. I. D. Inspector who, after completing it laid the charge-sheet against A-1, A-2 and one other person in the Court of the Magistrate.

(11.) A-1 pleaded that he had been falsely implicated. He stated that he knew nothing about the deceased girls. He added that on 7-6-1971, he was in the Travellers' Bungalow at Mypad and went away from that place in the afternoon. He admitted that he had accompanied Prosecution witness 49, to the Police Station on 7-6-1971 to assist the latter in getting the car released, and from the Police Station both of them (A-1 and Prosecution witness 49) on being asked by A-2. went with the latter in the car to the spot, He further admitted that he had slab-signed on a sheet of paper like others but he expressed ignorance if any inquest was held by A-2.

(12.) The plea of A-2 was that he had duly made an inquiry as to the cause of the death and prepared the inquest report Ex. P-11. He denied that there were injuries on the dead body. Pleading alibi for the 5th and 6/06/1971, he said that on these dates he was away on casual leave to attend the marriage of a cousin at Chirala which is at a distance of about 100 miles from Indukurpet .He said that he had proceeded to Chirala in a car on the 5 th morning, and after attending the marriage returned to Nellore on the 6th by 5-30 p.m. and then on the morning of the 7th June, resumed duty at Indukurpet Police Station. On receiving information about the corpse of a female washed ashore, he went to Mypad and enquired about a person named Nathelapati Subba Rao. The latter gave the information. Ex.. P-25, which he (A-2) reduced into writing and then held the inquest in the presence of this Subba Rao and other Panchitdars at the spot. He did not know if Vijaya and Nirmala mentioned in Ex. P-25 and Ex. P- 11 were fictitious persons. He further admitted that he was unable to produce this Subba Rao in response to the memo dated 15-6-1971, issued by the D. S. P. (Prosecution witness 59) during the stipulated time of 48 hours.

(13.) The Additional Sessions judge held that the dead bodies found floating near the sea shore were of Kala Rani and Chandrika Rani. He further found that P. W.18, who claimed to be an eye-witness of the occurrence, was not worthy of credit and consequently the charges of abduction, rape and murder had not been proved against the accused . Regarding the charge under S. 201. Penal Code.,the trial Judge held that the prosecution had failed to prove that an offence had been committed in respect of the deceased, while holding that the identity of the deceased was wrongly mentioned in Ex. P-25 and Ex, P-11 as Vijaya and Nirmala, prostitutes, he did not rule out the possibility of suicide. In the result, he acquitted the accused of all the charges. In appeal by the State, the learned Judge of the High Court, after an exhaustive survey of the evidence, upheld the acquittal of the accused in respect of the charges of abduction, rape and murder, but reversed the findings of the trial Judge in regard to the charges under Sections 201, 318 and 468. Penal Code against A-1 and A-2.

(14.) In order to bring home an offence under Section 201. Penal Code the prosecution has to prove:

(1) that an offence has been committed:

(2) that the accused knew or had reason to believe the commission of such offence;

(3) that with such knowledge or belief he

(a) caused any evidence of the commission of that offence to disappear, or

(b) gave any information respecting that offence which he then knew or believed to be false:
(4) that he did so as aforesaid, with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment.
(5) If the charge be of an aggravated from as in the present case, it must be proved further that the offence in respect of which the accused did as in (3) and (4). was punishable with death, or with imprisonment for life or imprisonment extending to ten years.
(15.) The High court has found that all these ingredients of Section 201, were established in the present case.
(16.) Mr. Bassi Reddy, learned Counsel for the appellant assails the finding of the High Court with particular reference to the first and the last ingredients enumerated above. Counsel contends that the conviction under Section 201, cannot be sustained as there is no credible evidence on record to show that an offence had been committed. It is maintained that the prosecution has been unable to prove that the two girls met a homicidal death. In all probability proceeds the argument, the deceased girls committed suicide by jumping into the sea and were drowned. '
(17.) For reasons that follow we are unable to accept these contentions.
(18.) The concurrent finding of the Courts below that the dead body washed ashore near Pallipalem was of Kala Rani deceased and that seen floating in the sea two miles away was of Chandrika Rani deceased, has not been disputed before us. It is also not controverted that these two girls died an unnatural death on the night between the 6th and 7th of June, 1971 sometime after 6-30 P. M. at Mypad. Only the cause of their death is in issue. In regard to such cause, there could be only three possibilities, the choice of any of which would lead to the exclusion of the other two. First the girls committed suicide by drowning. Second that their deaths were accidental. Third, that they were done to death by some person or persons.
(19.) After a careful consideration of these alternatives in the light of evidence on record, the learned Judges of the High Court firmly ruled out the first and the second possibilities, and concluded in favour of the third.
(20.) In our opinion the credible circumstantial evidence on record reinforced by the inferences available from the incriminating conduct of the appellants, particularly of A-2 in deliberately preparing false records to suppress the identity and cause of the deaths of the deceased girls. fully justifies the conclusion reached by the learned Judges. We therefore, do not feel the necessity of embarking upon a reappraisal of the entire evidence. It would be sufficient to survey and consider the salient circumstances bearing on the alternatives posed above.
(21.) First, we lake up the possibility of suicide. Mr. Reddy submits with reference to the, statement of Prosecution witness 1, the father of the deceased girls, that on a previous occasion both these girls had without the permission of their parents run away from home and were ultimately traced to the Rescue Home in Madras: that Kala Rani deceased had about 4 or 5 years before the occurrence taken an overdose of tranquillizers presumably to end her life: that they did not feel happy in their parental home hand once attempted to join the Ashram. This background, according to the learned counsel, shows that the deceased had a predisposition to commit suicide. In the alternative, suggests Mr. Reddy. something might have happened at Mypad on the 6/06/1971 which impelled them to commit suicide. Might be the girls got themselves into such a situation that they thought suicide was the only course left to them to get out of the same.
(22.) We are not impressed by these arguments. It is wrong to assume that these girls were very unhappy in their paternal house, or their relations with their parents were estranged. Kala Rani, particularly was a mature graduate girl of 22 years. She used to be the leader of the College Union. On the day of occurrence, the deceased girls alone with their parents and sisters had participated in the festivities of a marriage in the house of a family friend. They took their meals in the marriage house. From Nellore, these girls brought change of clothes for two or three days stay. Thereafter they came happily to Mypad. They first went to the Travellers' Bungalow and were then last seen together at about 6-30 p.m. on the sea-shore. It is in evidence that the evening of the 6th June, was an occasion of Channdamma Festival. Procession of the deity accompanied by festivities was being taken out by the devotees of the neighbouring villages. These circumstances unmistakably show that the deceased girls had come to enjoy and stay at the sea-side resort of Mypad for 2 or 3 days. They were not suffering from any mental depression or schizophrenia with suicidal tendencies.

(23.) Another circumstance in the case of Kala Rani which is contra-indicative of suicide is that her dead body though seen within an hour or two of the occurrence on the beach was in a semi-nude condition. The sari was not on her dead body, which she was wearing when last seen at about 6-30 P. M. It can be argued that the Sari was washed off her body by the sea-waves. But considering that her dead body was detected only within a couple of hours of the occurrence and the fact that it is customary for women living in or near the coastal towns to tie their saries tightly the possibility of the sari having been swept off by the sea-waves was remote. The inference is that in all probability she was not wearing this sari when her body was immersed in water. Ordinarily, no Indian woman would commit suicide by jumping into the sea by getting into such a near-nude condition and thereby expose her body to the risk of post-mortem indignity.

(24.) Another important circumstance which militates against the suggestion of the death of Kala Rani from drowning is that when the body was first seen at 9 P. M., its stomach was not in a bloated condition; nor was any froth seen coming out of the mouth of the corpse. The fact was vouched by Prosecution witness 23. a fisherman, who was rightly found worthy of credence by the High Court. It may be added that contrary to what Prosecution witness 23 has testified A-2 has in the inquest report said that the stomach was bloated with water and froth was coming out of the mouth. But as shall be presently discussed, these notes regarding the condition of the dead body were invented by A-2 to support his false report that the deceased had committed suicide and her death was from drowning. Medical jurisprudence tells us that in a case of death from drowning the stomach is ordinarily found bloated with air and water which is instinctively swallowed by the drowning person during the struggle for life (see Taylor's Medical Jurisprudence, 12th Edn. Vol. I pp. 374-375).

(25.) The facts that the stomach was not filled with water and bloated and no froth was coming out of the mouth of the deceased, are important symptoms which go a long way to exclude the possibility of death being as a result of suicide by drowning.

(26.) Then there were injuries and blood-marks on the dead body. P. Ws. 23. 25, 26 and 27, all testified with one voice that they had seen one injury, from which blood was oozing out on the forehead, another on the thigh and blood marks on the drawer (under-garment) of the deceased. In examination-in-chief even Prosecution witness 49. who in cross-examination tried to dilute his version in a possible attempt to favour A-2, stated that he had seen a reddish strain (stain ?) on the forehead and blood marks on the drawer of the deceased. Out of these P. Ws. 23, 25 and 26 were present near the dead body when A-2, accompanied by A-1 and Prosecution witness 49, went there to hold the pretence of an inquest. Prosecution witness 23 was a fisherman of Pallipalem. Prosecution witness 25 was also a resident of the same hamlet. He was an employee of the Electricity Department. Prosecution witness 27 was the Karnam of Gangapatnam. P. Ws. 23 and 25 were among those villagers who had seen the dead body washed ashore at about 9 P. M, on 6-6-l971. The High Court found that the version of these witnesses in regard to the injuries and blood-marks on the dead body was entirely reliable. No reason has been shown why we should take a different view of their evidence.

(27.) It is further in the evidence of P. Ws. 23. 25. 26 and 49 that when the blood-marks on the drawer were pointed out to A-2, the latter ignored it saying that the girl had been out of doors and was in menstruation. Contrary to what he and the P. Ws, had observed at the spot. A-2 wrote in the inquest report, P-11 Col. VII : "There are no injuries on the dead body."

(28.) Having excluded the possibility of suicide. we may now consider, whether the deaths of these girls were accidental. It is nobody's case that on the 6/06/1971, any sea-craft, vessel or boat met with an accident off or near about Mypad resulting in loss of human life. No suggestion of accidental death of any person, much less a woman, off/or on the sea-shore near or far from Pallipalem was put to any of the prosecution witnesses. Nor such a plea has been put forward by the accused in their statements recorded under Section 342. Code of Criminal Procedure Indeed, the learned Counsel for the appellants has not pursued any such line of argument. We have, therefore, no hesitation in negating the possibility of accidental death.

(29.) This process of elimination inevitably leads us to the conclusion that in all probability the death of these girls, at any rate of Kala Rani was due to culpable homicide.

(30.) Now we come to the last but the most telling circumstance which not only confirms this conclusion and puts it beyond doubt, but also unerringly establishes, by inference, the other ingredients of the offence, including that the accused knew or had reason to believe that culpable homicide of Kala Rani had been committed. This circumstance is the conduct of A-2, in intentionally preparing false records and its abetment by A-1.

(31.) From its very start the investigation conducted by A-2 was dishonest and fraudulent. He intentionally indulged in suppressio veri and suggestio falsi at every step. He had been informed by the Head Constable (Prosecution witness 34) at about 8 or 8-45 A.M. in the Police Station that a report from the Sarpanch had been received about the dead body of a girl bearing injuries, found washed ashore near Pallipalem. This information which was passed on to A-2 and on receiving which he proceeded from the Police Station for investigation, was the real F. I. R. It was the duty of A-2 to enter faithfully and truly the substance of this information in the Station Diary and to record further that he was proceeding for investigation on the basis thereof. Instead of doing so, he intentionally suppressed the factum and substance of this first information and the real purpose of his departure from the Police Station in the records prepared by him or by his subordinates in his immediate presence or under his supervision. Instead of retrieving the written report that had been first received at 8 A. M. in the Police Station and was returned by the Head Constable to the Sarpach. he fabricated the document Exhibit P-25, purporting to be the First Information Report given to him at Mypad by one N. Subba Rao. The false story contained in this document has been substantially revealed in the inquest report, Ex. P-25.

(32.) P. Ws. 23. 25. 27 and 49 discount the presence of any such person named N. Subba Rao either at the inspection of the dead body in the sea-shore by A-2 or at the Temple, where according to A-2, he prepared the inquest report. None of these P. Ws, has sworn that a statement of any N. Subba Rao was recorded in their presence, by A-2. No specific question was put by the defence to P.W.49 in cross-examination to establish that the report Ex. P-25 was scribed by A-2 at Mypad at about 11.30, to the dictation of N. Subba Rao or any other person, although the witness was generally questioned as to the number of persons carried in the car. Prosecution witness 27. the Karnam has definitely excluded the presence of any informant named Subba Rao. Prosecution witness 27 testified that after the inquest. A-1. A-2. P.W.26 and "a new person" implying P.W.49, met him and thereafter all the five (including Prosecution witness 27) got into the car and proceeded to the village. Prosecution witness 27 did not vouch the presence of a sixth man in the car. Only Prosecution witness 26 has stated that A-2 had recorded the statements of witnesses, including that of a person named N. Subba Rao. Prosecution witness 26 had reason to tell a lie on this point. Prosecution witness 26 admitted that at the time of the inquest, he was an accused in a criminal case of Indukurpet Police Station. A-2 was at the material time In-charge of that Police Station and was presumably concerned with the investigation of that case against Prosecution witness 26. Prosecution witness 26 therefore, appears to have deviated from truth in regard to the presence of N. Subba Rao, under the influence of the accused. In any case the evidence of Prosecution witness 26 on this point stands contradicted by the reliable testimony of P. Ws. 23, 25, 27 and 49.

(33.) In the inquest report, as also in Ex. P-25, the address of this mysterious person is recorded as "Nuthalapatti Subba Rao son of Venkateswarlu. aged about 37 Years. Vysya of Patha Guntur." Despite efforts, the Investigating Officers. P. Ws. 59 and 60, could not trace on the basis of this address any person bearing the said particulars at Pata Guntur or anywhere else in the District. In response to the memo issued by the D. S. P. (Prosecution witness 59) A-2 could neither produce this N. Subba Rao. nor give any indication about his existence though A-2 claimed to have known him . For these reasons, the High Court was right in holding that this Nathalapatti Subba Rao was a fictitious person of A-2's imagination. Similarly, during investigation all efforts made by P. Ws. 59 And 60 to trace and find if Vijaya and Nirmala prostitutes, represented in Ex. P-25 and Ex. P-11 as the deceased persons ever existed in flesh and blood, remained futile. In these premises the High Court was right in concluding that Vijaya and Nirmala prostitutes were also the coinage of the brain of A-2.

(34.) It is necessary to say something more about Ex. P-25 because the entire story was spun around it by A-2. It did not see the light of the day till the 11th June. A-2 did not send it to the Police Station for registration before that date. It is in the evidence of Prosecution witness 55, who at the material time was a Head Constable posted in this Police Station, that after his departure on the morning of the 7th, A-2 returned to the Police Station on the 10th evening and it was then that he handed over this document to the witness with the direction that the latter should enter that report in the relevant register, dating it as the 7/06/1971. The Head Constable after slight hesitation agreed and inserted this report in the blank space meant for the entries of the 7th June, and thereafter as required by A-2 handed over to the latter, a copy of that report. A-2 also made an entry (Exhibit P-34) in the General Diary of the Police Station, dated 10-6-1971 on 11-6-l971 at 2 A.M. It reads :

"Returned to P. S. after leaving it on 7-6-1971 at 9-30 a.m, visited Mypadu enroute to Gangapatnam at 11-00 hours at 11-30 a.m, recorded statement of N. Subba Rao, sent to Police Station for issuing First Information Report under S. 174, Cr. P. C. then visited Pallipalem at 12-30 p.m investigated, held inquest over dead body of K. Vijaya. At 20-30 p.m. left village reached Mypadu at 21-30 hours, made enquiries in Cr. 48/71 and halted. On 8-6-1971 visited Gangapatnam detailed duties for bandobust and united Ravur, investigated into Cr. 47/71, visited Nellore at 12-30 hours, did bandobust for festival and halted for the night. On 9-6-l97l visited Mypadu for petition enquiry and investigated into Cr. 48/71 41. 42 and 44/71 and halted. On 10-6-1971 visited Gangapatnam, supervised and did bandobust for car festival at 00-30 hours, received First Information Reports in Cr. 49 to 51/71 at 00-45 hours. left the village with men and reached Police Station."

(35.) A mere glance at this report betrays its falsity. This shows how in his anxiety to suppress the truth he tried to reinforce and cover up one falsehood with another. In this connection, it may be noted that the D. S. P. persistently pressed A-2 to send the copies of the F. I. R. and the Inquest Report. A-2 was unable to supply any copy of the F. I. R before the 12th of June, when the D.S. P. himself came to the Police Station and collected it. The D.S.P. (Prosecution witness 591 testified that on the 11/06/1971, he had questioned A-2 about the first Information Report and the inquest report. As a result he received a copy of the F. I.R. on the 12th but did not receive any copy of the inquest report. Consequently on 14-6-1971, he telephoned to A-2 to send the case diaries and inquest report without further delay. Despite these efforts the D. S. P. did not receive those records on that day. On 15-6-1971, he issued a memo. to A-2 directing the latter to produce immediately the complaint of N. Subba Rao, the inquest report and the case diaries. It was only then that A-2 produced the persistently requisitioned records.

(36.) These inordinate delays in sending the records prepared by A-2, confirm the testimony of P. Ws. 23, 25 and 49 that no inquest on the dead body was held at the spot, nor was the inquest report or any other record prepared there and then and that their signatures were obtained by A-2 on a blank sheet of paper. Of course Prosecution witness 26 stated that A-2 had recorded statements of witnesses and had prepared the inquest report at the Temple. As already noticed it is not prudent to accept this version of Prosecution witness 26. He had a motive to favour A-2. Moreover his version stands inferentially falsified by the circumstances, including the unusual delay in registering the report Exhibit P-25 in the Police Station and in sending the copies of the records to the D.S. P.

(37.) Section 174, Code of Criminal Procedure peremptorily requires that the officer holding an inquest on a dead body should do so at the spot. This mandate is conveyed by the word "there" occurring in Section 174 (1). Sub-section (3) of the Section further requires the Officer holding the inquest to forward the body with a view to its being examined, by the medical man appointed by the State Government in this behalf if the State of the weather and the distance admit of its being so forwarded without risk of such putrefaction on the road as would render such examination useless. The sub-section gives a discretion to the Police Officer not to send the body for post-mortem examination by the medical officer only in one case, namely, where there can be no doubt as to the cause of the death. This discretion however is to be exercised prudently and honestly. Could it be said in the circumstances of the case, that there was no doubt as to the death of Kala Rani being from drowning ?

(38.) In this connection it is important to note that Kala Rani was not a total stranger to A-2. It is in evidence that A-2 used to go to Nellore for Bandobust and there he had had sufficient opportunity to come across Kala Rani who was a prominent student-leader. The testimony of Prosecution witness 47 is to the effect that when on 17-7-1971, A-2 came to him and requested the witness to dissuade the father of the deceased from getting the dead body exhumed, he (A-2) admitted that Kala Rani deceased was wellknown to him.

(39.) The body was not in an unidentifiable condition. A-2 therefore could be under no mistake that it was the body of Kalarani deceased, particularly when he inspected it after its face had been washed by Prosecution witness 23 under the orders of A-2. Despite such knowledge, he laid a false trail and prepared false record mentioning that the dead body was of a prostitute named Vijaya.

(40.) Medical jurists have warned that in the case of a dead body found floating in water, the medical man from a mere observance of the external condition of the body, should not jump to the conclusion that the death was from drowning. Only internal examination of the body can reveal symptoms which may indicate with certainty as to whether the death was from drowning or from unlawful violence before the body was immersed in water. This is what Taylor, the renowned medical jurist has said on the point:

"When a dead body is thrown into the water, and has remained there sometime water,fine particles of sand, mud weeds etc, may pass through the windpipe into the large air-tubes. In these circumstances, however, water rarely penetrates into the smaller bronchi and alveoli as it may by aspiration and even the amount which passes through the glottis is small. If immersed after death the water is found only in the larger airtubes and is unaccompanied by mucous froth .Water with suspended matters can penetrate even to the distant air-tubes in the very smallest quantity, even when not actively inhaled by respiratory efforts during life. The quality or nature of the suspended matter may be of critical importance, When decomposition is advanced the lungs may be so putrefied as to preclude any opinion as to drowning but the demonstration of diatoms in distant parts of the body inaccessible except to circulatory blood, provides strong evidence of immersion in life if not of death from drowning." (emphasis supplied)
(41.) A-2 was a Police Officer of standing and experience. He knew the deceased. He saw injuries on her dead body. He must have known - if he were honest - that in the circumstances of the case autopsy of the dead body by a medical officer was a must to ascertain the cause of her death. Instead of sending the dead body for post-mortem examination he in indecent haste purposely got it buried without holding any inquest at the spot. He did not send for the relations of the deceased. Even a layman like the Karnam (Prosecution witness 27) felt something strangely amiss in this conduct of A-2. In response to the queries made by the Karnam, A-2 made false excuses. He intentionally misrepresented (in concert with A-1) that Prosecution witness 49 was a relation of the deceased. He flouted all the salutary requirements of Section 174, Code of Criminal Procedure A-2's conduct in distorting and suppressing material evidence and in preparing false records (Exs. P-11 and P-25) as to the identity of the dead body the cause of the death and the falsification of the data bearing on that cause could not be explained on any reasonable hypothesis save that of his guilt. The circumstances established in this case unmistakably and irresistibly point to the conclusion that within all human probability accused No. 2 knew or had reasons to believe that Kala Rani had been done to death by some person or person . All the elements of the charge under Section 201 had thus been proved to the hilt against him.
(42.) Before considering the case of A-1, we may notice here the decision of this Court in Palvinder Kaur v. State of Punjab, 1953 SCR 94 = (AIR 1952 SC 354 = 1953 Cri LJ 154). This decision was cited by the learned Counsel for the appellants in support of his argument that the circumstances: that the deceased died, that the appellant prepared false record regarding the cause of her death or caused post-haste disposal of the dead body without any autopsy or its identification by the relations of the deceased, do not establish the cause of Kalarani's death or the manlier and the circumstances in which it came about. Counsel laid particular stress on the observation of this Court in that case that in cases depending on circumstantial evidence Courts should safeguard themselves against the danger of basing their conclusions on suspicions howsoever strong.
(43.) The decision in Palvinder Kaur's case, (AIR 1952 SC 354 1953 CH LJ 154) (supra) is a precedent on its own facts. The observations of this Court to the effect, that "Jaspal died, that his body was found in a trunk and was discovered from a well and that the appellant took part in the disposal of the body do not establish the cause of his death or the manner and circumstances in which it came about" cannot be construed as an enunciation of a rule of law of application. Whether the cicumstantial evidence in a particular case is and safe enough to warrant a finding an offence has been committed, is a question which belongs to the realm of and not of law. So is the question whether the accused knew or had reasons believe that such an offence has committed. It is true that this further depends on an assessment of accused's mind. Nevertheless, it is question of fact. "The state of a man's mind," quoth Lord Bowen. "is as a fact as the state of his digestion," (44.) In Palvinder Kaur's case (AIR 1952 SC 354 = 1953 Cri LJ 1541 (supra) there was, in the first place, no material direct or indirect, justifying a finding that the death of Jaspal was caused by the administration of potassium cyanide and it the defence version was believed his death would be the result of an accident If that version was disbelieved then there was absolutely no proof of the cause of his death. In the method and the manner in which the dead body of Jaspal was dealt with and disposed of by the accused did rake some suspicion but from these facts, the Court found it unsafe to draw a positive conclusion that he necessarily died an unnatural death. Nor could the possibility of the commission of suicide by Jaspal be totally ruled out.

(45.) The position of A-2 in the present case was very different. He was a Police officer and as such was expected to discharge the duties entrusted to him by law with fidelity and accuracy. He was required to ascertain the cause of the death and to investigate the circumstances and the manner in which it was brought about. His duty it was to make honest efforts to reach at the truth. But he flagrantly abused the trust reposed in him by law. He intentionally fabricated false clues. laid false trails, drew many a red herring across the net smothered the truth, burked the inquest, falsified official records and shortcircuited the procedural safeguards. In short, he did everything against public justice which is by Section 201, Penal Code. The other circumstantial evidence apart the series of these designed acts of omission and commission on the part of A-2, were eloquent enough to indicate in no uncertain terms that A-2 knew or had reasons to believe that Kalarani's death was homicidal.

(46.) It is not disputed that A-1 was a friend of A-2. It was A-1 who had supported A-2's idea that the latter should himself go to the spot to investigate as the deceased girl appeared to be from a high class family. Standing alone, this circumstance is not of a conclusive tendency. But in the context of his subsequent conduct it assumes significance. He wilfully conducted himself in such a manner that there could be no doubt that he was a guilty associate of A-2. When in the context of the burial of the dead body ordered by A-2 without sending the body for post-mortem, the Karnam (Prosecution witness 27) asked whether any relation of the deceased had come, A-2 pointed towards Prosecution witness 49 saving that he was related to the deceased. Simultaneously. A-I said: "Yes." This concerted conduct of A-1 in fraudulently representing Prosecution witness 49 to be a relation of the deceased,when he knew that Prosecution witness 49 was not such a relation, clearly marks him out as an intentional abettor and a guilty partner in the commission of the offence under S. 201. Penal Code.

(47.) There can be no doubt that on the basis of the facts found, the charges under Sections 218,468,Penal Code had been fully established against the appellant A-2 being a public servant charged with the preparation of official record relating to the investigation of the cause of the death of Kalarani, framed that record in a manner which he knew to be incorrect with intent to save or knowing to be likely that he will thereby save the true offender or offenders from legal punishment. Obviously, he prepared this false and forged record with the fraudulent and dishonest intention of misleading his superior officers and inducing them to do or omit to do anything which they would not do or omit if they were not so deceived or induced. A-1, as discussed already, facilitated and intentionally aided A-2 in the preparation of the false and forded record.

(48.) For the foregoing reasons we uphold the convictions and sentences of the appellants on all the counts, as recorded by the High Court and dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

CASE NOTE : I.P.C. 499, 500 – False entries by Police officer in the enquiry report – Complainant filed complaint at Police station – The Police investigatin Officer send 'B' summary report stating that the complaint was mischivious, vexatious and flase – The said 'B' summary report was challenged before High Court- High Court held that the complaint was not flase and 'B' summary report prepared by the I.O. was not proper – Thereafter the complainant filed complaint u.s. 500 of I.P.C. – The trial Court issued the process against the accused police officer – The order of issue process is challenged on grund of exception embodied in S. 499 – Defence of action done in good faith was taken – Held – No case of exceptions is made out to grant any relief to accused police officer – Proceeding against him not to be quashed.

(1.) SHRI Anil Singh submitted that the petitioner company filed a complaint in D. N. Nagar Police Station against Respondent No. 1 alleging that he committed the theft of articles belonging to and in possession of the said company after investigation, the Investigating officer formed the opinion that it was a mischievous, vexatious and a false complaint and, therefore, he prayed for issuing "b Summary" against the present petitioner. The said prayer and the report was challenged by the petitioner by filing a writ petition in the High Court. It was heard and finally decided. The High Court held that the said complaint was not false, mischievous and vexatious and, therefore, "b Summary" report prepared by the Investigating Officer was not proper. The stamp of false, mischievous and vexatious complaint was expunged. It was directed that it be not treated as "b Summary".

(2.) AFTER this, the present respondent filed complaint in the concerned Court alleging that by such publication in Trade Diary, the petitioner committed the offence of defamation which happens to be punishable in view of provisions of Section 500 of IPC. The Trial Court issued the process against the petitioner in view of provisions of Section 500 of IPC and the challenge is being put to that order by the petitioner by way of this writ petition.

(3.) SHRI Anil Singh submitted that the judgment and order passed by the High Court in Writ Petition No. 639 of 1997 by itself proves that the complaint filed by respondent No. 1 was not entertainable. He submitted that the said publication was in larger interest of the public and was the truthful account of the activities of respondent No. 1. He submitted that the said publication was published by the present petitioner in good faith and for protecting his and others interest and, therefore, keeping in view this aspect of the matter, the trial Court should not have taken the cognizance of the complaint filed by respondent No. 1 and should not have issued the process against the petitioner. He submitted that such order of issuing of the process be quashed.

(4.) SHRI Saste, Additional Public Prosecutor, submitted that the impugned order is correct, proper and legal and the writ petition deserves to be dismissed.

(5.) SECTION 499 of IPC defines the offence of defamation. It provides four explanations, ten exceptions and some illustrations. Shri Singh attempted to bring his case within first, ninth and 10th exceptions. First exception provides that it is not defamation to impute anything which is true concerning any person, if it be for the public good that the imputation should be made or published. It has been provided that whether or not it is for the public good is a question of fact. Ninth exception provides that it is not defamation to make an imputation on the character of another provided that the imputation be made in good faith for the protection of the interests of the person making it or of any other person, or for the public good. The tenth exception provides that it is not defamation to convey a caution, in good faith, to one person against another, provided that such caution be intended for the good of the person to whom it is conveyed, or of some person in whom that person is interested, or for the public good.

(6.) THE judgment and order passed by the High Court in the writ petition quoted supra was revolving around the grant of "b Summary" which would result in a prosecution. There is a difference between issuance of process and the adjudication that filing of a complaint is necessitating the issuance of "b Summary" by the Court. But that does not by itself stamp or vouchsafe its correctness, genuineness or falseness, mischievousness. It by itself would not vouchsafe it to have been made in good faith, made for protecting the interest of oneself or others or published for a cause intended for public good. When a person makes an imputation by words spoken or intended to be read, or by making signs or by visible representation, makes or publishes any imputation concerning any person intending to harm, or knowing or having reason to believe that such imputation will harm, the reputation of such person, is said to defame that person subject to explanations, provided by the section, exceptions and the illustrations given. If the accused in such case wants to raise a plea as indicated by the exceptions he has to make out a case for bringing himself within four corners indicated by those exceptions. He may do it by relying on the averments made in the complaint by which he has been brought in the Court as an accused or by producing material for perusal or the consideration of the Court by himself. He has to raise a plea for bringing his case within four corners of the exceptions. He has to bring it to the notice of the Court that the complainant has not made out the case as indicated by Section 499 or its explanations. Unless he does it, the Court would not be considering his defence suo motu. A plea has to be raised before the trial Court or may be in higher court. But there has to be a case already made or in existence for allowing such person to agitate such points before higher Courts. In the absence of that, the higher Courts would not be able to consider his plea as he wishes to be considered.

(7.) IN the present matter, there is no case made out by the petitioner which would allow him to take the advantage of the limits provided in the exceptions embodied in Section 499. There is no case for permitting him to sort out the averments in complaint by taking the advantage of the explanations provided and the illustrations given. Hence, the petition stands dismissed. Rule stands discharged. No order as to costs. The Petitioner should appear before the trial Court on 22. 4. 2003 during working hours. The trial Court to proceed with the case in accordance with the provisions of law. The petitioner is entitled to move an application or raising the plea permitted by the provisions of Section 499 of IPC. If such application is preferred, the trial Court should adjudicate on it as early as possible.

(1.) F.I.Rs. were registered with Government Railway Police, Faridabad by the Station House Officer, Ambala Cantonment, Randhir Singh (ASI) against the prime accused, Rahim Khan for offences of fraud and forgery of the railway receipts and cheating and misappropriation. In connection therewith, a police team headed by Ishmad, Inspector, C.I.A.G.R.P., Ambala had gone to Agra to apprehend Rahim Khan. When he alluded the investigation team, they took away two minor boys viz., Afzal son of Rahim Khan and Habib son of Ahmad and kept them in wrongful confinement at different places. Consequently, above writ petitions under Article 32 of the Constitution were filed in this Court for habeas corpus of the minor boys. This Court issued rule nisi on 29/10/1993 to Ms. Indu Malhotra, Standing Counsel for State of Haryana and directed the matter to be listed on 1/11/1993. On Nov 1/11/1993, this Court directed the Home Secretary, Government of Haryana to personally examine the complaint of illegal detention of two minor boys and to submit a report by 5/11/1993 and the matter was directed to be posted on that day at 2.00 p.m. On 2/11/1993, when Ms. Indu had pointed out the Court that the Home Secretary was on leave, this Court had modified the order and directed the Director General of Police (DGP) to make investigation and to submit the report on 5/11/1993. In the meantime, on 1/11/1993, Ms. Malhotra wrote a letter to the Home Secretary thus :-

"... ... Two minor children namely Afzal and Habib have allegedly been illegally detained at Ambala Respondents No. 3 and 4 i.e., the Superintendent of Police G.R.P. (C.I.A.), (Haryana) have filed two separate affidavits stating that the children are not in illegal custody.

However, an affidavit of an Advocate of U.P. has been filed in support of the Hebeas Corpus petition in the Supreme Court stating that Inspector Ishaque Ahmad, G.R.P. (C.I.R.), Ambala Cantt. had informed him that the minor children would be released only if their father surrenders. He has stated that he saw the children in the custody of Ishaque Ahmad".

(2.) She enclosed in the said letter complete copy of the petition along with the copy of the affidavits etc. She also informed that the case was posted "for hearing on 5-11-93" and that the Court had directed him to personally investigate into the case and file an affidavit before the Court. She requested him to be present in Delhi with the above details by 5/11/1993. On Nov 2/11/1993, she wrote another letter to Shri Kalyan Rudra, DGP, Haryana wherein while reiterating the facts of earlier letter, she stated thus :

"The Court had issued notice to the Standing Counsel for the State of Haryana on 29/10/1993. On receiving a copy of the said petition, we contacted the 3rd and 4th respondents and filed affidavits on their behalf. The affidavits filed on behalf of respondents Nos. 3 and 4 along with the copy of the Habeas Corpus petition are enclosed herewith for your ready reference. The Court, however, was not satisfied with the facts stated by respondents Nos. 3 and 4".

(3.) She further stated that the Court had directed him to personally investigate into the matter and file an affidavit by 4/11/1993 and that the case would be heard on 5/11/1993. She also requested him to talk to her personally on the telephones and numbers thereof had been given. This Court by order dated 8/12/1993 in Afzal v. State of Haryana, (1994) 1 SCC 425, noted that the first affidavit of M.S. Ahlawat, Superintendent of Police was filed in this Court on 2/11/1993 and another affidavit was filed on 5/11/1993. The Court also had noted that Inspector Ishaq Ahmad was primarily responsible for wrongful and illegal confinement of two minor boys. This Court opined that a detailed enquiry was necessary to find out the truth and the tenor of the averments made in two affidavits of Ahlawat and that the forgery of his signature was made in the first one; veracity of allegations and counter-allegations by the officers and the role played by each of the respondents would be ascertained. Therefore, this Court had directed the District Judge, Faridabad to make an enquiry and to submit the report within six weeks from the date of the receipt of that order. The District Judge, had given opportunity to all the persons and he opined and concluded that "the assertion of Ishwar Singh, S. I. did not appear to be veracious and impeccable. The trend and tenor of the statements made by various police officers/officials during the course of the enquiry tended to suggest that they tried to toe the line of one or the other group of two factions of the Railway Police branding each other with charges and counter charges. Themanner in which Ishwar Singh, the senior most in the group of police officials concerned with the preparation of counter-affidavits and briefing the Standing Counsel did not object to the filing of a forged affidavit, spoke volumes of the tendentious nature of the stand taken by him". He also held that M.S. Ahlawat was not responsible in the episode. On receipt of the report, by order dated 19/10/1994 in Afzal v. State of Haryana, (1994) 7 JT (SC) 167, this Court opined that "the affidavit of Ahlawat dated 5/09/1993, his evidence before the Dist. Judge, and the report of the latter do establish that the signature of Ahlawat is forged on the affidavit dated 30/09/1993 and the question as to who had forged it needs thorough investigation to take deterrent action. It cannot be lightly brushed aside of the tendency to file false affidavits or fabricated documents or forgery of the document and placing them as part of the record of the Court and they are matters of grave and serious concern. Therefore, we are of the view that a thorough investigation is necessary in this behalf". Accordingly, Director of Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI) was entrusted with the task of investigation, if necessary, with the assistance of hand-writing expert and report was directed to be submitted as expeditiously as possible within three months from the date of the receipt of this Court's order.

(4.) Shri V. K. Khanna, Senior Scientific Officer, Grade-I examined the documents and assisted the CBI in the enquiry conducted by Shri N. K. Pathak, Inspector. He stated in the report submitted to this Court that Head Constable, Krishan Kumar forged the signatures of Shri M. S. Ahlawat on the carbon copy of the counter affidavit dated 30th October, 1993 and that that "it was committed in the presence of S.I. Ishwar Singh and ASI Randhir Singh" on 30/10/1993. It is also stated in that report that "It may be added that they first visited the chamber-cum-residence of Ms. Indu in the evening of 30/10/1993, and not on the evening of 31/10/1993, as stated by them in their statements. The junior Officers had nothing to gain by forging the SP's signature on the counter-affidavit. There is evidence to indicate that it was within the knowledge of Shri M.S. Ahlawat, SP, Railways that 2 boys had been detained illegally. His conduct raises a strong suspicion that the junior officers acted with his consent either implied or express". During examination by Shri N. K. Pathak,

Ms. Indu had stated that after getting a copy of the impugned writ petition, she had instructed her junior, Smt. Dania Pradhan to brief Shri M. S. Ahlawat, S.P. about the said writ petition and the five officials named in paragraph 1 of the petition. The five officials met her in the evening of 30/10/1993. On their instruction, she had vetted the counter-affidavits to be filed on behalf of M.S. Ahlawat impleaded as third respondent and A.S.I., Randhir Singh impleaded as fourth respondent and handed them over to the aforesaid police personnel. In the morning of 1/11/1993, one of her personal staff informed her that two counter-affidavits affirmed on behalf of M.S. Ahlawat and A.S.I. Randhir Singh had been received for being filed in this Court on the same day. Accordingly she tendered the aforesaid two counter affidavits in the Court on 1/11/1993, but directed to be filed in the Registry which were filed accordingly. This Court was not justified with the averments made in the counter-affidavits of respondent Nos. 3 and 4 and had directed the DGP, Haryana to personally investigate into the matter and to file a report. She further stated that on 2/11/1993, Shri G.S. Malhi, DIG (Railways), Haryana contacted her in the Court chamber and she told them that this Court was not satisfied with the counter-affidavits filed by Ahlawat and Randhir Singh. She also wrote a letter to DGP, Haryana in that behalf and handed over the same to Shri Malhi requesting him to fax the letter immediately since time was very short. The said letter was dictated in the presence of M.S. Ahlawat. He did not tell her that he did not sign the counter-affidavit in which the allegation of illegal detention of the two boys had been denied. She also stated that M.S. Ahlawat did not even faintly hint that he had not affirmed the counter-affidavit filed in this Court and as such she filed extra copies of the aforesaid two counter-affidavits as required under the rules in the Registry of this Court on 4/11/1994.

4-A. Randhir Singh, ASI, GRP, Faridabad, respondent No.4 was also examined by the C.B.I. and he admitted that he had gone to Amabla on 30/10/1993, to attend Crime meeting convened by M.S. Ahlawat who later directed him to proceed to Delhi and contact Ms. Indu and have the counter-affidavits of him and M.S. Ahlawat prepared. He stated that "Shri Ahlawat had told him to deny the allegations regarding illegal detention of two boys in the counter-affidavit". As such, he met Ms. Indu, got the counter-affidavits vetted. He, however, did not tell anything about the preparation of counter-affidavit to be filed on behalf of M.S. Ahlawat and did not reveal the names of the personnel who had accompanied him to Delhi on 30/10/1993. (5.) Head Constable, Krishan Kumar during his examination admitted that he attended the Crime meeting held at Amabla Cantonment on 30/10/1993 along with Randhir Singh. He also stated that in his presence A.S.I. Randhir Singh was directed by Ahlawat to deny allegations of illegal detention of the two boys in the counter-affidavit to be filed in this Court.

(6.) Ishwar Singh, being the In-charge of C.I.A. Staff, GRP, Ambala Cantt. had stated during his examination that he was called by Shri Ahlawat on 30/10/1993 and instructed him to meet Ms. Indu to assist her in the preparation of the counter-affidavit to be filed in this Court. He stated that he reached Delhi on 31/10/1993, and contacted Ms. Indu. "Two counter-affidavits were drafted, vetted and typed at the residence-cum-office of Ms. Indu. After the preparation of the above two counter-affidavits, he sent a folder containing original counter-affidavit in the name of Shri M. S. Ahlawat through H.C. Kartar Singh to Rewari as Shri Ahlawat was camping at Rewari". He admitted that in his presence and in the presence of Randhir Singh and Constable Paras Ram, "H.C. Krishan Kumar forged the signatures of Shri M. S. Ahlawat on the carbon copy of the counter-affidavit to be filed in the Supreme Court on behalf of Shri Ahlawat" and that "forgery was committed by H.C. Krishan Kumar on the instructions of A.S.I. Randhir Singh. H.C. Krishan Kumar had used his right hand while signing".

(7.) When M.S. Ahlawat was examined, he reiterated all what he had stated in his second affidavit. He also stated that 'he had directed S.I. Ishwar Singh and A.S.I. Randhir to brief Ms. Indu at her residence in Delhi on 31-10-93. On the evening of 31st Oct., 1993, he had gone to Rewari for official work". It is not necessary to reiterate his version since he has stated the same as in the second affidavit. But he admitted that he reached Delhi on the evening of 1/11/1993 and contacted Ms. Indu and requested her for a meeting. She called him to her chamber next day morning. On the evening of 2/11/1993, he along with Shri G. S. Malhi, DIG, Railways met Ms. Indu in her chamber and he stated to her that "he had not filed any counter-affidavit in the Supreme Court on 1-11-93". On Smt. Malhotra's asking as to who had signed the counter-affidavit on his behalf he could not answer the same as he knew nothing about it. Ms. Malhotra called him again on 4-11-93 and he had signed the Vakalatnama and gave the "affidavit dated 5/11/1993" and asked her to file next day. In that counter-affidavit he had disowned the earlier counter-affidavit dated 30/10/1993, purported to have been signed by him. He further stated that she refused to file the same in the Court as his signature in the vakalatnama and other documents did not tally with the signature he had put in the counter-affidavit dated 30/10/1993. (8.) In paragraph 19 of the report, CBI Officer has stated that "S.I. Ishwar Singh took the forged counter-affidavit from HC Krishan Kumar and kept it with him. Subsequently, he handed it over to HC Paras Ram with the instructions to deliver it to Ms. Indu, knowing fully well that the counter-affidavit was a forged one. HC Paras Ram has confirmed that SI Ishwar Singh handed him an envelop on 1st Nov., 1993 and that he delivered the same at the residence of Ms. Indu as instructed. His conduct becomes all the more questionable as he was responsible for the delivery of the forged affidavit at Ms. Malhotra's residence. SI, Ishwar Singh, ASI Randhir Singh, HC Krishan Kumar, HC Kartar Singh, and HC Paras Ram have admitted that they met Ms. Indu on 31/10/1993 at her residence and got the counter-affidavits vetted by her. This statement is inconsistent with the statement of Ms. Malhotra that they visited her on 30/10/1993. The police officers seem to have manipulated the Daily Diary entries to support their contention. It appears that all of them had met Ms. Indu on 30/10/1993. She is an independent witness and is a Govt. Standing Counsel and has no axe to grind in the matter. Further, she had, as per the practice, noted down the names of the persons who visited her on the reverse of the office copy of the writ petition and that document was handed over by her to the CBI Investigating Officer". In paragraph 22 of the report, he concluded that there are indications to show that detention of the two boys in the GRP was within the knowledge of Ahlawat, though none of the concerned police officer has stated that Ahlawat had instructed them to sign on his behalf. "There is no explanation by Shri Ahlawat not signing the counter-affidavit which was to be submitted in the Hon'ble Supreme Court on 1-11-1993. In the statement he has stated that he received the counter-affidavit at 2.00 a.m. on 1-11-1993 while he was in Rewari... Further, he was aware that this counter affidavit was necessary. Although Ms. Malhotra had discussed the case with Ahlawat and Malhi, at no stage had Ahlawat informed her that he had not signed the counter affidavit which was submitted before the Court on 1/11/1993. This was also corroborated by G.S. Malhi's statement. It is also a moot point as to why subordinate officers like SI, Ishwar Singh, HC Krishan Kumar and ASI, Randhir Singh would take decision to forge their SP's signature on document being submitted to the Court. As Ahlawat was not in Delhi, these officers may have taken his instructions on telephone. There is, however, no evidence as to what transpired".(9.) On receipt of the report, notices were issued on 17/04/1995 to HC Krishan Kumar and SI, Ishwar Singh and ASI, Randhir Singh as to why they would not be convicted for forgery of signature of M.S. Ahlawat and counter affidavit dated 30/10/1993 and also for the contempt of the Court for filing false affidavit. Pursuant thereto, they appeared before the Court, Randhir Singh has stated that : "On 1/11/1993, I along with Krishan Kumar reached Delhi and met Ishwar Singh who gave a carbon copy of the affidavit of Shir M.S. Ahlawat to Krishan Kumar. The said affidavit was to be filed in this Hon'ble Court in connection with the writ petition filed by one Afzal". Ishwar Singh asked Krishan Kumar to sign the affidavit on behalf of Ahlawat who was not able to reach Delhi. Krishan Kumar refused to sign the affidavit, Ishwar Singh thereafter phoned Shri M. S. Ahlawat and asked Krishan Kumar to talk to Shri M. S. Ahlawat. After talking to M.S. Ahlawat on phone, Krishan Kumar took the carbon copy of the affidavit of Shri M. S. Ahlawat and signed it and both them went away. They met only on 1/11/1993 in this Court.

(10.) HC Krishan Kumar has stated in his affidavit that Ishwar Singh, SI directed him, in the presence of Randhir Singh, to sign the carbon copy of the affidavit typed in the name of Ahlawat for official use. "When I refused to sign the carbon copy Shri Ishwar Singh contacted Shri Ahlawat on phone and Shri Ahlawat ordered me over telephone to sign the carbon copy of the affidavit in his name on the plea that the said carbon copy is only for official use while the original is to be filed before the Hon'ble Supreme Court. In these circumstances,... I had no alternative except to sign the carbon copy of the said affidavit in the name of Ahlawat and handed it over to Shir Ishwar Singh, Sub-Inspector, thereafter I got no information about the said affidavit". He has also stated that on 1/11/1993, he along with other police constables went to Haryana Bhavan, New Delhi at 12.45 p.m. Shri Udey Singh Head Constable, Driver of the Staff car of Shri Ahlawat was in Haryana Bhavan. All the team assembled at the rear side of Haryana Bhavan. "Shri M. S. Ahlawat discussed about the pending writ petition with Ishwar Singh and Randhir Singh and assured me not to worry about signature on the carbon copy of his counter-affidavit". He has further stated that Shri Ahlawat remained in Delhi on 1/11/1993. He was in the premises of this Court from 2.30 p.m. onwards when the hearing of the case took place. To substantiate his version, he has also filed the affidavit of the Driver of Ahlawat, which is marked as Annexure-2 before the District Judge. He had explained for his omission to state these facts of forgery before the District Judge, Faridabad in paragraph 13 stating that M.S. Ahlawat threatened him that if he would disclose the truth before the DistrictJudge, he would make an enquiry and then would terminate his service and dismiss him from service. Due to that threat he had kept mum.

(11.) After reading these averments in the affidavits, by order dated 10/09/1995, this Court issued notice to M. S. Ahlawat to show cause as to why he would not be considered for conviction for forgery and making false statement at different stages in this Court and also for contempt of the proceedings of this Court. M. S. Ahlawat and Ishwar Singh, SI have filed the affidavits. Ishwar Singh has denied all the allegations. He has, however, admitted that he attended the Crime meeting on 30/10/1993 at Ambala Cantt. along with Randhir Singh, Krishan Kumar etc. He has also admitted that he was asked by Ahlawat to go to Delhi and brief Ms. Indu. According to him, he reached Delhi on 31/10/1993 and proceeded to meet Ms. Malhotra along with others. At about 6.30 p.m. Ms. Indu handed over the cover to Randhir Singh containing two affidavits, one to be filed by him and the other to be filed by M. S. Ahlawat. Randhir Singh handed over the original draft to Kartar Singh and asked him to proceed to Rewari immediately and contact M. S. Ahlawat for his signature as the case was listed the next day, i.e., 1/11/1993. Kartar Singh left Delhi at 6.35 p.m. Thereafter, Randhir Singh asked Krishan Kumar to append the signature of M.S. Ahlawat on the carbon copy of the draft affidavit. Krishan Kumar then forged the signature of M.S. Ahlawat on the said carbon copy. He has further stated that he objected to the same but Randhir Singh and Krishan Kumar did not pay any heed to it. He did not inform about this to any one thinking that M. S. Ahlawat had already sent instructions to them.

(12.) M. S. Ahlawat in his affidavit filed on 5/11/1993 has denied his role in the wrongful confinement of two minor boys.He has stated that he received the counter-affidavit at 2.00 a.m. on 1/11/1993. He had gone through the affidavit and found them to be not correct. On coming to know of the forgery of signature he informed the same to Ms. Malhotra on 2/11/1993. He also informed the Director General of Police on the same day, about the forgery of his signature committed by Krishan Kumar. On 4/11/1995 he brought these facts to the notice of this Court and filed an affidavit. In the departmental enquiry conducted against Krishan Kumar, he was found to have committed forgery of his signature and accordingly disciplinary action was taken against him.

(13.) We have elaborately narrated the facts and the proceedings of this Court from which it would emerge that initially Afzal and Habib, two minor boys were taken into custody by Ambala Cantonment police party consisting of Ishaq Ahmad and others who put the boys in wrongful confinement to coerce the accused Rahim Khan to surrender. On filing writ petition under Article 32, this Court had issued notice and directed investigation at highest level in the State. M. S. Ahlawat, the Superintendent of Police, Railways, Ambala, in-charge of the investigation, and SHO Randhir Singh, ASI were impleaded as respondent Nos. 3 and 4. They were required to file counter-affidavits in this Court on 1/11/1993. Ahlawat Directed SI, Ishwar Singh, ASI Randhir Singh and HC Krishan Kumar and others to go over to Delhi and contact Ms. Malhotra and to instruct her to draft the counter-affidavits. On the basis of instructions given to her, she had drafted the counter-affidavits and handed them over to Ishwar Singh, he being the senior most among the police personnel. Randhir Singh signed it. The original counter-affidavit was sent to Rewari where M. S. Ahlawat was camping. M. S. Ahlawat along with Randhir Singh was required to file the counter-affidavit by 1/11/1993. M. S. Ahlawat attended the Court on 1/11/1993 and was in the Court premises from 2.30 p.m. onwards. The carbon copy of the counter-affidavit on behalf of M. S. Ahlawat and counter-affidavit of Randhir Singh was tendered in the Court. They were filed in the Registry. The Court was not satisfied with the averments made therein. Therefore, an enquiry was directed to be made initially by the Home Secretary, Haryana and in his absence by the DGP, Shri Kalyan Rudra. Ms. Malhotra wrote a letter first to Home Secretary and then to the DGP enclosing the copies of the counter affidavits filed on behalf of the Ahlawat and Randhir Singh informing that the Court was not satisfied with the averments made therein and an independent personal investigation was directed to be made by DGP who was required to file an affidavit and report on or before 4/11/1993, and writ petitions were directed to be posted for hearing at 2.00 p.m. on November 5, 1993. On 2/11/1993, Ahlawat and G. L. Malhi, DGP had met Ms. Indu and in their presence she had dictated the letter to the DGP, Shri Kalyan Rudra stating that she had already filed two counter affidavits on behalf of Ahlawat and Randhir Singh. Though Ahlawat was present when the letter was dictated, he did not point out that he had not signed any counter affidavit already filed in the Court on his behalf. The copy thereof along other material was handed over to Shri Malhi for onward transmission to the DGP. The letter was desired to be faxed immediately to the DGP. When Ahlawat met Ishwar Singh after the Court proceedings on 1/11/1993, they had discussed the matter. Ahlawat appears to have thought that things were not going on the lines he had charted out and he thought he would be required to retract from his stand in the counter-affidavit dated 30/10/1993 and to file another affidavit with a different version. When he got prepared another affidavit dated Nove 5/11/1993, and asked Ms. Malhotra to file it along with Vakalatnama she refused to do the same. She had already filed copies of the counter-affidavit dated 30/10/1993 in the Registry of the Court as per the rules on 4/11/1993, as directed by this Court. On 5/11/1993, Ahlawat filed another affidavit in which he stated that HC Krishan Kumar had forged his signature and has filed the counter affidavit on his behalf.

(14.) Admittedly Krishan Kumar has not been made a respondent to the writ petitions, though he was a member of the investigation team which had gone to Agra to apprehend the accused Rahim Khan. In the enquiry conducted by Shri Kalyan Rudra, DGP, Ahlawat did not come out with the version that he had not signed the counter affidavit prepared on 30/10/1993, and filed on 1/11/1993 nor did he point out the forgery committed by Krishan Kumar. His counter-affidavit filed on 5/11/1993, would, therefore, obviously be an after thought to ditch his subordinate and save his skin. When this Court directed the enquiry and save his skin. When this Court directed the enquiry by the District Judge. Faridabad to find out the truth or the counter-version in the matter, all the persons including Ahlawat were examined. In the said enquiry, the main thrust was the forgery and as to who had committed the forgery. But it was not clear to the District Judge. Therefore, he castigated the conduct of Ishwar Singh but exonerated Ahlawat. This Court as well as the District Judge prima facie were impressed with the averments made by Ahlawat in his second affidavit filed on 5/11/1993, and his version was acted upon. This Court then directed the CBI to enquire into as to who actually was responsible for the forgery which was registered as a crime on 11/11/1994, and the task was entrusted to Shri N. K. Pathak, Inspector.

(15.) In the enquiry conducted by Shri N. K. Pathak, Ms. Malhotra, as a strict professional practitioner has stated the facts that had transpired in her office and the action taken by her in defending the officers and the affidavits filed by the officers etc. The CBI officers has concluded that HC Krishan Kumar had nothing to gain by forging the signature of Ahlawat. It was forged in the presence of Ishwar Singh who had kept the carbon copy in his custody and directed Paras Ram to deliver the signed copies in the office of Ms. Malhotra for being filed in the Court. Before Shri Pathak, Ishwar Singh admitted that Krishan Kumar had forged the signature in his presence and he had custody of the forged documents. Had he not had any prior instructions from Ahlawat, as a responsible officer to whom the duty of getting the counter-affidavit drafted on behalf of Ahlawat was entrusted, he would not have permitted Krishan Kumar to forge the signature and should have proceeded to Rewari to have the counter affidavit approved and brought the same back and given to Ms. Indu to be filed in the Court. Ahlawat being a respondent in the writ petition, he was bound to file the counter-affidavit by 1/11/1993, and had he not instructed his junior officers to forge his signature and to file the counter-affidavit, he would haveinstructed Ms. Malhotra to seek further time for filing the counter-affidavit. What is more, he himself was present in the Court premises on 1/11/1993. These circumstances clearly would indicate that Ahlawat had instructed Ishwar Singh to have the counter-affidavit of him and Randhir Singh drafted and that the two affidavits must be consistent. Since he knew that two minors were in wrongful confinement, he did not want to commit himself by signing the counter-affidavit and had instructed Ishwar Singh to direct Krishan Kumar to forge his signature. When Ahlawat attended the chambers of Ms. Indu on 2/11/1993 along with Shri G. L. Malhi, DIG, a letter was dictated in their presence to DGP to the effect that counter-affidavit on behalf of Ahlawat and Randhir Singh were already filed on 1/11/1993 and that the Court was not satisfied with the tenor of the averments made therein. If Ahlawat really had not instructed the junior officers to forge his signature on the counter-affidavit and file an affidavit on his behalf, nothing prevented him to mention to her that he had not signed any counter-affidavit and that he had not instructed anyone to sign the same on his behalf; he would have asked her as to why she had allowed filing such counter-affidavit without any instructions from him. He did not do that. That version of Randhir Singh and of Ahlawat in the counter-affidavits dated 30/10/1993, was consistent, namely minor boys were not in wrongful confinement. On the other hand, when the report submitted by Shri Kalyan Rudra, the DGP was found against them, he thought that he must salvage himself from the earlier stand to avoid charge of perjury and decided to file another counter-affidavit making his subordinate officer the scape goat.

(16.) In this background, we have to consider the averments made by HC Krishan Kumar and ASI Randhir Singh that when Ishwar Singh asked Krishan Kumar to sign the affidavit of Ahlawat on his behalf on the carbon copy, he objected to sign and immediately Ishwar Singh contacted Ahlawat who had ordered Krishan Kumar on the phone to sign the counter-affidavit. There is nothing intrinsically improbable to disbelieve the version of Krishan Kumar that he was asked by Ahlawat to forge his signature assuring him that he would not be in trouble for forging his signature. In view of the admitted facts that Ahlawat was in supervision of the investigation of the cases registered against Rahim Khan, it would be obvious that minor boys brought by Ishaq Ahmad from Agra were kept in wrongful confinement with his connivance and that he thought that by denying the averments, the Court would be prepared to accept his version, used this authority as Superintendent of Police and directed his subordinate Krishan Kumar to forge his counter-affidavit. When Ishwar Singh asked Krishan Kumar to sigh the counter-affidavit forging the signature of his senior officer, he might have thought that it would not be proper to do so but when Ishwar Singh contacted, obviously on phone and had informed Ahlawat of unwillingness of Krishan Kumar to forge his signature on the carbon copy of the counter-affidavit, obviously on his instructions, Krishan Kumar forged his signature and, as seen, that the same was filed in the Court on 1/11/1993. When things were not going on the line charted out by Ahlawat and the report of the DGP was contrary to the stand taken by Ahlawat, he obviously thought over and decided to file another counter-affidavit making Krishan Kumar a scapegoat. Without his prior knowledge that Krishan Kumar had forged his signature, how was it possible for him to conclude that Krishan Kumar had forged the carbon copy of the counter-affidavit to be filed by him. It is not his case nor of Ishwar Singh before this Court that Ishwar Singh informedAhlawat of forging his signature on the carbon copy of the counter-affidavit or that he made an enquiry in which he came to know that Krishan Kumar had forged his signature. Though Krishan Kumar was a member of raiding party headed by Inspector Ishaq Ahmad, which had taken into custody two minor boys and kept them in wrongful confinement, he being not a party to the writ petitions, there was nothing for him to gain by forging the signature of Ahlawat on the carbon copy of the counter-affidavit and filing the same in the Court. Under these circumstances, our inescapable conclusion is that Ahlawat had instructed Ishwar Singh and others to meet Ms. Malhotra, to instruct her to draft the counter-affidavit on his behalf and Randhir Singh denying the wrongful confinement of minor boys and when counter-affidavit were drafted it was obviously only on the instructions given by the Ishwar Singh as the senior-most of the team, denying the wrongful confinement of the minor boys. The letters written by Ms. Indu and her professional conduct is transparently consistent with professional duty and she had truthfully and promptly discharged it in defending the officers.

(17.) When Ms. Indu expressed her inconvenience to continue as Standing Counsel for the State and sought permission of the Court to withdraw from the case due to the stand of Ahlawat and orally stated that the averments made in the affidavit of Ahlawat filed on 5/11/1993, were not correct, we directed her to file an affidavit stating as to what actually had transpired when she dealt with the cases. She has filed the affidavit to which Ahlawat has also filed another counter-affidavit to it. In her affidavit she has narrated the facts that had transpired in this case. She has also produced correspondence she had with the officials. Ahlawat even did not make any averments against Ms. Indu's actions and conduct. Her affidavit is consistent with the conclusion we have reached and it corroborates the stand taken by Krishan Kumar and Randhir Singh.

(18.) As regards the directions issued by Ahlawat to Krishan Kumar pursuant to a telephonic call made by Ishwar Singh to forge his signature his counter-affidavit dated 30/10/1993 to be filed in this Court on 1/11/1993, the CBI Officer has also concluded in his report that Ahlawat having had a duty to the counter-affidavit and his not signing the affidavit prepared by Ms. Malhotra is highly unbecoming of a responsible officer and Krishan Kumar had nothing to gain by forging his signature and it appears to have been done on instructions from Ahlawat. We approve of his conclusion. (19.) Shri Sanyal, learned senior counsel appearing for Krishan Kumar contended that in view of the affidavit of Ms. Indu and the circumstances of the case the stand taken by Krishan Kumar is correct as he was threatened not to disclose these facts during the enquiry conducted by the District Judge, Faridabad at the pain of dismissal from service. Consequently, he did not come out from the red at that stage but when, after enquiry, the CBI in its report found against him, he had necessarily to come out with the truth. Consequently, he has truthfully stated in his affidavit whatever had transpired. His version and statement, therefore, is more probable and consistent and he had no intention to forge the signature of Ahlawat and to fabricate the record for being filed in this Court since he had nothing to gain from the proceedings before this Court. He was not a respondent. We find that there is justification in his contention. Though, Krishan Kumar was a member of the investigation team which visited Agra headed by Ishaq Ahmad who had played principal role in abducting the minor boys and kept them in wrongful confinement to coerce Rahim Khan to surrender, he was not made a respondent to the writ petitions. Being a member of the investigation team and having been asked to attend the crime meeting at Ambala Cantonment convened by Ahlawat on telephone who directed him, Randir Singh, Ishwar Singh and two others to go over to Delhi and brief Ms. Indu to have the counter-affidavits drafted, he had accompanied the party and accordingly followed the instructions issued by Ahlawat. When counter-affidavit of Ahlawat was drafted, as per the instructions, Ishwar Singh had asked Krishan Kumar to forge the affidavit of Ahlawat and when he had refused to do so. Ishwar Singh had contacted Ahlawat who had directed Krishan Kumar to sign the carbon copy of the counter-affidavit and assured him that nothing would be done to him. In these circumstances, Krishan Kumar came to forge signature of Ahlawat on the carbon copy of the counter-affidavit, but not with an intention to forge the signature of Ahlawat but in obedience to the command of Ahlawat. Thereafter SI Ishwar Singh had taken custody of the carbon copy of the counter-affidavit and instructed Paras Ram to hand it over to Mrs. Indu Malhotra for being filed in the Court. We, therefore, hold that he had no intention to forge the signature of Ahlawat on the carbon copy of the counter-affidavit dated 30/10/1993 filed in this Court.

(20.) The question then is : What is the role played by ASI Randhir Singh ? Shri Mehta, learned counsel appearing for him contended that Randhir Singh had no intention to fabricate the affidavit of Ahlawat nor had he filed in the Court. Though Randhir Singh was a member of the raid party headed by Ishaq Ahmad, which illegally took two minor boys into custody and wrongfully confined them, as regards forgery of signatures of Ahlawat by Krishan Kumar, from the circumstances of the case admittedly he dated 4th respondent to the writ petitions, he and Ahlawat obviously have taken aconsistent stand in there counter-affidavits dated 30/10/1993 tendered on 1/11/1993 that they had not taken the minor boys into custody nor had they wrongfully confined them. That statement is now proved to be false from two enquiries conducted by Shri Kalyan Rudra, DGP and the District Judge, Faridabad. He was present along with SI Ishwar Singh at the time Krishan Kumar had forged signature of Ahlawat on the carbon copy of the counter affidavit of Ahlawat.

Consequently, it must be held and that it is difficult to accept his version that the minor boys were not taken into custody and kept in wrongful confinement. He also abetted Krishan Kumar to forge the signature of Ahlawat. He would stand to gain by it as his version gets corroborated from that of Ahlawat. He thus filed false counter-affidavit dated 30/10/1993 in the judicial proceedings before this Court. Thereby he is liable to conviction under Section 193, Indian Penal Code, 1860 (IPC) for intentionally giving false affidavit in the judicial proceedings in this Court abetting Krishan Kumar to forge the signature of M. S. Ahlawat.

(21.) Ishwar Singh in his affidavit dated 10/07/1995 filed in this Court on 11/07/1995 has stated that he neither forged the signature of Ahlawat in the counter-affidavit dated 30/10/1993, nor filed any counter-affidavit before this Court as he had no motive for committing the act of forgery. He denied to have any knowledge affidavit that the carbon copy of the counte-affidavit of Ahlawat signed by Krishan Kumar was given to Ms. Indu for being filed in this Court and he believed that it was not filed. He has come out with false version toeing the line of Ahlawat. He deliberately omitted certain crucial facts relevant for the decision. He appears to have thought that ditching his subordinates and being consistent with the stand taken by Ahlawat would accelerate his promotional prospects and accordingly he had fallen in line with Ahlawat which is now found to be false. He admitted that he was asked by Ahlawat to go along with the party to instruct Ms. Indu to draft the counter-affidavits. He handed over the counter-affidavit given by Ms. Indu to Kartar Singh, and asked him to immediately proceed to Rewari whereat Ahlawat was camping, for his signature on the counter-affidavit since the case was posted for hearing on 1/11/1993. He stated that he had met Ms. Indu on 31/10/1993 which on its face is false. The counter-affidavit of Randhir Singh and Ahlawat bear the said date and were attested with that date. Ahlawat received draft on 31/10/1993, at 2.00 a.m. He went to Ms. Indu to instruct her to draft the counter-affidavit. He admitted that Krishan Kumar forged the signature in his presence and in the presence of Randhir Singh. He has further stated that he had no motive to abet the forgery committed by Krishan Kumar. It is contended by his learned counsel that since he was not a member of the raid party who took the minor boys into illegal custody and put them in wrongful confinement, there is no reason for him to file false evidence or to commit forgery of signature of Ahlawat. There is nothing to show that he committed any offence nor is he liable for contempt of this Court.

(22.) At the cost of repetition, we may reiterate that to the crime meeting held on 30/10/1993 at Ambala Cantonment, convened by Ahlawat, Ishwar Singh had admittedly attended. Ahlawat had instructed him to proceed along with Randhir Singh, Krishan Kumar and two others to meet Ms. Malhotra and have the counter-affidavits drafted. Admittedly, he proceeded and met Ms. Malhotra. She drafted the counter-affidavits on 30/10/1993, andhanded them over to the parties. He being senior-most officer among the party, obviously he had taken the originals of the counter-affidavits to be signed by Ahlawat and Randhir Singh and directed Kartar Singh to proceed to Rewari and deliver the same to Ahlawat. It is now an admitted fact that Krishan Kumar forged the signature of Ahlawat in the carbon copy in his presence. On what date it was forged is not the material point. But it is the definite case that after the counter-affidavit was handed over to them in the office of Ms. Indu, Ishwar Singh had sent the original draft. When he asked Krishan Kumar to forge but he refused to forge the signature of Ahlawat, he contacted Ahlawat who had directed Krishan Kumar to sign the carbon copy of his counter-affidavit. On command from Ahlawat, Krishan Kumar had forged it. From these facts, it is clear that Ishwar Singh acted in concert with Ahlawat to fabricate counter-affidavit with facts false to his knowledge that minors were not in wrongful confinement or illegal custody and induced Krishan Kumar to forge the signature of Ahlawat on the carbon copy of the counter affidavit to be filed on behalf of Ahlawat and after forgery, as admitted before the CBI officer, he had taken custody of the forged carbon copy of the counter-affidavit, sent them to Ms. Malhotra through Paras Ram for being filed in the Court. He was present on 1/11/1993, in the Court premises along with Ahlawat. Though he disclaimed knowledge of the forged document having been filed in the Court, in view of the evidence on record that he appeared in the Court when the proceedings were going on, he had seen through the filing of the same in the Court. When this Court was not satisfied with the tenor of the averments made in the counter-affidavits filed by Ahlawat and Randhir Singh, he informed the same with a disturbed mind to Ahlawat. Thus he is a party to the fabrication of false record and abetted Krishan Kumar to forge the signature of Ahlawat and after taking custody of the carbon copy of the counter-affidavit with forged signature, he had entrusted the same to Paras Ram for delivery in the office of Ms. Indu and the same was filed in this Court. He falsely denied the facts in his affidavit filed in this Court. Thus he not only actively participated in the fabrication of the false counter-affidavit dated 30/10/1993, with false averments that minors were not in wrongful detention or illegal custody but also entrusted the same for being filed in the judicial proceedings of this Court. He abetted Krishan Kumar to forge the signature of M. S. Ahlawat. Thus he committed an offence under Section193, Indian Penal Code (23.) The question then is : Whether Ahlawat has committed contempt of the proceedings of this Court and has committed the offence under Section 193, Indian Penal Code by making false statement and directing forgery of his signature and filing of forged documents in this Court ? Shri U. R. Lalit, his learned senior counsel, strenuously contended that immediately on coming to know that his signature was forged on the carbon copy of the counter affidavit purported to be dated 30/10/1993, he had informed the learned counsel Ms. Indu on 2/11/1993. He also informed the same to the DGP., Shri Kalyan Rudra on the same day. He also had brought to the notice of this Court on the first available opportunity, namely, on 5/11/1993. He had also taken disciplinary action against Krishan Kumar and Randhir Singh respectively for forging his signature and filing the affidavit with false averments in this Court. He had stated in this counter-affidavit filed on 5/11/1993 the true facts. The allegation that he instructed Krishan Kumar, when Ishwar Singh had contacted him on phone to forge his signature on the counter-affidavit, is a fabricated version to buttress the stand of Randhir Singh and sought shelter behind the shadow of superior officer.

Since Ahlawat had already taken disciplinary proceedings against Randhir Singh and Krishan Kumar, the version set up by Krishan Kumar and Randhir Singh is to defend themselves in those proceedings. The version that Ishwar Singh telephoned to Ahlawat on 31/10/1993 informing Ahlawat thatKrishan Kumar refused to sign in the carbon copy of the counter-affidavit is ex facie false for the reason that the affidavit was attested by the Notary on 30/10/1993 which tends corroboration from the counter affidavit dated 30/10/1993 filed by Randhir Singh. They have an axe to grind against Ahlawar. Therefore, they have made false averments to implicate Ahlawat. In the representation made by Krishan Kumar to the Government to expunge the adverse remarks made by Ahlawat against him, this version has not been stated. The story of authorising to file an affidavit dated 30/10/1993, is inconsistent with the true state of facts. He was not a party to the raid at Agra at the house of Rahim Khan and he would not have filed an affidavit with such a wrong fact. When original counter-affidavit was received by M. S. Ahlawat a 2 a.m. on 1/11/1993 on going through the contents thereof, he found to be incorrect since he was not a member of the raid party to take the minors into the illegal custody and for wrongful detention. Therefore he would not have instructed to make such an averments in his counter-affidavit. Therefore, he instructed Ms. Indu to file another counter-affidavit with the correct averments which was not done . Consequently, he had engaged another counsel and got the counter-affidavit filed on 5/11/1995, with true facts. He contends that from these circumstances, it is clear that Ahlawat has not made any false averment not instructed anybody to forge his signature. He did not commit any contempt of the Court. He fairly conceded that he has no argument on the contents of the affidavit filed by Ms. Indu in this Court. He says that Ahlawat may be of mistaken impression in not correcting Ms. Indu, at the time, when she had dictated in her letter addressed to DGP, Shri Kalyan Rudra that counter-affidavits on behalf of Randhir Singh and Ahlawat were already filed. But, in view of the facts stated and the above circumstances, Ahlawat had not committed any offence nor is he liable for contempt proceedings nor has he pleaded with any false averment in the affidavits filed in this Court. (24.) As to when, for the first time, Ahlawat had come to know that his signature was forged in the affidavit dated 30/10/1993, has been kept delightfully vague. He brought to the notice of this Court at the earliest opportunity, namely, 5/11/1995, the date to which this Court had posted the case for hearing of the factum of forgery of his signature.

(25.) We have given our anxious and careful consideration to his forceful contention. On 29/10/1993, this Court had taken up the case upon motion on Board and had issued notice to the respondents. Dasti Service in addition was ordered. Dasti service to the standing counsel was also ordered. The case was directed to be posted on 1/11/1993. Ms. Indu on 1/11/1993, wrote a letter to the Home Secretary informing that minor children by name Afzal and Habib were illegally detained at Ambala by the 3rd respondent. Ahlawat, and the 4th respondent Randhir Singh. Two separate counter-affidavits stating that the children were not in their illegal custody were filed by Randhir Singh and Ahlawat. On the basis of the affidavit of an advocate of U.P. (copy enclosed thereto), the Court was not inclined to believe the statements made by Ahlawat and Randhir Singh. She enclosed all the records since the Court had directed the Home Secretary to conduct an enquiry and to submit his report by 5/11/1993. She requested him to be personally present in the Court on the date of posting. On information that he was availing leave, a mention was made to the Court and the Court by proceedings dated 2/11/1993 directed enquiry by DGP and to submit the report by 5/11/1993, at 2.00 p.m. She also wrote on the same day a letter reiterating the entire contents and enclosed the counter-affidavits filed on behalf of 3rd and 4th respondents. This letter admittedly was dictated in the presence of M. S. Ahlawat and DIG., G.S. Malhi. No denial on the part of Ahlawat, i.e. he did not authorise anybody of file a counter-affidavit on his behalf was made at that time. It is already seen that on perusing the affidavits, the Court was not inclined to accept their stand and ordered an enquiry. On 1/11/1993, on which date the case was posted these counter-affidavits were tendered and were later filed into Court. It is clear from the record and affidavit of his driver that Ahlawat was present in the Court premises on 31/10/1993. His driver made the affidavit long before our issuing the notice produced before enquiry held by the District Judge, Faridabad that Ahlawat was present in the Court premises. There is nothing to disbelieve the version of the driver which corroborates the statement of Krishan Kumar and Randhir Singh. As a responsible officer, he was to file a counter-affidavit with true and facts. Instead, since he knew that two minor boys were in illegal and wrongful confinement, he did not want to commit himself to that position and by signing the counter-affidavit with false facts, he would be exposed to perjury etc. So, he disowned responsibility and directed Krishan Kumar to forge his signature so as to use the same in judicial proceedings. The CBI Officer also has commented upon the conduct of Ahlawat. When Ahlawat was required to file an affidavit on 1/11/1993, being a respondent unless he had already got filed a counter-affidavit, the legitimate thing that could be done was to seek time to file a counter-affidavit as he was not satisfied with the averments in the draft counter-affidavit received at Rewari whichwas not according to his stand. The least that can be said is that having allowed the counter-affidavit filed on his behalf, he was watching the proceedings to know how the things were going on and whether they are on the lines which he had charted out.

(26.) Admittedly, he deputed Ishwar Singh and 4 Constables to proceed to Delhi from Ambala to meet Ms. Indu and to give instructions to draft the counter-affidavits. The counter-affidavit filed by Randhir Singh is consistent with the one filed on behalf of Ahlawat dated 30/10/1993. It would thus be clear that Ms. Indu, obviously prepared the counter-affidavits on the basis of information furnished by Ishwar Singh which contain denial of taking the minors into custody and wrongfully confining them at Ambala etc. From these facts, we can unerringly draw the conclusion that as per his instructions which receive corroboration from the stand of Randhir Singh that the counter-affidavit dated 30/10/1993, was drafted with false averments that the minor boys were not taken into custody nor are they kept in illegal detention.

(27.) The question then is : Whether Ahlawat had given any investigation to Ishwar Singh to direct Krishan Singh to forge his signature on the carbon copy of the counter-affidavit and on refusal, whether he had directed Krishan Kumar to forge the same. It stands to reason that he had given such directions. Admittedly Ishwar Singh had taken the counter-affidavit of Ahlawat drafted by Ms. Indu and sent the original through Kartar Singh to Rewari for delivery to M. S. Ahlawat and Krishan Kumar forged the signature of Ahlawat on the carbon copy of the counter-affidavit in his presence. We have already held that Krishan Kumar had nothing to gain in forging the signature of M. S. Ahlawat. Unless Ishwar Singh had prior instructions in this behalf from Ahlawat, as responsible officer, he would have prevented Krishan Kumar to forge the signature of Ahlawat or immediately would have contacted and put Ahlawat on notice of it. That was not the case of either of Ishwar Singh or Ahlawat. It stands to reason to accept the version stated by Krishan Kumar and Randhir Singh that Ishwar Singh had asked Krishan Kumar to forge signature of Ahlawat on the carbon copy of counter-affidavit for being filed in this Court on behalf of Ahlawat. When M. S. Ahlawat was duty-bound to file the counter-affidavit in this Court before 1/11/1993, in the absence of any request for extension of time, it would be obvious that he had decided to get the counter-affidavit, as instructed by him, drafted by Ishwar Singh and to have the same filed in the Court. He did not want to commit himself by signing the counter-affidavit to the false version, viz., that minor boys were not taken into illegal custody and were not in wrongful confinement. He had also used his office as a Superintendent of Police and directed his subordinate Krishan Kumar to forge his signature. When the record was admittedly in the custody of Ishwar Singh, obviously Ishwar Singh had asked Krishan Kumar to sign it. Otherwise, how it would be possible for Krishan Kumar to take it into his custody and to forge the signature of Ahlawat ? It would, therefore, be likely that on the instructions by M. S. Ahlawat, Krishan Kumar had forged it. In the absence of any explanation for not seeking adjournment to file his counter-affidavit on 1/11/1993, and, as to when, for the first time, he had come to know of the forgery, committed by Krishan Kumar, it stands to reason that Ishwar Singh must have informed him that Krishan Kumar had forged his signature and got his counter-affidavit filed in the Court and that he was satisfied that it would be sufficient to buttress the stand he had taken. When the things were not going on the lines charted out by him, due to the report of the DGP., after 4/11/1993, he obviously must have thought that he must come out from the red and make a statement before the Court by filing yet another counter-affidavit which was accordingly filed on 5/11/1995. He had stated in the second counter-affidavit that on 2/11/1993, he informed Shri Kalyan Rudra, DGP., that he did not sign the counter-affidavit. It is ex facie false since neither in the report filed by Shri Kalyan Rudra nor in the affidavit sworn by him and filed on 5/11/1995, we find such an averment having been made. It is an obvious falsehood. It would be clear that he abused his office as a Superintendent of Police, directed his subordinate Head Constable Krishan Kumar to forge his signature or at least abetted it and got the carbon copy of the counter-affidavit filed with forged signatures in the Court while he retained the original draft with him. The reason is obvious that he did not want to commit himself to the false stand which he had taken in the earlier affidavit, since he knew that the minors were illegally detained and were in wrongful confinement. Therefore, he filed the second counter-affidavit on 5/11/1993, with false averments pretending of the forgery of his signature.

(28.) The question then is : Whether the averments made in the counter-affidavit dated Nov 5/11/1993, are correct ? In view of the above conclusion, the obvious answer would be that since he knew that the report submitted by Shri Kalyan Rudra, DGP, that the minors boys were wrongfully detained and were in wrongful confinement, the averments made in the counter-affidavit dated 30/10/1993, were obviously false to escape strictures to be passed against him or to avoid prosecution for perjury. He came with the version in the counter-affidavit making Krishna Kumar a scapegoat. If he really had no knowledge of Krishan Kumar forging and signature and he had not directed to file the Carbon Copy of the counter-affidavit earlier, as found earlier, though he was available in the Court, one would expect that he would have sought further time on 1/11/1993, to filehis counter-affidavit which was not done. Therefore, his counter-affidavit dated 5/11/1993, to the effect that the averments made in counter-affidavit dated 30/10/1993, were not to his knowledge is also a false affidavit. Here one more circumstance that could be taken note of is that, as rightly remarked by CBI Officer, whether subordinate officer could be dare enough to fabricate the counter-affidavit to be filed by Ahlawat and forge signature of his superior officer, particularly, in judicial proceedings of this Court and for what gain ? It is highly unbecoming on the part of responsible Superintendent of Police like Ahlawat to play hide and seek game in the judicial proceedings and make use of his subordinates to fabricate false affidavits and give instructions to forge his signature for use in the judicial proceedings. It is true that the affidavit dated 30/10/1993, was attested by a Notary on 30/10/1993, and the telephonic conversation with Ahlawat by Ishwar Singh made on 31/10/1993, was ex facie improbable. The CBI Officer has fairly commented upon the Notary Mr. Bhat of his abdication of duty to have the signatory identified to be the deponent and in allowing the people to sign without proper verification of the identity. When the counter-affidavit was prepared, admittedly, on 30/10/1993, and when the respondent Ahlawat was not in Delhi, it stands to reason that having sent draft through Kartar Singh to Ahlawat, who was camping at Rewari, Ishwar Singh was incharge of this duty. Obviously he had a contract with Ahlawat to know as to what is to be done on the counter-affidavit. It would obviously be only on 31/10/1993, though exact time is not of material consequence, but the fact remains that it must have been signed only after Ahlawat perused the counter-affidavit he had ensured that it was drafted according to his instruction and thereafter he had obviously instructed Ishwar Singh to have his signature fabricated and forged by Krishan Kumar on the carbon copy and Ahlawat deliberately kept back the original counter-affidavit. Carbon Copy after forged signature was admittedly filed in the Court on 31/10/1993, and Ahlawat was present in the lawn of this Court waiting for the result of the case. It would thus be clear that it was attested only on 31/10/1993, and the Notary had obliged them to give the date of his attestation as 30/10/1993.

(29.) The disciplinary action taken against Krishan Kumar and Randhir Singh by Ahlawat is only as a self-serving step. The fact that he did not take any disciplinary action against Ishwar Singh, who was admittedly present at the time of forging the signature of M. S. Ahlawat itself is a positive proof that both Ahlawat and Ishwar Singh were in collaboration and used the subordinate to forge the signature of Ahlawat. It would thus be clear that Ahlawat made further false statement in his second affidavit. (30.) It is seen that the crucial evidence on record is the affidavit of Ms. Indu. the learned Standing Counsel for Haryana and her letters which bear great relevance. They are part of the record and they fully support the stand of Krishan Kumar as found by us earlier. She has no axe to grind against Ahlawat and in fairness Shri Lalit had nothing to comment upon the stand taken by Ms. Indu Malhotra and acted as a responsible and true professional practitioner. The fact that M. S. Ahlawat did not even mildly suggest, let alone violently protest of Ms. Indu Malhotra's filing a counter-affidavit on his behalf is a positive fact that he knew that his counter-affidavit was, as a fact, forged by Krishan Kumar. But he made a false averment in this affidavit which is called "fifth counter-affidavit" that he had objected and informed Ms. Indu Malhotra that he did object to her filing the counter-affidavit on 2/11/1993, and informed her that he had not sworn any counter-affidavit nor was he aware of the averments and the allegations made in the writ petition. These are obviously false averments which induced this Court and also the District Judge to believe that he was not responsible for the forgery of his signature and as to who had committed the forgery was not known to him. These statements are now proved to be false. Therefore, he intentionally gave false affidavit evidence from stage to stage in these judicial proceedings punishable under Section 193 Indian Penal Code

(31.) The question then is : whether he committed contempt in the proceedings of this Court ? Section 2(b) defines "Contempt of Court" to mean any civil or criminal contempt. "Criminal contempt" defined in Section 2(c) means interference with the administration of justice in any other manner. A false or a misleading or a wrong statement deliberately and wilfully made by a party to the proceedings to obtain a favourable order would prejudice or interfere with the due course of judicial proceedings. It is seen that Ahlawat, respondent No.3 to the main writ petition and incharge of the criminal administration, with his connivance caused two minor boys' wrongful detention. He made an averment in the counter-affidavit dated 30/10/1993, that they were not in wrongful detention nor are they taken into custody which was later found to be false. He first used fabricated counter-affidavit, forged by Krishan Kumar in the proceedings to obtain a favourable order. But when he perceived adverse atmosphere to him, he fabricated further false evidence and sought to use an affidavit evidence to show that Krishan Kumar had forged his signature without his knowledge and filed the fabricated document. Thereby he further committed contempt of the judicial process. He has no regard for truth. From stage to stage, he committed contempt of the Court by making false statements. Being a responsible officer, he is required to make truthful statements before the Court, but he made obviously false statements. Thereby, he committed criminal contempt of judicial proceedings of this Court.

(32.) From the above discussion and conclusions the question is : what punishment is to be imposed on Randhir Singh (ASI), Ishwar Singh (SI) and M. S. Ahlawat (Superintendent of Police) ? None of them made any candid admission nor tendered unqualified contrite apology. Police officers, who are supposed to be the so-called disciplined force, have deliberately fabricated false records placed before this Court without any compunction. It is, therefore, of utmost importance to curb this tendency, particularly, when they have the temerity to fabricate the records with false affidavit and place the same before the highest Court of the land. Their depravity of the conduct is writ large. M. S. Ahlawat is unworthy to hold any office of responsibility. Therefore, Randhir Singh (ASI) and Ishwar Singh (SI) shall be punishable under Section 193 Indian Penal Code and accordingly there are convicted and sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for a term of 3 months and 6 months respectively. Ahlawat, the Superintendent of Police, is punishable under Section 193 Indian Penal Code He also committed contempt of the proceedings of this Court punishable under Article 129 of the Constitution. Accordingly, he is convicted and sentenced under Section 193 Indian Penal Code to undergo rigorous imprisonment for a term of one year. He is convicted and sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for a term of 6 months under Article 129 of the Constitution. Both the sentences are directed to run concurrently. Krishan Kumar, Head Constable is exonerated of the charge under Section 193 Indian Penal Code with warning to show exemplary conduct hereafter. His bail bonds are discharged.

(33.) The Director General of Police, Haryana is directed to take the convicts M.S. Ahlawat, Superintendent of Police, Ishwar Singh, Sub-Inspector and Randhir Singh, Assistant Sub-Inspector forth with into custody and have them consigned to Central Jail, Chandigarh to undergo the sentences and submit a report of compliance to the Registry within one week from the date of the receipt of this order.

(34.) We place on record our appreciation for prompt investigation conducted and the report submitted, within the time given, by the CBI Officers.

(35.) Though this unfortunate episode has landed the police officers in conviction, we have no reason to believe that the real offenders in the original crime would be tried and dealt with according to law and these orders will not have any effect on the trial of those cases and must be dealt with according to law.

(36.) The writ petitions stand closed.Order accordingly.

J U D G M E N T

SEN, J.

This case arises out of a notice issued to A K. Sinha Cassyap, Superintendent of Police, Hailakandi to show cause why he should not be held guilty of Contempt of Court. The allegation against the contemner is that a shocking case of police brutality leading to the death of an undertrial prisoner was sought to be covered up by him by an untrue and misleading report sent to this Court followed by a false affidavit.

The Secretary, Hailakandi Bar Association, forwarded to this Court a copy of the resolution passed by the Association at an emergent meetings held on 16th March, 1993 condemning the brutal assault leading to the death of an undertrial prisoner Nurul Haque.

Having regard to the serious nature of the complaint, this Court by an order dated 20th August, 1993 decided to treat the copy of the resolution forwarded by the Secretary, Hailakandi Bar Association as Writ Petition under Article 32 of the Constitution of India. The Director General of Police, State of Assam, was directed to inquire into the matter and send a detailed report in regard to the events leading to the death of Nurul Haque. Pursuant to the said order, the Director General of Police forwarded his report under letter No.C-150/91/107 dated 13th September, 1993. In the letter it was stated that the Director General of police got the matter investigated by the Superintendent of Police, Hailakandi, who prepared a report which was forwarded to this Court along with a medical certificate dated 10th March, 1993 and particulars of medical examination of Nurul Haque done on 11th March, 1993. In the report prepared by the Superintendent of Police, it was specifically stated, "Nurul Haque neither died in police lock-up nor in police custody. He died while in judicial custody as UTP (undertrial prisoner). He was not tortured during the period of police custody."

To say the least, the report was not satisfactory. The inconsistency in the statement of facts made in the report was pointed out in the Order of this Court dated 24th January, 1994. It was noted in the Order that the report of the Superintendent of Police that "the P.M. Report did not indicate any external injury over the dead body" was factually incorrect and misleading. The Superintendent of Police, A.K. Sinha Cassyap, was asked to explain the same by affidavit and he stated the word 'not' had inadvertently appeared for which he tendered apology. This explanation was also found to be unsatisfactory. It was pointed out that deletion of not' will leave the sentence grammatically incorrect. The senior police officers were reminded to show extra care while forwarding their comments to this Court and not to mechanically forward the information collected by their subordinates. The Court had called for the report of the Director General of Police because the Court reposed confidence in the objectivity of a person holding such a high office. It was further noted in the Order that another disturbing feature of the case was that the police had registered the offence under Section 302 I.P.C. against unknown members of the public. The story given out by the police that the members of the public had beaten Nurul Haque before he was apprehended by the police was not borne out by the reaction of the public and also the Bar Association which had taken up the cause of Nurul Haque. Neither the report of medical examination done on 12th March, 1993 nor the laboratory report on the viscera had been forwarded. Having regard to the facts and especially to the fact that the deceased had suffered a fracture, the possibility of the injuries having been caused by the police could not be ruled out altogether. It was ordered:-

"Since the local police at the highest level have taken a stand that the assault on the deceased was by members of the public and not the police after the apprehension of the deceased, it is futile to expect an independent and wholly objective investigation by the State Police. Even otherwise, the people will have little confidence in the investigation no matter how honest and objective the investigation be. In the circumstances, we deem it most appropriate that the investigation of the crime in regard to the murder of the deceased under CR Case No.275/93 and/or F.I.R. No.120/93 should be undertaken by the Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI). In doing so, the CBI will bear in mind the allegation of the wife and other relations of the deceased that he died on account of the beating given to him after his apprehension on 9.3.1993, without being influenced by the fact that in the F.I.R. No.120/93, it is alleged that the assault was by the members of the public. The Registrar General will write a letter to the Director of CBI to take immediate steps to take over the investigation of the crime from the local police and try to complete the same at an early date and bring the real culprits to book. This petition will stand so disposed of."

After the Writ Petition was disposed of on 24th January, 1994. a report was received from Superintendent of police, CBI, SPE Division, Silchar. Along with the report he sent a forwarding letter dated 5th June, 1995 in which he stated that the disdainful role played by Shri A.K. Sinha Cassyap, the then Superintendent of Police, Hailakandi District, was against all tenets of law and morality. He submitted a false/fabricated affidavit/report to the Hon'ble Supreme Court. The falsity of his report submitted to the Hon'ble Supreme Court is evident in every sentence, if not every word of the report of said Shri A.K. Sinha Cassyap, S.P. On consideration of the letter and the report submitted by the Superintendent of Police, CBI, a Show Cause Notice was served upon A.K. Sinha Cassyap for showing cause why he should not be punished for the criminal contempt of this Court for filing a false and fabricated report/affidavit in this Court.

Since the allegation against Shri A.K. Sinha Cassyap is that he had given an untrue report and filed a false affidavit about the death of Nurul Haque to mislead the Court, it is necessary to set out the facts found by the Superintendent of Police, Central Bureau of Investigation, in detail.

On 9th March, 1993 being Tuesday was a market day. It was the month of Ramzan. Nurul Haque, resident of Boalipar under P.S. Hailakandi, was coming back from the market towards his house at about 7.00/7.30 P.M. He was 35 years of age and in good health. A Police party, led by Abdul Hye Choudhury, S.I., arrested Nurul Haque. His house was about 400 yards from the market. As per the version of eye witnesses, Nurul Haque was overpowered by S.I. Abdul Hye Choudhury and party, who were all in plain clothes, and took him into a Police Jeep to Hailakandi Police Station. Although the Police later claimed that Nurul Haque was assaulted by members of the public at the time of the arrest, neither the villagers nor relatives nor market people, who were eye witnesses to the incident, noticed any such assault, nor was there any record of Nurul Haque being treated for injury on 9th March, 1993. On 10th March, 1993, in the early morning, Azizur Rahman, brother of Nurul Haque, his wife and mother went to meet Nurul Haque at Hailakandi Police Station, but were not allowed to meet him. On 11th March, 1993, Azizur Rahman and some other relatives of Nurul Haque went to the Court of the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Hailakandi, where they met Nurul Haque, who told them that he had been brutally beaten up by S.I. Abdul Hye Choudhury, Roy Daroga (Rajan Roy S.I.) and Home Guard Dalim in the lock-up. On 11th March, 1993, Nurul Haque was produced before the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Hailakandi, with a prayer for 72 hours police remand It was also prayed that since Nurul Haque was assaulted by members of the public, medical treatment may be provided to Nurul Haque. The prayer was granted.

Even before this, on 10th March, 1993 Nurul Haque had been taken to Hailakandi Civil Hospital at about 5.30 P M. for treatment. He was brought back to the Police Station after receiving treatment. Dr. M.L. Bhattacherjee, the Medical Officer on duty, examined the patient and recorded his findings in the Emergency Register as follows:- "(i) Abrasion in cheek 1 cm x 1 cm.

This may be caused either by hitting of a blunt object or by falling.

(ii) One abrasion in left leg 2'5 cm x 1 cm. This might be due to fall or some blunt object.

(iii) Abrasion on fore-head, 2 cm x 2 cm. It may be due to the same reason as mentioned earlier.

(iv) Deep tenderness on right leg. The patient was complaining that he was having a severe pain on right leg. As far as he remembers this was just below the medial side. But there was no external injury at the spot."

The patient complained that he had been beaten up by the police. The police said that he was a dacoit and was brought for medical treatment after arrest. The Doctor advised X-Ray, A.P. and lateral view of right Tibia and the Fibula. The Doctor noticed that all the injuries were fresh and had been received within 24 hours. The patient was healthy and could walk freely with a slight limp for pain on the right leg. The patient was treated at Emergency Ward for about 15 minutes and then discharged. As the X-Ray machine of the Civil Hospital was not in order, the Doctor advised the police party to get a X-Ray done outside. There is nothing on record to show that Nurul Haque was given any treatment thereafter nor any X-Ray was done as advised by the Doctor. But, he was interrogated thoroughly. On 11th March, 1993 at 1.15 P.M. Nurul Haque was taken from Hailakandi Police Station to Civil Hospital for treatment. The Doctor on duty, Dr. H.A. Ahmed, recorded the following injuries suffered by the patient: "(i) One lascerated injury present over the left thumb of size 2'5cm x l'5cm x skin deep.

(ii) One abrasion over the left forearm at middle third of size 1 cm x 2 cm.

(iii) One abrasion present over the left arm of size 2'5cm x 2cm.

(iv) One abrasion present over the left leg. Over the tibin of size 2 cm x 2 cm.

(v) One lascerated wound present over the right leg at upper third over tibia of size l'5cm x l'5cm x bone deep and causing severe tenderness."

At 2.15 P.M. Nurul Haque was brought back from the hospital and kept in the lock-up of the Police Station. He was produced before the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Hailakandi, on 12th March, 1993, with a prayer for holding Test Identification Parade. The prayer was allowed. In the order of the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Hailakandi, it was recorded that Nurul Haque had been given medical treatment and that the jail doctor should provide treatment to Nurul Haque. The jail doctor checked Nurul Haque and found that he was suffering from multiple injuries and due to lack of facilities he referred the patient to Civil Hospital, Hailakandi. At 6.45 P.M. Nurul Haque was once again brought to Hailakandi Civil Hospital. He was taken to the Casualty Ward. In the Casualty Ward Register it was recorded that he was suffering from multiple injury. Dr. Tapan Kumar Bhattacharjee was the doctor on duty. However, later on an extra word 'old' was inserted in between 'multiple' and 'injury' to give a wrong impression about the period when the injuries were suffered. He was admitted at 7.20 P.M. in the Indoor Ward. In the treatment report, the time of the injury was apparently corrected from 12 hours to 40 hours. It was recorded that the patient was healthy and fully conscious and the following injuries were found:-

"(i) One lascerated injury in left thumb.

(ii) One abrasion over left forum at middle third.

(iii) One abrasion over left arm.

(v) One lascerated injury present in the right leg upper third to Tibia. And the all injuries were found infected and there was no record/report available for having conducted X-ray examination."

The patient received some treatment but he collapsed on 13th March, 1993 at 5.25 A.M. Dr. Gautam Pal, who was on duty, noted that the patient was deeply unconscious, pulse rate rapid and thready, blood pressure could not be felt. The patient was injected Decadrum, a life saving drug. He was put on oxygen and cardiac massage was also given. At 5.30 A.M. Nurul Haque died.

The Superintendent of Hailakandi Civil Hospital informed the Superintendent, District Jail, Hailakandi, that the undertrial prisioner Nurul Haque admitted on the previous day with the multiple injuries had expired at 5.30 A.M. on 13th March, 1993 due to Cardio Respiratory failure as per hospital record. The death was also recorded in the Undertrial Prisioners Register of Hailakandi District Jail. The deadbody was sent for burial. There was no record of intimating family members.

Hailakandi police registered a case under Section 302 IPC in respect of the death of Nurul Haque against the members of the public on the basis of complaint filed by S.I. A.H. Choudhury. The case was to be investigated by Dinanda Phukan. O.C. The inquest was conducted by N. Borborah, S.I., Hailakandi Police Station on 13th March, 1993 in the Civil Hospital. There were eight injuries in the lower portion of the right hand, in the right hand joint etc. There was swelling and lasceration in the right hand and also the right side of the waist. There was swelling on the right and left knees.

On 14th March, 1993 the deadbody was sent to Hailakandi Civil Hospital for post mortem examination which was done by Dr. S.R. Roy who was only an L.M.F. doctor and not qualified for the job. According to his finding the injuries were ante mortem in nature and the death was due to Mayocardial Infraction with heart failure.

The deadbody was collected and sent to family members of Nurul Haque. It was refused by the family members. The Superintendent of District Jail, Hailakandi, wrote to the C.J.M., Hailakandi, that as the relatives of the deceased were unwilling to take the deadbody for burial, he may be allowed to dispose of the deadbody as per Jail Manual Rule and Muslim Religious Rite. The prayer was allowed by the C.J.M.

On 15th March, 1993, the Superintended of District Jail, Hailakandi, requested the C.J.M. that no relative of the deceased had come to take the deadbody from the Civil Hospital for burial. The deadbody was getting decomposed gradually and bad smell coming out from it. A prayer was made for disposal of the body as per Muslim Religious Rites. The prayer was allowed. The wife of the deceased, Fatema Begum, filed an application for recalling the order and to pass order for the post mortem examination of the deadbody by a medical team in Silchar Medical College. The C.J.M. called for a report from the Jail Superintendent about the. disposal of the deadbody immediately. The Superintendent reported that the deadbody was sent to Government land near Basic Training Centre, but the public of that area strongly objected to the burial of the deadbody. The deadbody was lying in front of Police Station Hailekandi at the time when the matter was reported.

The C.J.M. thereupon passed an order on the application of the widow of Nurul Haque and noted the fact that a number of lawyers appeared in his court and prayed for further post mortem examination at Silchar Medical College. The C.J.M. thereupon directed the deadbody to be sent to Silchar for further medical examination. The wife of the deceased was directed to accompany the deadbody and take delivery of the deadbody after post mortem was over. On 16th March, 1993, the deadbody was brought to Silchar Medical College and the post mortem was conducted by Dr. B.K. Barah carried out the post mortem examination and sent the viscera for further examination. In the report of the Superintendent of Police, CBI, it has been stated:-

" ....an accused who was arrested in healthy condition was a dead person at the hands of police and the attending doctors. They neither gave him food nor proper medical treatment throughout this period.

In the C.D. of the I. O. nowhere it is mentioned that he was provided with even a glass of water, less to say of food. Despite repeated suggestion of the doctor to get him X-rayed, no X-ray was got done though his right leg was fractured. The inevitable result was the death of deceased Nurul Haque at the hand of the Police to which all others including doctors and the Magistracy lent support. The cause of death was ostensibly shown as Cardiac Respiratory Failure which was not a correct fact The deceased had no history of Cardiac problem, nor any ECG of him was got done during his police custody nor he had ever complained about this problem to the police However, anything could have happened to a person subjected to physical torture, shock and lack of sleep, lack of food and having been kept in the lock-up for last 72 hours."

Commenting on the report submitted by the Superintendent of Police, Hailakandi, to this Court, it has been stated:- "The report submitted by the S.P., Hailakandi, is full of inaccuracies, lack of evidence and false instances some of which are as follows:-

1) Para 1, page-l of the report says that Bheru Mia, Akkadas Ali and others have confessed that under the leadersbip of Nurul Haque they committed 5/6 dacoities cannot be proved and name of Nurul Haque does not appear in any of the charge sheet or FIR of the cases The above mentioned persons were examined by the I.O. and by the Hon'ble Court and they have not stated the above allegation.

2) The allegation of the S.P. that Nurul Haque committed many dacoity and rape in the locality and he was beaten by the members of the public do not have any evidence to support it. That he was arrested on 10.3.93 is also wrong and clearly shows wrongful confinement, The C.J.M., Hailakandi, allowed police custody for 72 hours and not 24 hours. The statement of the SP that Nurul Haque was again forwarded to the Court on 12.3.93 after completing his interrogation is slightly mistaken because Nurul Haque was reproduced before the Court only to conduct TIP for which the C.J.M. Hailakandi fixed the date on 15.3.93. The report of the SP that the UTP was referred to Hailakandi Civil Hospital on making complaint of chest pain is also false

3) The statement of the S.P. that the P.M. report revealed that death was due to Myocardial Infection with Heart Failure and that the P.M. report did not indicate any external injury over the dead body is also false as mentioned earlier.

4) That the re-post mortem examination is conducted by a team of doctor and that no opinion could be given because of highly decomposed state is also wrong/inaccurate. In fact the re- post mortem examination was conducted by Police Surgeon and Mediocolegal Expert Professor B.K. Borah of S.M.C.

5) On para 1 page 3 the S.P. has written that the viscera was preserved and sent to F.S.L. for chemical examination is not correct because it was never sent to S.F.S.L. It was kept at P.S. Hailakandi only. Recently, it has been traced at Police Station, Hailakandi, itself and seized by CBI and now it has been sent to C.F.S.L. for opinion."

In reply to the notice why action should not be taken for contempt of court against him, A.K. Sinha Cassyap has stated that he never intended to disobey or defy an order of the Court or to mislead the Court. He has tendered his unconditional and unqualified apology for this. It has been stated that he was in a shocked state of mind because of certain developments, particulars of which have been stated in the affidavit. He has referred to a final report of the CBI dated 24/25.8.1995 in which prosecution has been recommended against certain police officers, but so far as A.K. Sinha Cassyap is concerned, only recommendation is conveying of displeasure by Government. It has been stated by A.K. Sinha Cassyap that he was on leave at the time when this incident took place. When he joined service, he got only 48 hours time to make his report. He has made his report on the basis of the material available. But A.K. Sinha Cassyap has not only sent a report but has also filed an affidavit pursuant to the order of this Court when the report was found unsatisfactory. He had ample time to bring the facts to the notice of the Court by that affidavit. There is no explanation for the reason why he did not bring the true facts to the notice of the Court which was his duty to do,

It is true that the CBI Report has not recommended any criminal proceeding against him. But the allegation against A.K. Sinha Cassyap is that he suppressed true facts from the Court and gave a false report to mislead the Court as to what was the real cause of the death of Nurul Haque. It has been stated by A.K. Sinha Cassyap that he had no personal knowledge of the sequence of events from apprehension to the death of Nurul Haque. He had returned from leave and had resumed duty only in the afternoon on 16th March, 1993 when Nurul Haque had already died. This explanation on the face of it is not acceptable. As a responsible police officer it was his duty to make proper investigation and give a report to this Court. Assuming within the time frame of 48 hours he could not prepare a report properly, he should have stated that in his report. He could have even prayed for longer time for furnishing a report. But the allegation against him is that he deliberately gave a false report. In the affidavit filed by him he had ample opportunity to make good the lapses made in the report and bring the true facts to the notice of the Court which he did not do. The affidavit filed by A.K. Sinha Cassyap in this Court is dated 26th November, 1993 pursuant to the direction given by this Court on 29th October, 1993. As a responsible police officer it was his duty to bring to the notice of the Court the police brutality that had taken place and the false documentation that was prepared by the various police personnel to suppress the truth and to give a misleading picture. The glaring inconsistencies in the affidavit filed by him have been pointed out in the report of the CBI, particulars of which have been set out hereinabove. A.K. Sinha Cassyap has not dealt with those particulars. He has only stated that that was not the final report of the CBI. The final report does not contain anything to the contrary to what has been stated in the report submitted to this Court. In our view, A.K. Sinha Cassyap, the contemner, has committed gross contempt of court by trying to mislead the Court as to the cause of death of Nurul Haque. He has also tried to cover up the excesses committed by the police which brought about the death of Nurul Haque by narrating untrue facts and giving false particulars.

We, therefore, hold that A.K. Sinha Cassyap is guilty of contempt of this Court. The belated apology given by A.K. Sinha Cassyap cannot be accepted because it has not been given in good faith. He has tendered this apology only after his report was found out to be misleading and his affidavit was found to be false. He had unnecessarily highlighted in his report that Nurul Haque was a dacoit for which there was no clear evidence. He had stated in his report categorically after reciting some misleading fact, "From the above facts and circumstances, it is clear that, Dacoit, Nurul Haque neither died in Police Lock-up nor in Police custody. He died while in Judicial custody as UTP. He was not tortured during the period of Police custody."

A.K. Sinha Cassyap has stated that he had to make his report on the basis of the records of the case as he had no personal knowledge of this case. But the records reveal that the particulars of injuries noted by Dr. H.A. Ahmed on 10th March, 1993 at 1.50 P.M. were more than what were noticed by Dr. M L Bhattacharya on 10th March, 1993 at 5.30 P.M. This can only mean that more injuries had been inflicted upon Narul Haque after he was examined by Dr. M L Bhattacharya. It appears that the contemner has ignored even tell-tale evidence available on the record.

We are of the view that this was a highly irresponsible report regardless of the truth and also against the records of the case. In spite of the nature of the injuries detected and reported from time to time by Various doctors who examined Nurul Haque after his apprehension by the police and regardless of the recommendations for X-ray examination of the injured leg, which was never done, the contemner has boldly reported to this Court that Nurul Haque was not tortured during the period of police custody. His report begins under the heading "Death of veteran dacoit Nurul Haque" and ends with the summing up "Dacoit, Nurul Haque died neither in Police Lock-up nor in Police Custody". This goes to show that the contemner was trying to highlight the fact that Nurul Haque was a veteran dacoit and possibly deserved the treatment that he got at the hand of the police. The CBI report indicates that there is no record of any conviction of Nurul Haque in any dacoity case. Not only that the story of saving Nurul Haque from public wrath by the police party on 9th March, 1993 is also not borne out by facts. He was not taken for medical examination on the 5th March immediately after the alleged assault by the members of the public. He was taken to Hailakandi Civil Hospital at 5.30 p.m. on 10th March when various fresh injuries were noted on his body by the doctors. No case of assault was also registered after rescuing Nurul Haque from alleged public wrath. This case was made only after Narul Haque's death. The report from the very beginning has tried to mislead the Court as to the cause of death of Nurul Haque and the alleged events that led to his apprehension by the police. The emphasis that he was a veteran dacoit was also obviously with a view to create prejudice. Far from trying to help the Court to do justice in this case, his report has tried to mislead the Court and prevent the Court from finding out the truth about the allegations made by the Bar Association of Hailakandi.

We, therefore, hold that the contemner deliberately forwarded an inaccurate report with a view to misleading this Court and thereby interfered with the due course of justice by attempting to obstruct this Court from reaching a correct conclusion. In the facts and circumstances of the case, we cannot accept his apology and hereby reject it. We hold him guilty of contempt under Article 129 of the Constitution read with Section 12 of the Contempt of Courts Act, 1971. Having regard to the gravity of the case, we sentence the contemner A.K. Sinha Cassyap to undergo simple imprisonment for a term of three months. The contempt rule is disposed of finally as above.

The Director General of Police, Assam is directed to ensure that this order is carried out forthwith and the contemner is taken into custody and imprisoned to serve the sentence. The Registrar General will communicate this order to Director General of Police, Assam, with a direction to report compliance to him.

In our considered opinion the report is a fair one and deserves to be accepted. It is accordingly accepted.

(4.) The report in no uncertain terms indicts the police. It inter alia states:"On a careful consideration of all the evidence on record in the light of the surrounding circumstances I accept the claim of Nidhi that she was tortured by the police officers on 24th,25th and 26/07/1993. On 24-7-93she was pressurised by J.C. Upadhyay S.H.O., Sukhpal Singh, S.S.I. and Narendrapal Singh S.I. and threatened and commended to implicate her husband and his family in a case of abduction and forcible marriage thereafter. She was threatened with physical violence to her husband and to herself in case of her default and when she refused her family members were brought in to pressurise her into implicating them. On 25/07/1993 she was jolted out of sleep by Sukhpal singh S.S.I and made to remain standing for a long time. She was abused and jostled and threatened by J. C. Upadhyay, Sukhpal Singh and Narendrapal singh with injury to her body if she did not write down the dictated note. Sukhpal Singh SSI even assaulted her on her leg with Danda and poked in her stomach. She did not yield to the pressure. Then, on 26-7-1993 she was given fifty abuses and threatened by J.C. Upadhyay and Sukhpal Singh for writing a dictated note. She was pushed and jostled by them both.Sukhpal Singh S.S.I hit her with a Danda on her leg and made threatening gestures aiming his Danda on her head. Ultimately they both succeded in making her write a note dictated by them whose contents were those which were incorporated by the investigating officer in his case diary as her statement under Section 161, Cr.P.C. Thereafter on 27th July she was purported to be taken by K.C. Tyagi to the Court for the recording of her statement under section 164, Cr.P.C. but was taken by J.C. Upadhyay, S.H.O. to Chauki Chauraha Police outpost and kept there and brought to the police station and kept there. She was despatched from the Nari Niketan only at 5 P.M. when A.C.J.M. II had passed orders for Nidhi being kept at Nari Niketan Bareilly K.C. Tyagi I.O. was under obligation to take her from Court to Nari Niketan straightway without any delay whatsoever but she was brought back to the police station and lodged there and only afterwards she was despatched from there for Nari Niketan. Then on 29-7-93 while being taken to the Court for the recording of her statement under section 164, Cr. P.C. Nidhi was brought from Nari Niketan to the police station and there J.C. Upadhyay S.H.O. commanded her to speak that wick he had asked her to speak and if she did not make her statement accordingly and went with Charajit Singh thenShe would not be spared by him and he would ensure that she underwent miserable life time. He further told her that if she cultivated enmity with the police its consequences were only too obvious. So the torture extended up till 29-7-93. Torture is not merely physical, there may be mental torture and physchological torture calculated to create fright and submission to the demands or commands. When the threats proceed from a person in Authority and that too by a police officer the mental torture caused by it is even more grave."

(5.) This clearly brings out not only high-hadedness of the police but also uncivilised behaviour on their part. It is difficult to understand why Sukhpal Singh, S.S.I. assaulted Nidhi on her leg with Danda and poked it in her stomach. Where was the need to threaten her? As rightly pointed out in the report that torture is not merely physical but may even consit of mental and psychological torture calculated to create fright to make her submit to the demands of the police?

(6.) A further reading of the report shows:

(i) fabrication; (ii) illegal arrest;

(iii) without personal knowledge or credible information that the arrested persons were involved in a congnizable offence; and (iv) illegality of verbal order of arrest not contemplated under Section 55, Cr. P.C.

This again is a blatant abuse of law.

(7.) . The report clearly holds Narendrapal Singh S.I. of incdulging in illegal arrest and detention in arresting Charanjit Singh Bagga and Rajinder Singh Bagga. Further, both of them were tortured as they were given Danda blows at police station on 23/07/1993. The report blames J.C. Upadhyay, S.H.O.and K.C. Tyagi, I.O. for the wrongful detention of Nidhi. It cocludes:

"The detention of a married woman in custody who is not an accused on the pretext of her being a victim of abduction and rape which never was to her knowledge and to the knowledge of the police officers concerned aforesaid is itself a great mental torture for her which cannot be compensated later but here we have found that she was tortured otherwise also by threats of violence to her and to her husband and his family and was given physical violence calculated to instil fear in her mind and compel her to yield and to abondon her marriage with Charanjit Singh Bagga which had been duly performed in Arya Samaj Bhoor and which had been duly performed in Arya Samaj Bhoor and which had been duly registered inthe officer of Registrar of Hindu Marriages under the U.P. Hindu Marriage Registration Rules, 1973 framed by the Governor in exercise of the powers conferred by section 8 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 (Act No. xxv of 1995). She was made to write a statement as commanded by J.C. Upadhyay S.H.O. and Sukhpal Singh SSI on 26-7-93 which was reproduced by the I.O. in the case diary as her statement under Section 161, Cr.P.C. The physical and mental torture was given to Nidhi on 24/07/1993 and 25/07/1993 by J.C. Upadhyay S.H.O., Sukhpal Singh and SSI and Narendrapal Singh S.I. but on 26-7-93 it was done by only J.C. Upadhyay S.H.O. and Sukhpal Singh and there was no participation of K.C. Tyagi I.O. in the torture and harassment dated 24-7-93, 25-7-93 and 26-7-93."

(8.) On a perusal of all the above, we are really pained to note that such things should happen in a country which is still governed by the rule of law. We cannot but express our strong displeasure and disapproval of the conduct of the concerned police officers. Therefore, we issue the following directions:

1. The State of Uttar Pradesh will take immediate steps to launch prosecution against all the police officers involved in this sordid affair.

2. The State shall pay a compensation of Rs. 10,000 to Nidhi, Rs. 10,000.00 to Charanjit Singh Bagga and Rs. 5,000.00 to each of the other persons who were illegally detained and humiliated for no fault of theirs. Time for making payment will be three months from the date of this Judgement. Upon such payment it will be open to the State to recover personally the amount of compensation from the concerned police officers.

(9.) Writ Petition shall stand disposed of in view of the above terms. Order accordingly.

Criminal Writ Petition 40 of 1999 Of Jan 14,2005

Constitution of India – Art. 21 – Torture and harassment by police officer – Compensation of Rs. 2 Lacs - A boy was summoned by Police – The investigation was going to be done without registering of offence –

The boy did not return to home – National Human Rights Commission called enquiry from S.P. of Amravati Gramin – S.P. filed enquiry report and try to defend guilty police officers – The commission did not find police version convincing – Commission ordered a sopot enquiry on 5/03/1998 – During enquiry commission recorded finding that without registering the offence at the police station the boy was called at the police station which is illegal and there was a manipulation in the entries recorded in the station diary – High Court ordered investigation by C.I.D. by officer not below the rank of S.P. – Held that – Though the boy was picked up by police no ground of arrest were informed to him and instead doubtful entries have been made in the stationdiary to show that boy absconded from the police station

"ON careful analysis of the facts and circumstances brought on record, what we find is that it is not disputed that the boy Sunil was picked up from the house of his grand mother and was brought to the police station and though actually he was arrested, no grounds of arrest were informed to him and instead doubtful entries have been made in the station diary to show that the boy had absconded from the police station. It would clearly reveal that Sunil was physically handicapped and could not have run away from the police station. It is relevant to note that though Shah Noorbi had lodged oral report with respondent no. 4, the same was not reduced into writing and no offence was registered against the boy Sunil. The station dairy entry at Sr. No. 19 recorded on 16-3-1996 would clearly show that Sunil was found missing from the police station during interrogation. Sunil was arrested without following the guidelines issued by the Hon'ble supreme Court in D. K. Basu' case and when a missing report has been lodged by PSI tayade on 25-3-1996 after ten days, it will have to be presumed that the respondents are responsible for causing disappearance of the boy and it is just possible that the boy must have been beaten by the police and that the boy must have died while he was in police custody and that his body has been disposed of. The circumstances of last seen coupled with the fact that the whereabouts of the body are not known to anybody, would show that the police personnel wanted to hush up the matter by registering a false missing report on 25-3-1996 after ten days of the incident. In such circumstances, we are of the considered opinion that the respondents are liable to pay compensation."

JUDGEMENT

(1.) INVOKING the jurisdiction of this Court under Article 226 of the Constitution of India, the petitioner filed criminal Writ Petition No. 111/96 claiming writ of Habeas Corpus for production of his son Sunil Shendre aged about 14 years which was disposed of by this Court vide order dated 06-12-1996. The said order reads as under :

"the petitioner claimed a writ of habeas corpus for production of his son Sunil shendre, aged about 14 years. The allegations were that the boy was taken in custody by the Police Authorities in connection with some theft on 15-3-1996 and as such, they are liable to produce the boy. After notice, it is revealed that the boy was never taken in custody. He was called for interrogation and thereafter he was asked to go home. The boy is missing since then according to parties. To trace the boy, this Court on 21-8-1996 directed the respondent Authorities to give due publicity about missing of the boy. Shri. Naik, the learned 'a' panel counsel appearing for the respondents, made a statement that in compliance of the order, due publicity has been given. Further, superintendent of Police, Amravati filed an affidavit and made a statement that all possible efforts are being made to trace the boy. In view of this, the grievance of the petitioner does not survive. We, therefore, dispose of the petition. However, we further direct that the Authorities shall continue their venture to trace the boy vigorously."

(2.) THE boy could not be traced and, therefore, the petitioner has filed the present criminal writ petition claiming compensation of Rs. Three lacs on the contentions that on 15-3-1996 one Shah Noorbi had lodged oral report with Shri. Tayade. Police Station officer, Police Station Mangrul Dastgir respondent no. 4 alleging therein that the son of the petitioner by name Sunil, aged about 14 years, had committed theft of Rs. Three thousand from her shop. According to the petitioner, his son Sunil was physically handicapped and was suffering from polio and the Civil Surgeon had issued a certificate dated 4-5-1991 to that effect. It is contended that after receiving the oral report from Shah noorbi, on 15-3-1996 itself the police personnel arrived at the house of the petitioner and made enquiries regarding the whereabouts of Sunil who was not present at the home as he had gone to Arvi at the house of his uncle. The police personnel slapped the petitioner and directed him to produce his son at the police station and so saying they left. Thereafter the petitioner had gone to Arvi and brought back his son Sunil in the night of 15-3-1996 and informed the respondent no. 4 about the arrival of Sunil. On 16-3-1996 the police personnel arrived at the house of venutai the grandmother of Sunil where he was allowed to stay by his father. The police personnel started mercilessly thrashing Sunil outside the house and thereafter the boy was taken away by the police personnel. The boy was subjected to physical torture at the police station. On 16-3-1996 at about 2-00 p. m. two police constables by name Mate and Gaikwad arrived at the house of the petitioner and informed him that he was called by respondent no. 4 and he should accompany them to the police station. The petitioner accordingly went to the police station where respondent no. 4 was present. The latter informed the petitioner that Shah Noorbi has lodged a complaint against his son Sunil in respect of theft and accordingly at about 7-00 a. m. Sunil was brought to the police station and he has absconded and is untraceable. Thereafter respondent no. 4 offered cold drink to the petitioner and told him that the Police Station officer would pay him Rs. 1,000/- and he should bring the boy to the police station. The petitioner suspected that there was something fishy and, therefore, asked the respondent no. 4 to take his report and register the first information report about missing of the boy who was physically handicapped and was unable to walk or run away from the police station. The respondent no. 4 or the police personnel did not pay any heed to his request and on the contrary threatened him that he should not disclose anything to the people in the village. The petitioner then left the police station in a disturbed state of mind. He tried to trace out the boy but was unsuccessful and, therefore, on 28-3-1996 he made a written complaint to the District Superintendent of police, Camp at Amravati.

(3.) THEREAFTER the petitioner filed criminal writ petition No. 1 11/96 which came to be disposed of by this Court vide order dated 06-12-1996. Thereafter the petitioner had lodged a complaint before the National Human rights Commission, New Delhi, which was registered as case No. 88/18/97-98. The national Human Rights Commission held enquiry and recorded a finding on 26-8-1998 that without registering the offence at the police station the boy Sunil was called at the police station and there was a manipulation in the entries recorded in the station diary.

(4.) THIS Court had issued directions from time of time and even on 05-12-2002, this Court passed the following order :

"till today, the State has not been able to trace out Sunil Baliram Shendre who was produced by his mother in the police station and since then he is missing. According to the version of the police officials to whom the said Sunil Shendre was surrendered, he has run away from the police custody. After the matter was disposed of by the High Court, it appears that the petitioner approached the National human Rights Commission. The National human Rights Commission has made an independent enquiry in the matter and in the proceedings dated 26-8-1998, has made certain observations pursuant to which this proceedings have been initiated. In our opinion, the matter requires to be investigated by an independent agency so as to assist Court in arriving at a proper conclusion. Therefore, in the facts and circumstances, we direct the State to hand over the investigation to State C. I. D. and the same is to be done by an officer not below the rank of Superintendent of Police, and submits the report to this Court within a period of six weeks. After examining the report and hearing the counsel for the parties, we will take a decision as to what further steps are required to be taken in the matter. S. O. six weeks. Copy of the order be furnished to the learned A. P. P. for being communicated to the Principal Secretary, Home, for issuing necessary orders in accordance with the directions of this Court to the State C. I. D. "

(5.) THE respondent no. 2 contended that there was no manipulation at all in the entries recorded in the station diary. On interrogation Sunil admitted to have committed theft and he informed the police that he has lost all the money while he had slept at Arvi.

He was called in the police station and was given an understanding that he should not indulge in the theft. On asking sunil informed that he was studying in VIIth standard and believing his words the P. S. O. thought that Sunil was a minor. However on enquiry from the school the date of birth of sunil was found to be 30-7-1980 and, therefore, his age was 15 years. 7 months and 16 days as on 16-3-1996. It is contended that the finding recorded by the National Human rights Commission is absolutely erroneous and the entry recorded in the station diary would clearly reveal that Sunil was allowed to leave the police station as no offence was registered against him and, therefore, none of the police officials are responsible for disappearance of Sunil. Though sincere effort have been made to trace out Sunil, they were unsuccessful.

(6.) MR. Sambre, learned counsel, for the petitioner contended that the station diary entry recorded at Sr. No. 19 at 12-35 on 16-3-1996 is a manipulated entry and it is admitted position that Sunil was arrested without registering the offence against him and he was mercilessly beaten in the police station. He contended that the Entry No. 19 itself shows that Sunil was brought to the police station, but there appears to be manipulation in the said entry wherein a show has been made that the boy was allowed to go home after the interrogation was over. He contended that the findings of National Human Rights commission would clearly reveal that the respondents have violated the guidelines given by the Apex Court in the case of D. K. Basu vs. State of W. B. reported in (1997)1 SCC 416. He contended that in absence of any plausible explanation from the respondents it will have to be presumed that the respondents are responsible for the death of Sunil while he was in the police custody and, therefore, the petitioner is entitled to compensation of rs. Three lacs. In support of these submissions, he relied on the Division Bench decision of this Court in Shobha wd/o Anil londase Vs. State of Maharashtra reported in 2003 (4) Mh. LJ. 436 : [2003 ALL MR (Cri) 1491] and also on the decision of Single bench of Delhi High Court in Smt. Geeta Vs. Lt. Governor and others reported in 1999 cri. LJ. 1099.

(7.) THE learned counsel for the respondents contended that the findings of national Human Rights Commission are erroneous and by no stretch of imagination the respondents/police officials could be held responsible for the alleged custodial death especially when the boy Sunil is still missing and in spite of vigorous search could not be found.

(8.) WE have given thoughtful consideration to the contentions canvassed by the learned counsel for the parties. It is not in dispute that the proceedings were started upon a complaint of the petitioner before the national Human Rights Commission which were concluded on 26-8-1998 wherein it has been mentioned as under :

"pursuant to the Commission's directions, the Investigation Division sought and obtained a report from Supdt. of Police, amravati, Maharashtra and stated as follows: report brings out that on 16-3-96 (not 16-3-97) as mentioned in the case file, one shahanoorbi lodged an oral complaint with ps Mangrul, regarding theft of grocery items worth Rs. 3,000/- in which she suspected Sunil Baliram Shendre (aged 14 years). She however, did not lodge any written complaint to PS. The suspected boy agreed to return stolen property in the presence of his mother. The police did not pursue with the charge on the assurances that he will not indulge in such an offence in future. According to the police, compromise was worked out primarily keeping in view of the tender age of the boy. An entry was made in the Station dairy on the same day i. e. 16-3-96. In the evening at about 1700 hrs. the father of Sunil came to PS and he said that his son has run away from the home. Entry was made in the register. Police parties were deployed but he could not be located. His photograph was published in several newspapers but till date he is not traceable. Baliram Shendre, father of missing boy also filed a Habeas Corpus petition No. 111/ 96 dated 19-6-96, before the Nagpur Bench of the Bombay High Court. Search parties were sent to various places like Bombay, nagpur and Pune where some of the boy's relatives are staying. The High Court discharged the Habeas Corpus petition on not finding any substance in the allegations. against the police. According to the police, Sunil Shendre is a spoiled boy, who had run away from his home few years back. He was caught by Bhusawal police and was kept in remand Home and then handed cover to his parents. "

As the Commission did not find police version convincing, the Commission ordered a spot inquiry on 5-3-1998. Inspector K. K. Arora and Shri. R. K. Sharma from the Commission's investigation Division conducted a spot -inquiry and submitted a report which stated :

"enquiry reveals that the complainant hails from the backward community and is engaged as a casual labour. His 14 years old disabled son Sunil Shendre was hauled up by the police on the basis of an informal complaint made by Smt. Shanoor Bee, a neighbour, concerning a theft in her house. Police party led by PSI Tayade went to the house of Shendre and since the boy was not available, they had threatened them to produce him in the P. S. On 16-3-96, the complainant's wife produced Sunil before st Tayade and came to home. It is quite likely that the boy may have been beaten by the police. Later in the afternoon, the police party again came to the residence and asked for the whereabouts of the boy sunil as he was not traceable in the PS. (a) No formal report of FIR with regard to the theft was lodged by PSI. A. B. Tayade of PS Mangrul on 15-3-96, when the matter was reported to him, hence calling the boy sunil was blatantly an act of illegality. (b) The GD has been manipulated, as entry at serial No. 19 dated 16-3-96 written by the SHO shows that Sunil was found missing from the Police Station during questioning (c) Petitioner has expressed his grave fear and apprehension that his son, who was handicapped, was not in a position to escape from the Police Station and it is quite likely due to assault, he may have died in police custody and his body has been disposed of. (d) Missing report was lodged by PSI tayade on 25-3-96 after 10 days of delay for which he has no plausible explanation to offer. The police action to call Sunil Shendre without any complaint or registration of fir is a gross illegality and they are answerable for the boy's disappearance. What is surprising is that no action has been taken against any of the police officials even when it is being admitted that the boy was called to the PS for questioning in a theft matter. PSI Tayade and the other policemen cannot be absolved themselves for the disappearance. "

(9.) IN D. K. Basu's case - (1997)1 scc 416, cited supra, the Apex Court has in para no. 35 issued the following guidelines to be followed in case of arrest or detention till legal provisions are made in that behalf as preventive measures :

"we, therefore, consider it appropriate to issue the following requirements to be followed in all cases of arrest or detention till legal provisions are made in that behalf as preventive measures : (1) The police personnel carrying out the arrest and handling the interrogation of the arrestee should bear accurate, visible and clear identification and name tags with their designations. The particulars of all such police personnel who handle interrogation of arrestee must be recorded in a register. (2) That the police officer carrying out the arrest of the arrestee shall prepare a memo of arrest at the time of arrest and such memo shall be attested by at least one witness, who may either be a member of the family of the arrestee or a respectable person of the locality from where the arrest is made. It shall also be countersigned by the arrestee and shall contain the time and date of arrest. (3) A person who has been arrested or detained and is being held in custody in a police station or interrogation centre or other lock-up, shall be entitled to have one friend or relative or other person known to him or having interest in his welfare being informed, as soon as practicable, that he has been arrested and is being detained at the particular place, unless the attesting witness of the memo of arrest is himself such a friend or relative of the arrestee. (4) The time, place of arrest and venue of custody of an arrestee must be notified by the police where the next friend or relative of the arrestee lives outside the district or town through the Legal Aid Organisation in the District and the police station of the area concerned telegraphically within a period of 8 to 12 hours after the arrest. (5) The person arrested must be made aware of this right to have someone informed of his arrest or detention as soon as he is put under arrest or is detained. (6) An entry must be made in the diary at the place of detention regrading the arrest of the person which shall also disclose the name of the next friend of the person who has been informed of the arrest and the names and particulars of the police officials in whose custody the arrestee is. (7) The arrestee should, where he so requests, be also examined at the time of his arrest and major and minor injuries, if any present on his/her body, must be recorded at that time. The "inspection memo" must be signed both by the arrestee and the police officer effecting the arrest and its copy provided to the arrestee. (8) The arrestee should be subjected to medicalexamination by a trained doctor every 48 hours during his detention in custody by a doctor on the panel of approved doctors appointed by Director. Health Services of the State or Union territory concerned. Director, Health services should prepare such a panel of all tehsils and districts as well. (9) Copies of all the documents including the memo of arrest, referred to above, should be sent to the Illaqa Magistrate for his record. (10) The arrestee may be permitted to meet his lawyer during interrogation, though not throughout the interrogation. (11) A police control room should be provided at all district and State headquarters, where information regarding the arrest and the place of custody of the arrestee shall be communicated by the officer causing the arrest, within 12 hours of effecting the arrest and at the police control room it should be displayed on conspicuous notice board. "

(10.) IN Shobha Vs. State of maharashtra - 2003 (4) Mh. LJ. 436 : [2003 all MR (Cri) 1491], cited supra, this Court awarded compensation of Rs. Three lacs to the legal heirs of the deceased victim and relied on the observations made in the case of D. K. Basu, cited supra. Those observations are as under:

"as regards the torture and custodial violence, the Apex Court in D. K. Basu vs. State of W. B. Reported in (1997)1 scc 416 has clearly ruled thus : "torture" has not been defined in the constitution or in other penal laws. "torture" of a human being by another human being is essentially an instrument to impose the will of the "strong" over the "weak" by suffering. The word torture today has become synonymous with the darker side of human civilisation. "custodial torture" is a naked violation of human dignity and degradation which destroys, to a very large extent, the individual personality. It is a calculated assault on human dignity and whenever human dignity is wounded, civilisation takes a step backward flag of humanity must on each such occasion by half-mast. In all custodial crimes what is of real concern is not only infliction of body pain but the mental agony which a person undergoes within the four walls of police station of lock-up. Whether it is physical assault or rape in police custody, the extent of trauma, a person experiences is beyond the purview of law. "custodial violence" and abuse of police power is not only peculiar to this country, but it iswidespread. It has been the concern of international community because the problem is universal and the challenge is almost global. The Universal declaration of Human Rights in 1948, which marked the emergence of a worldwide trend of protection and guarantee of certain basic human rights, stipulates in Article 5 that: "no one shall be subject to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. " despite the pious declaration the crime continues unabated, though every civilised nation shows its concern and takes steps for its eradication. Custodial death is perhaps one of the worst crimes in a civilised society governed by the rule of law The rights inherent in Articles 21 and 22 (1) of the Constitution require to be zealously and scrupulously protected. We cannot wish away the problem. Any form of torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment would fall within the inhibition of Article 21 of the Constitution, whether it occurs during investigation, interrogation or otherwise. It the functionaries of the government become law-breakers, it is bound to breed contempt for law and would encourage lawlessness and every man would have the tendency to become law upto himself thereby leading to anarchanism. No civilised nation can permit that to happen. Does a citizen shed off his fundamental right to life, the moment a policeman arrests him ? Can the right to life of a citizen be put in abeyance on his arrest? These questions touch the spinal cord of human rights' jurisprudence. The answer, indeed, has to be an emphatic "no". The precious right guaranteed by Article 21 of the constitution of India cannot be denied to convicts, undertrials. detenus and other prisoners in custody, except according to the procedure established by law by placing such reasonable restrictions as are permitted by law. " (emphasis supplied)The very fact that the respondents have arrived at the conclusion about the involvement of the jail guard in death of anil and, therefore, has initiated criminal proceedings against him apparently discloses the cause of death of Anil being that he was subjected to custodial torture and that would also justify the claim of the petitioner for compensation in this petition. "

(11.) THE Single Bench of Delhi High court in Smt. Geeta Vs. Lt. Governor -1999 cri. LJ. 1099, cited supra held in para 7 as under:

"in view of the above discussion I consider it to be an imminently fit case for grant of compensation to the petitioners. While granting compensation it must be kept in view that Sonu, a young man of 22 years of age, was picked up by the police even though there was no allegation of his involvement in any criminal activity. It is not the case of the respondents that when he was arrested he was having injuries on his person. No explanation has been rendered for fifty-one-juries which was found on his person as a result of which he died in police custody. It must also be taken into consideration that despite several judgments of the Supreme Court and this court, the State has not been able to prevent custodial deaths. Torture is still preferred to scientific techniques for the purposes of eliciting information from accused and witnesses. "

(12.) ON careful analysis of the facts and circumstances brought on record, what we find is that it is not disputed that the boy Sunil was picked up from the house of his grand mother and was brought to the police station and though actually he was arrested, no grounds of arrest were informed to him and instead doubtful entries have been made in the station diary to show that the boy had absconded from the police station. It would clearly reveal that Sunil was physically handicapped and could not have run away from the police station. It is relevant to note that though Shah Noorbi had lodged oral report with respondent no. 4, the same was not reduced into writing and no offence was registered against the boy Sunil. The station dairy entry at Sr. No. 19 recorded on 16-3-1996 would clearly show that Sunil was found missing from the police station during interrogation. Sunil was arrested without following the guidelines issued by the Hon'ble supreme Court in D. K. Basu' case and when a missing report has been lodged by PSI tayade on 25-3-1996 after ten days, it will have to be presumed that the respondents are responsible for causing disappearance of the boy and it is just possible that the boy must have been beaten by the police and that the boy must have died while he was in police custody and that his body has been disposed of. The circumstances of last seen coupled with the fact that the whereabouts of the body are not known to anybody, would show that the police personnel wanted to hush up the matter by registering a false missing report on 25-3-1996 after ten days of the incident. In such circumstances, we are of the considered opinion that the respondents are liable to pay compensation.

(13.) IN the result, we do find that the award to Rs. two lacs as compensation would not be either exorbitant or unreasonable and, therefore, the petition succeeds and the State is directed to pay the compensation of Rs. two lacs to the petitioner within a period of six weeks from today in default the said amount shall carry interest at the rate of 10% per annum from the date of petition till realisation. However, the respondents are required to hold necessary inquiry to fix up the responsibility to contribute the said compensation and shall take necessary steps in accordance with the provisions of law to recover the same from those persons. CASE NOTE :

A] Constitution of India, Arts 21, 226 – Police atrocities – A triabal girl of 13 years age falsely implicated by police in Criminal case by alleging that she is having links with naxalites – Court acquitted her for want of evidence – Detention found to be illegal – Victim entitled to compensation – Rs. 5 lakhs awarded as compensation.

B] Police Attrocities – There is lack of accountability of the Police force is also major factor in custodial violence – The Police are policed mostly by themselves and therefore the police personnel committing excesses on citizen are not going to be punished – They succeed to manage in getting away slot free – In present case the illegal detention of the minor girl cannot be said to have been done without facit consent of senior police officials – The state was expected to conduct fair enquiry and made offer before the court their willingness to punish all those officer who were connected with the investigation and prosecution – It is unfortunate that instead doing so the state tried to cover their misdeeds therefore they are bound to compensate petitioner.

C] Police Torture – Delay in filing petition – Held – Victim approaching Court after some assistance from organization (NGO) – State can not oppose the petition on ground of delay and latches – state is supposed to protect fundamental and human rights of a citizen.

Further we have no hesitation to add that the fact brought on record does go to show that the petitioner had no access to justice though she suffered flagrant violation of her fundamental rights under Articles 21 and 22 of the constitution of India and human rights till Non-governmental Organisation intervened in her matter and look her issue not only with the State Government but also sought assistance of the National and States Human Rights commissions.

(1.) THE petitioner has approached this Court seeking compensation from the respondents and officials in the police department by invoking its extraordinary jurisdiction under Articles 226 and 227 of the constitution of India to issue appropriate writ, order or direction for conducting an inquiry against the erring Police Officers and specifically against respondent no. 4-Shri A. B. Chavan, Police Officer, Arjuni (Mor) and Shri Suryavanshi, police Officer Chichgarh, Tq. Deori and others, including the State for her wrongful detention in police custody, false implication in serious offences, custodial torture and for violation of her fundamental and human rights including the protection for which the petitioner was entitled to under the Juvenile Justice act, 1986, Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Act, 2000 and the scheduled Castes and the Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, 1989. The petitioner further claims compensation for violation of her fundamental and human rights in the sum of Rs. 10,00,000/- with costs.

(2.) IT is the case of the petitioner that she is tribal belonging to caste Gond and resident of Arjuni (Mor) in Gondia District and that they come from a very poor family.

According to the petitioner, she was born on 15-4-1977 and was a minor and also juvenile at the time she was arrested, wrongfully detained and tortured in police custody and thereafter falsely implicated in three cases on serious charges including the TADA (P) Act, 1987.

(3.) THE case of the petitioner is that some time in the year 1990 while petitioner was studying in 5th standard and was hardly 13 years of age, P. S. O. A. B. Chavan (since deceased), who was at the relevant time attached to Police station Arjuni (Mor) visited the petitioner's house at 12 O'clock at mid-night along with other police constables and brutally assaulted the petitioner and her mother and took away the petitioner to the Police Station without there being any lady constable. At the Police Station, the petitioner was severely beaten thereafter she was dumped in a Police van and taken to the dense forest of Keshori at 1 a. m. and hanged to a tree by tying her both hands upwards and then was beaten by belt till the petitioner lost her consciousness. The petitioner regained consciousness and found that she was in hospital from where she was again taken to the Police station and illegally detained during which period she was tortured by police officers, who used to beat her with their boots and she was forced to take whatever meal supplied to her by spreading it on the floor and when she resisted such inhuman treatment, she had to bear beatings by kicks and other means for which the petitioner primarily holds P. S. O.-A. B. Chavan responsible along with other police officials. It is the case of the petitioner that though there were lady constables but they were helpless and could not do anything except for sympathizing with her. It is the case of the petitioner that the police merely on the basis of suspicion that the petitioner was working with Naxalites have wrongfully detained her and tortured her in police custody in order to extort information about the Naxalites.

(4.) THOUGH the petitioner repeatedly informed them even told them that she is not at all concerned with any Naxalites and that she is innocent, she was not released and continued to be tortured in cruel and inhuman manner in police custody.

(5.) IT is the case of the petitioner that from time to time she was moved from one police lock-up to another and was treated with utmost cruelty and inflicted acts insulting to woman in the police station. The petitioner was kept in lock-up at Police Stations Arjuni (Mor), Chichgarh and then Deori. Along with petitioner there were four other girls who were also treated with cruelty and tortured on the basis of similar allegations that they were associates of Naxalites. It is the case of the petitioner that as she was arrested and wrongfully detained by the police, no record of such arrest and detention was maintained in any of the Police Stations and the petitioner was illegally detained in lock-up for years together in violation of Articles 21 and 22 of the Constitution of India. It is the case of the petitioner that it is only in the year 1993, for the first time, the petitioner's arrest was brought on official record and she was implicated in three cases for having committed offences under various sections of the Indian Penal Code and TADA (P) Act and for the first time officially the petitioner's arrest was shown on 1-3-1993 and was produced before the Magistrate and came to be remanded to Police custody as well as judicial custody and ultimately landed in Central Jail.

(6.) IT is the case of the petitioner that in the year 1996 one Nongovernmental organisation i. e. Tejswi Adiwasi Mahila Mandal and at the instance of the National Women's Commission and Smt. Mohini Giri three cases of the petitioner came to be transferred before the Juvenile Court and she was released on bail. The petitioner has suffered torture in police custody which has left deep scars on her mind having undergone the life which was as if she was in hell in such a tender age which has spoiled not only valuable period of her childhood but even for future she lost all hopes for which the petitioner particularly blames respondent Nos. 4 and 5 and the officials of the State and, therefore, seeks high level enquiry so that they can be punished and she should be duly compensated for the atrocities committed on her by the officials of the state under colourable exercise of their powers.

(7.) THE petitioner has also highlighted the fact that police has arrested so many other girls like her and wrongfully detained them in custody on the suspicion that they were working for Naxalites and out of them, four girls who were with her, are missing and a petition seeking writ of habeas corpus has been filed before the Supreme Court and is pending though the petitioner has no further information about the fate of those girls. The petitioner, therefore, claims that this Court should direct the State to take action against the erring Police officers and prosecute them for the offences committed by them for wrongful arrest, detention, custodial torture of the petitioner and for false implicating her in serious cases and sending her to prison in spite of knowing the facts that the petitioner was innocent and suitably compensate her.

(8.) IN support of her petition the petitioner has annexed documents regarding her prosecution before the Juvenile Board, Bhandara in all the three cases which acquitted her for want of evidence.

(9.) IN response to the petition, the State has filed affidavit of Shri P. P. Shrivastava, Principal Secretary to the Government of Maharashtra, Home department (Special), Mantralaya, Mumbai and of one of the Police Officers i. e, respondent No. 5 Shri Suryavanshi. Insofar the State is concerned, preliminary issue has been raised that though the petitioner claims to have suffered arrest, illegal detention and custodial torture from the year 1990 and being implicated in false cases but she has filed the petition in the year 2004 i. e. almost after fourteen years and, therefore, the petition deserves to be dismissed merely on the ground of delay and laches, as no ground is made for entertaining this petition.

(10.) DURING the pendency of the petition we have already made clear by our order dated 16-12-2004 that such a plea is not available to the State in the facts and circumstances of the case, as petitioner's grievance relates to violation of her fundamental and human rights and so also being prosecuted in violation of the provisions of the Juvenile Justice Act in force at the relevant time and has suffered atrocities, being a tribal, for which even provisions of the Scheduled castes and Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, 1989 stands attracted. Further we have no hesitation to add that the fact brought on record does go to show that the petitioner had no access to justice though she suffered flagrant violation of her fundamental rights under Articles 21 and 22 of the constitution of India and human rights till Non-governmental Organisation intervened in her matter and look her issue not only with the State Government but also sought assistance of the National and States Human Rights commissions. It is now well settled that right to legal aid to such person is part of right to life and liberty as enshrined in Article 21 of the Constitution of the India. Therefore, it does not lie in the mouth of the State, who is supposed to protect the fundamental and human rights of a citizen to take ground of delay and laches for dismissing the petition.

(11.) IN the affidavit-in-reply filed on behalf of the State of Maharashtra an attempt has been made to demonstrate before us that the State has taken all the necessary steps by constituting a special team to conduct a detailed inquiry into the matter and the Special Team has investigated the record of the Police Station and also visited village Jambhali (Porla) where petitioner at the relevant time was residing, and recorded the statements of respectable persons residing in that village, concerned officials and police personnels, who had been posted at the respective police station during the period the petitioner claimed to have been illegally detained and tortured in the police custody. The inquiries have also
